Am so lad that you can get fresh fruit. We dont have too much variety in the store like you do with the road side markets and I remember how good the peaches etc were in the visits there., but soon the fall apples from our orchards will be ready, the Jonathan and delicious but have had good vegetables. Yesterday had cut up stew meat and when tender added some noodles, and in the serving bowl I cut up fresh parsley and put the meat and noodles on top so the parsley was crisp and chewy and green. And soon all kinds of squash will be ready and that is a good fall veg. to look forward to. Haven't been to Hiliarys for 2 wks as she has been out of town, so must get in touch with her, and her garden stuff.

Take care of yourself and much luck in your new job [at West Virginia University]. It must be a strain to start out on a new venture like that, or it is? With love, Mother

"The golden rod is yellow. the corn is turning brown, the trees in apple orchards, with fruit is bending down."

Dear Son. It seems as tho this month is not turning out as lovely as poems about Sept tho I can remember lots of Septs when it was a nice month, the first half hot, then the last half really fall like, and we still have a half a month to go.

When I was a little girl I always looked forward to school, usually had a new dress and always the first day of each month the teacher would have the top of the blackboard with color stencil. something seasonal for that month. And in September comming home from school the best smells comming from our house, picillili, catsup [or jelly and there was always the smell of fresh baked bread and we could have a slice of it with butter and brown sugar on it, so snack foods then.

An I remember one Sunday afternoon in Sept when Jessie and I went out to a farm to visit friends of theirs, and she and I went out in the orchard and ate peaches and pears. The folks (Jessies) had a buggy, two seated with a fringe on top) and I never remembered going out there again.

I was reading the other day how the aged remembered things so clearly about their early childhood and yet forget what was told yesterday. So memory is a wonderful thing, if we keep the good things in mind.

Your cards, leaves, and letter came yesterday and that card means a lot to me no Hallmark card can match it and it sets on an easel on the shelf I brought home from Gladys. This shelf is hanging on the wall over the telephone stand, and I have all sorts of little bric-a-brac on it. And I am glad that you have a sentimental side and enjoy natures beauty.

Dad used to bring home things he found on his walks, maybe a little bouquet of flowers or a rare weed for my fall bouquet and often a bird feather of some unusual bird and he would find [other] little objects. I used to say I never found anything and he would say,, "You go too fast and your head is up in the clouds" and now my head is in the gutter as I have to watch my step and I still find very few things.

At last we have had a big rain. It has been working up to it as have had it all around 2 1/2 in yesterday and in night before, but hasn't turned cool yet, tornado warnings for two nights in early evening and have had bad storms in other towns. I turn the TV off when it is storming and lightening, the lightening was bad last night, and in some towns it caused fires. But we know it can rain, it was all clear this morning.

My new neighbor down the hall brot over two slices of onion bread that is out of this world. I ate one slice with butter and the other toasted, tastes something like dill bread only it isn't made with cottage cheese. I hope to be able to make it some day but I haven't asked for the recipe yet, all let her bring it, I mean for a treat. I took some of mine over and I was proud of it. This onion bread is a light bread, not farm style.

Thurs Morn [9 October 1981]. Handwritten

Dear T& N." This is a pause that refreshes" to sit down and talk to you.
The girls left at 8 15 as Bernice's bus [to Goodland, Kansas] got in at 8:40 and then Zita & Charlotte drove her to station and then went home to K.K. Gayferd will go to KC this afternoon and they will go back to Mo. tomorrow and hope to go home to Calif. next week.

It was a wonderful Reunion just packed with fun, as we had added Christmas while they were here, no big deal but, we got useful little things all summer for it, so no pkgs to have to be mailed at Christmas.

We rested the day after they came and then went out on the town, Bernice looking for clothes she couldnt find and other shopping. Zita knows her way around now to different centers [in Topeka]. Betty, Bernices friend gave her $20.00 to take us to lunch as she didn't have us over this summer when we were visiting there. so we had lunch yesterday at a nice place and one today at a little place called the Cheese Pantry, and Tues afternoon was sprinkling all day and dark and Hiliary invited us down for tea. First we played an interesting game of checkers, use ordinary checkers but played in a different way, then at 5 we sat at table and had tea and cookies and zuchini bread with cream cheese filling which was so good. The girls think she is a smart cooky and interesting. A such a nice time on a dark day.

One evening we watched" Family Reunion" which was on 2 nights, a continuing of the night before. Bette Davis was wonderful in it? Hope you saw it. Then Tue "Callie and Son" and Wed Jacqueline Kennedy, all were three hours ling, so we were entertained all evening and was nice they happened to have 3 good ones in a wee, and if we had an early supper we had a little snack later in evening. We stayed up late, for 2 days Zita had a very lame back and she slept on floor which she said helped some and in between times when home I had her use the heating pad. The damp weather may have brot it on but she wanted to get out & do things.

Yesterday late afternoon Norma brot over half a cake and sat awhile & talked and then I got super in oven. Bernice sneaked over to store & brot 4 nice pork chops and I baked them and sweet pot and slices of butter nut squash in with the chops and let them bake slowly and boy were they good. I had simple meals. Made apple salad twice request) and had yellow delicious apples for that and Jonathan for the whole cooked kind with skins on, Bernice brought the large size tupper container packed full of chewy cookies, another can of pinwheel cookies. I had homemade bread part of time and they sure liked the toast. When I made toast from store bread they were so flabby.

And Zita washed dishes most of time [no wonder she had a lame back], dried them and put them away and put them in right place in cupboard, and so I didn't have that dish rack of dishes facing me (as I do when I am by myself). Charlotte's job was to set table and go to store and empty trash. I wouldnt let Bernice work as she needed more rest. That bus trip is a long one and our gadding around took energy. I felt fine all the time and was on the ball, some nights not good, but excitement and some one around kept me stimulated. So today I hope there is a letter from you as am alone and miss the girls. But have defrosted and have the refrig. in a nice shape, very few leftovers and has space to stock up anytime.

Some of the trees are coloring and they show up well and Oct is half gone and now have the trees to watch coloring. Love, Mother

[November 1981] Handwritten. In response to a Topeka newspaper article entitled, "A Grim Month.". Handwritten. mh

I dont agree with this article, the Nov is a grim month. To me it is a lovely fall month, Indian Summer, Thanksgiving to look forward to, and air so fresh and crisp, geese flying over, hunting season, and fall harvest, things such as apples, squash, sweet potatoes and cranberries, and the Hahn family Special Day Thanksgivings and Grandma Hahn's specialty was cranberry sauce & the jellied kind, and baked apples. Sometimes a light snow in Nov, had a baby boy [me, Tommy] arrive and that Thanksgiving I remember well as baby too little to take out so grandma T[orgeson] said they would come to our house. We hadnt started the Hahn Thanksgiving [tradition] yet so Gladys, Bernice, Tom T[aggart] and grandma T and grandpa [Torgeson] came to our house. Grandma made pie and other things and I baked a large hen, dressing with help as I wasnt too strong yet, and the when all the kids were around 8 & 10 yrs we started going to Hahn families.

And I think of the history of First Thanksgiving and now mine has changed and a whole new set up, but a family set up anyway but not my real family, times change.

5 November 1981

Am remembering 55 yrs ago on Nov 5. and you have brought me much happiness through the years. And I love you Mother

Monday Afternoon [December 1981] Handwritten.

Dear Tom. How did you know this would be a Blue Monday as far as weather is concerned, raining when got up, a slow kind and very dark. But I have been busy with many little chores.

Have been reading all the interesting little clippings and while Thanksgiving has just passed and it is such a good holiday, lots of tradition and family gatherings. And turkeys brought to my mind while reading about them of one fall before Thanksgiving we were up to Maes, you and Dad and I, and we passed turkey places and you said you would like to have a live turkey to feed and for your own, so while there in Junction City, Dad went to a turkey store to look for a small turkey and found a cull, a healthy bird but not ones idea of one for Thanksgiving dinner and he bought it, and found a large carton and out it in the back and didn't tell you until we got in the car. You had to have it with you in the back seat and you patted it all the way home. Dad made a little pen back of garage and you fed it and it filled out in no time, but it seems like you had no objection to us killing it when got cold weather. Do you remember that?

Saturday at 6:30 I went with Jenays family to an advent party for young folks. They have had one for 2 years, so I though there would be some older folks there only one elderly couple, the rest were parents of young children and a few 60 year olds. They had all kinds of stuff for the children to so for a tree in basement and other places, so some made foam ornaments, some string pop corn and cranberries, and the little ones decorated cookies. The mothers each too a pan of baked cookies.

We have a house or Reach out Place for retarded young folks in teens & older and they go to our churc services with a helper and quite a few of them were there. All but two were men folks, around 20s and some one came over and asked if one of us would help a 20 yr old retarded blind girl decorate cookies, so I volunteered and we sat in low chairs at a long table and I had to guide her hand with a flat knife and she would feel along to see if the frosting was all over. I cant think of eating those cookies the little folks had and licking off the knife and I then left her and went to a table where adults were teaching a deal, so tried one, a sq mirror glass and you trace a design. They had cards to use and put stuff on, etc and take off the paper after 5 min and have a frosted design on that mirror glass, and I found Ashley, my little one, and gave it to her and she was thrilled and on the way home she said, "Grandma, I have the glass picture all wrapped up in my bag so it won't break."

There were pans or large kettles of pop corn to eat and cocoa any time they wanted it. At the place where I did the picture one of ministers teen age boys, he has 3, was helping folks get started on the glass deal. He helped me, didn't have much to say but was nice and I was surprised to see so many young boys there - the food attracted them also and then when it was over we went upstairs in church part and sang carols, then downstairs again and all helped clear up the mess. Jenay and Gary work with the young children. Some hoe I was impressed and touched by it all. And the minister asked if they would like to have the retarded take the cookies and they boxed them up and gave them.

Tried to think of the name of the home for the retarded. Its called "Sheltered Living" Doris Martins son lives in one of these houses. He goes home once or twice a week for supper and sometimes 2 or 3 others come too with him.

I have laughed over the clipping "Making Thanksgiving Memories" about the burning rags and turkey manure, etc and foul smells and the lovely smells of camelias. Was really a different article, not the Grandma Moses kind.

Tues Morn. Snow on tops of cars and a very fine snow now. Nebr. had a big one yesterday. We are not predicted for one but one never can tell.

I try to accept what is best for others and did the same in you case, having to change dates [about my coming to Kansas, apparently. Tom] Maybe you will be more relaxed by the new date while you are here a more time also.

A good program on PBS channel last night. on life of Bing Crosby from a baby to his death and his career. He sang all the songs and they were good ones. 2 1/2 hours of it. With love, Mother

Sat Morning [December 1981] Handwritten.

Dear T & N. Tis a beautiful winter morn, the sky such a deep blue now, the winter look, and sun sets at 5 p.m. I look at every evening when its clear.

Went to church tea Wed. It was for all women at church, but only 25 or so there and such a beautiful program, the Madrigal Singers group from Topeka High School gave a program, only one black girl there in program and she has won a scholarship to Juilliard Music College, and after program we all sang carols and then to basement where they had the tea, and tables decorated so pretty and the tea table so attractive, all kinds of handmade cookies and little nut bread, banana bread sandwiches and we sat at tables and visited, and we all had a feeling of Christmas and "Good Will."

Have had no snow, only a light wet one last week. but didnt stay on ground, but places like Ariz & Calif got some, unusual, and Nebraska a lot and missed most of Kans. Had an accumulation in Goodland.

There was a gorgeous sunset last night and tonight am going to get my coat on and go to the corner where I can see it sink down low. Here I can see it go behind the store, and the one last night passed through a cloud and was something have never seen before. And I think of all of you at this time and do so during the day. At sunset time I sit on the cedar chest [in the bedroom] and watch.

I remember how Mae [sister] did the last 2 yrs she was here [alive]. She had a candle on at 4 o'clock during winter months and sat and thought of we sisters. It is a time of evening that is sort of a lonely time for women [and men?] who live alone. The sun starts going down at 4:45 and by 5 has gone down.

Chelsey is quite a Book worm. She reads, and so the little one and the cat & sat on divan and talked. She is a chatterbox. This is the first time the cat has gotten up beside us.

Do you remember Mrs. McHenry that lived by Grandma Hahns? She is still going at 90 and lives in a house, a different one and down a ways from her home, [on West 17th]. this one on Polk Street. She goes to my church. At a meeting she asked if anyone would like a lap pad. Folks give her material, yarn sn craps to make them [Remainder of letter missing]

First and it came in like a lamb [1 March 1982]. s

Dear T & N. A beautiful day and I took a walk this afternoon.

Last night a gorgeous sunset. I was sitting in L room and a light so very bright shone thru and thought must have left the hall light and bathroom lights on so went to see and there was the sun getting ready to set so I sat on the stool and watched it sink behind the store bldgs it takes about 15 min and was so lovely and I sat and thought of all my sisters, parents and you and felt a little lonely. and after the sun sank there was a bright red sky where the moon [sun] had been. I wonder if many people take time to watch a sunset like that.

Watched [Archie] Bunker. was interesting to have Gloria and little Joe there. and if they stay it may turn out to be quite interesting. Nice you have a second TV upstairs.

On this March front picture in my engagement pad is the same picture as last years book, a man plowing a field with 2 horses and black birds flying around.

An am wondering how the canal trip turned out and if Marti and Chris came, and thought about you I I, Nathalie, and the rest of us at that very cold windy night at a place and you made chili etc. for the crowd.. Bernice called late afternoon yesterday (Sun) pleasant weather there.

Thank you for the article. Alexandria Historical Soc, how proud I am of you son, Love, Mother

Mon Morn [22 March 1982] s

Dear T & N. Last night out to Beckys, was a fun one. She was only going to have Ricks family and I and then decided to have Corby Srs also, as they dont get out much, and she didnt give them much notice, asked them in morning before they went out to eat there in dining room so told them not to eat too much there.

The table had a money tree in center, and 85 dimes on it and that was for me. [Her birth date was 23 March 1897.] And the dinner so good, baked chicken breasts, baked potatoes, brocolli cooked in steamer and no seasoning on it was just good natural then a large bowl of cut up (Texas) oranges, grape fruit, and bananas and for dessert Angel food cake only a light glaze and small cups ice cream, was a good diet meal for any one. [Becky] and Harry Corby stayed winters in South Texas, hence the Texas citrus fruit.]

Went to basement to see the train collection and other and you can hardly walk thru, has small pinball machines (old) etc all sort of things on that order. Rick said that if anyone broke in his Dad wouldn't know what was taken, and they have so many things, several antique grandfather clocks. but enough room [and] they look nice in dining room, living room, and even in breakfast room, to each his own.

Meagan [daughter of Rick's second wife, Debby] is such a sweet little girl and real handy. She loves every body and she & her mother are a good addition to the family. Debbie is a down to earth person and they are all looking forward to the May baby. We had quit the good session trying to get names for baby.

Am going out to lunch today, two ladies are taking me, they are sisters and live together and one works part time in mornings, the other moved here from Texas both widows and in their 70s. I think a nice arrangement but the one that owns the house is impatient with the other who is lame from a broken hip 3 years ago, but they really do well together sharing expenses. they had to have a new stove and bought it together.

The Corbys noticed my glasses and they thought they looked so nice and gave me a new book. All wished you were there.

So tomorrow is my real birthday. I have kept so quiet about it and havent mentioned birthday but seems as tho folks have written it down as have been getting cards and invitations out and as you said Tom maybe the idea of it being 85 years. I dont want to think about a 90th one. [She would have been surprised had someone told her that she would have a 100th one.] B pkg arrived and Thank You.

Nice of you to send a note to Mrs. Diehl, Tom, as you too are in her past and she thinks of you.. She was a good neighbor . . .[Remainder of letter missing]

Thurs Morn [March 1982]. s/mt

Dear T & N. Well winter is back again, really never has been good, as has been chilly except a day of two in between, and yesterday snow and rain mixed and this morn the same, doesnt stay on ground, on TV is shown the bad snows in the East.

Cozy inside and am making raisin bread, and dont know how my company will feel like coming. [sister] Bernice supposed to come tomorrow Zita and Fran [nephew and wife] Sunday for dinner.

Have an accommodating postman a new one, I seldom see who we have, but on my birthday week we got acquainted as he knew from amount of mail cars and pkgs, it was my birthday. Also one of gals upstairs had one last week and he had one also. Yesterday I went out to see if mail had come and he was there and I asked the zip of a letter and he told me so I got the letter and put a stamp on it and he waited for it. My letter wasnt sealed and he said, "No problem, I will lick it shut."

The early flowers have been starting to bloom, and here it is snowing heavier and big flakes but melting as it hits the ground.

I have finished reading "The Lord God Made them all" Harriots last book, quite interesting, and now have read them all, and still wouldnt like a vets life. I saw quite a bit of animal life when I was young. When I was young one time coming home from school I saw a calf half born, our side walk from school was across the road and there was where the barn was, and the cow. [I don't know whether or not it was the Torgeson's barn.] And I woudnt eat oatmeal for a long time as I didnt want to have milk on anything. Mother never noticed that I didnt with so many kids around the table, how could she, she didnt eat breakfast wit us. Then I got over that and another time , was evening, and Dad came in with arms &hands covered with blood, and he told mother he had to help deliver the calf. She didnt see me there and again I went without milk on things, so I wouldnt make a good farmers wife. The when little chickens hatched during a snow storm, she would bring them in to cookstove oven, and the feathers sure did smell as they were wet.

The flakes are coming down big and fluffy now. so the "Old woman is picking [the feathers of her] her geese." and is beginning to stay on ground and is so pretty, and grass is green. Some how it seems like Sat. and am glad it isnt. Now I have never seen flakes this large, thought I had seen everything in way of storms, but this is something. With love, Mother The little wt spell is over, lasted an hour and snow melted but still cloudy.

Mon Morn [March 1982] Handwritten. s/mwh

Sent Nathalie a letter yesterday but have been thinking about things this morn as I work around the kitchen. Aunt Myrtle [Walter's sister] used to have a tablet on kitchen table and she would jot down things to write to Irma, and she (Irma) used to tell us those letters meant so much to her when she was so far from home, and in those days telephone long distance calls were only for sickness, death calls, not for chatting. And neighbor Mary upstairs writes a weekly letter to her daughter in Calif of bits and pieces, clippings etc, not much news about what or where she has been during the week as sometimes she doesnt get out all week. She is crippled, walks with cane. She is one who took me out in country last week when we went for groceries, and she only comes downstairs to see us when we have a coffee but she is a smart person and has traveled and reads a lot, so like to be with her. Well yesterday I was over to store and just got a small sack of groceries, but had the wrong purse so didnt have enough [money] for groceries, so left the sack of them on counter and told them I would be right back, when I got back they weren't there. they couldnt have time to wait on more than one person, so had to do shopping over, but not hard when only four items to get. Am trying not to carry a heavy bag at a time, so am wondering if that person will bring the groceries back, a pkg of chicken in it.

They have a notice that an all time butcher will be there and to ask for different cuts of meat. I got a pkg of chicken wings as that is my favorite piece of chicken and the big part of it was cut with a big part of rest of chicken on the big bone of wing. Chicken wings have been same price as other parts, so I usually get whole chicken. So am having lima beans green and small pieces of carrots cooked in steamer, the chicken in oven along with a piece of peach cobbler, the cobbler will be for 3 meals warmed up in little oven. I dont need any lectures on diets for the aging or nutrition as I work on it most of the time. I dont live on snacks, it takes time but I like doing it.

I am seeing your yard this beautiful morn, the little flowering trees and the tulips etc. There is one thing I forget is names, and have to think a long time. but memories are very clear in my mind., like the other night over to Jenays. They wanted me to look at the new swings, etc they got for the kids, they had swing for real little ones and now they are older, to they have bars, swings, etc, bright painted ones, and I remembered the heavy poles and substantial swings Dad [Walter] put up for you and sand box, a large one, all was work to do, the kind now takes work to put up but thats all, and I can see the swings that we had at my home [in White City, Kansas] two, in a big tree, by the cellar and what fun for two on a swing board pumping it together and climbing up in that tree also, I didn't climb trees like Kate [sister] did and the other neighbor kids. . . [Remainder of the letter is missing]

Sat Afternoon [May 1982] Handwritten. s

Dear Tom: A letter from you today and I like the red ink print also. This article in mornings paper made me think of the good times down on the farm with Beckmans and our kids. [Obituary of Alonzo "Lonnie: Hiefner died at 89, of Admire, Kansas] I didn't realize he ["Lonnie" Hiefner] was that much older than I and were married 6 years longer than Dad & I. The first time I got to meet him and Hazel [Hiefner], and another couple was at the Capitol [the State Capitol Building at Topeka, apparently] the Lesh's, at some public affair. Dad [Walter] worked with these two men [at the Chevrolet Garage in Topeka, I believe] and had met their wives and they were sure curious about me, as he had told them how wonderful I was etc, and they sure gave me a looking over at that meeting, and told me later, that I wasnt as wonderful as he told them. And from the clipping the had a lot of grand and great grandchildren.

Bernice just called me and said [niece] Dorothy left [from Goodland, Kansas to probably Port Angeles Beloit, Kansas]. She was going to stay all day but the weather forecast was for rain so decided to leave. Bernice had bought extra groceries etc expecting her to be there for 2 breakfasts and a whole day of meals. And I was busting to know if she told Bernice something she told me, so we had a laugh out of that. She has a "Boy Friend" she met at trailer park in Ariz 2 or 3 yrs ago, and is crazy about him and all she talked about after we got our family talked over and pictures to show etc etc. I was surprised she was so frank about the relationship. She said they ate most of their meals together. He is a Bohemian [dairy farmer in Wisconsin] and has 9 children and some grand kids, is 65 yrs old and she is 71 yrs. She has written about him in her yearly letters [portion of letter omitted as too personal]. [Tony died tragically a few years ago by being run over while he was crossing a road to get his mail in Wisconsin.]

Her [Dorothy's] son Gene lives at Mesa and is married, no children. He is a Prof of Science and something else, is a smart fellow.They dont live as close as city folks do. It must be beautiful therel looking out on the Bay. [Gene died in his 50s in Oahu, Hawaii. Dorothy's home is indeed in a beautiful location on looking out over the Strait of Juan de Fuca with Victoria Island in the back ground and with the Olympic Mountains behind her. She still lives there at age 95.]

Today is "May Day" and when you were young all the kids went around the neigborhood and hung may baskets on the door knob. I remember one time I forgot to make the baskets for you and you came tearing in the house saying the kids were taking theirs, so sent you up to attic for the wall paper book and I made cornucopias and pinned them together, and we had spirea & lilacs in bloom so filled them wit those flowers/ Do you remember doing that? It was a pretty custom as old folks as well as others enjoyed it. But only after I was left alone at 1120 High [after my father died in 1966] did they come only 2 or 3 yrs after that. And yesterday I was reminded of May baskets as went to Book Club and one of the guests brot a bouquet of deep purple violets from her yard, they were so pretty. I had made cinnamon rolls the day before so I took 2 of them to the hostess because she lives alone in an apt. I put them in corner of cabinet and told her not to say anything about them. And she called this morn and said she had one for supper and one for breakfast. She doesnt bake bread stuff. Dorothy said I hadnt lost my touch with Rolls & cinnamon ones. Se makes bread, and makes rye which I have never done. She copied some bread recipes.

Dorothy brought 4 grapefruit and I ate 1/2 of one, and so sour I couldnt eat any more, too much acid, the Texas oranges [grapefruit] are the kind you can eat like apples the ruby red kind. So I have taken the other three to the neighbors, left two at the doors and at one door she was home and said, "What do you want to take back home? I said, Didnt know I was getting anything." She said she had pie, or had cooked chicken, a piece of pie or a piece of chicken and so I will have that for my supper. She said "That was custom in their house in anyone brought something you should give something back." I dont like that way of doing.

Dorothy [Waters, daughter of Mae (Torgeson) Christensen, Florence's sister] stopped in Jct City [where Mae lived before her death in 1972] on way here and the yard looked so run down, she had been in house before one time and they had done some remodeling which was nice. . . [Personal data not included]

Sunday Afternoon Have been to church, was our Fellowship Sunday and a covered dish affair and I put some money in a dish for the coffee, napkins, etc, this is my 3rd time to do this and they have so much food, so I dont have to fix a dish and lug it over, always take my plate, fork, spoon & napkin. Today 4 students from Baker [University at Baldwin, Kansas. This was a Methodist institution.] were our guests and gave a short talk. I was way in back and hard to catch all of it, and they were guests to te dinner. so when dinner over I went over to their table and asked about Jim Chub [He was a well know inspiration speaker back in the 1940s.], for you, the boys didnt know him but one of the girls did. She said she just loved him. he was everyones friend, he passed away a year ago.

Their enrollment [tuition] cost a year if I got it straight was 3,000. Georgine took me to church and leaves after church as she doesn't like covered dish dinners. and I come back with Gary & Jenay [Georgine's daughter and husband].

So after I got home took a walk and such a calm lush spring day half hazy so was pleasant but my legs havent been used to walks and could [not] go very far. [After all, she was 85.]

Hope you had a nice day too, does Dovey ever go, outside the yard. [Our cat Dovey never went outside the yard.] With love, Mother [Portion missing] And about the article in "Camping" you mentioned about "Watching the Sunset is a ritual," makes me think of this past Feb. the sunsets were so gorgeous. I think maybe I have written about them, the winter sunsets and the bathroom was all aglow like lights were on. And it took about 20 minutes to go down and that was sort of a ritual for me. I sat and thought of you and my sisters, a special time I and I also thought about Mae for 2 yrs or more in winter she had a candle lighted about 4 pm and sat and thought about us.

Seems as tho you are busy most of days going on trips and visiting folks or they coming to see you, so you are having a busy summer. The quilt card so interesting, think of making blocks, a church, a store etc. This was on Castine [Maine] trip and I would love to have been on that trip and your letters so interesting about it.

Must get on ball and make room in closet for Avis comes Fri. With love Mother

[First part of letter missing] You sent a clipping about picnics in the past. When I was young and even grown up at home picnics were rare, but I do remember 2 or 3 that were outstanding and where and when we went has lost me, but it was in my teens and maybe we walked to a place, but boys and girls half date thing and mother made potato chips for me to take. The kind we get now werent on the market. She had a maker like a cabbage shredder and you would shred the potato and it would come out like waffles [with] the holes in it and they were not as thin as potato chips are now, buy t we thot they were great. They had to be in [a] deep frying kettle and such a hot job and mother put them in a sack size of pillow slip (flour sack) imagine making that many. they were a novelty among my gang. Mother was always ahead f the time in doing things. And I thought when I was first married I had to bake beans like she did, several hours, and I would take them to the Hahn picnics, and then I got on to the canned beans and liked them better than the other way. Dad used to come home on the picnic day to a hot kitchen and say "Why do you decide on baking beans when there are easier things to take," and then I got on to how to quick bake the store kind. Marie would volunteer to take a jar of pickles for her dish, she was a young bride to, but not used to seeing her Mother sweat over a cook stove like my mother did, and my friends used to liked to eat at our house.

Mon Morn Temp at 6.30 60, and humidity 90, so while cool is harder to breathe. I took a walk and met one neighbor and we walked together so that slowed me down and kept me from walking faster which I shouldnt do. I went out while clothes were in dryer. So now the work is done and still lots of morning left, and I have leftovers from yesterday so lunch will be a breeze to fix.

Tell me all about your visit with Betsy. With love, Mother

Saturday Afternoon [September 1982] Handwritten. mwh

Dear Tom Your letter came today and has opened a whole new trend of thinking. about China painting of your friend [Jerry Smith, of Shepherdstown, West Virginia]. In later years it has almost become a lost art. In my younger days it was quite the thing. I have only one hand painted dish, a small plate and has the date 1919 given to me as a shower (wedding gift by a friend and initials are on it but I cant remember who it was). I have two other hand painted dishes that are pretty also. A whole, set done by a person for their Anniversary would be really something special. The dishes painted for Tom and Nat Hahn by Jerry Smith was a tea set that had Chesapeake and Ohio Canal scenes from the books on the canal that Tom had written. The set was donated to the Charlestown West Virginia Museum when the Hahn's left West Virginia about 1999]

And the article about tuna was also informative, I have wondered about what the difference was in dark or white. I think the dark has more flavor for casseroles but have always been hesitant about getting a brand havent known. Sometimes in different parts of the country they carry brands we dont get here. [Sister] Mae used to use oil and for the seasoning and those were the days when we werent so concerned about fats, I drained it off, and now folks wash it off or get water pack. I always get Chicken of Sea, Star Kist or Bumble Bee, the latter has only been around here in later years.

What did you think of the General Foods lettere? I thought it was interesting and to think that Postum, Post Toasties and Shredded Wheat [remainder of letter missing].

Have just had Sunday dinner not to much to it made meat loaves yesterday individual ones and put in little potatos, so heated those up, today and the steamer had a few pieces of zuchini and 3 buds of brocolli, apple sauce, and I had the end of table looking nice with a place mat and a change of dishes. Guess your article on dishes made me think, and I didnt want a plate from any of the 3 sets of dishes I have so I got out one from Aunt Bertha gave me a very old one called "The Indian Tree," has a sprongly[?] tree of blossoms, and little bunches of fruits and blossoms around the rim of plate, it isnt a thin China. Do you remember Aunt Bertha. She was a widow and lived in K.C. and kept house for an old couple, and the year we lived in K.C. [1928?] when you were 2 yrs she would come see me on her day off and would bring little tidbits of fancy nuts, like cashews etc which were unusual for ordinary folks in those days. and other bits of other food wrap[ped] in little bundles and just enough for me. And then after she quit working and we were back in Topeka she came to visit all we Hahns. She was grandpa Hahns, I think oldest sister. we girls called her Aunt Bert, her husband had been dead a good many years before we got [married] into the family and her request was she wanted to be buried here by Grandpa H. and I cant remember if she went after he did. Of course when she lived in KC. she had Uncle Gus and Aunt Nellie etc to visit with. She had young ideas and didnt dress like an old lady. the way old ladies dressed then. So she gave e the India Tree plate and I treasured it and much of the time it is on the Hutch and she gave me the metal tray I set the toaster on all the time and I sat a long time looking at it and thinking about the Past, that is an old ladies privilege.

And also Sunday dinners when Dad & I were alone, on Sunday a Special lunch cloth was used and the good dishes, which were pretty. They were a China with a gold rim narrow and a small black line around the gold. There is a story about those dishes also but you have had enough of that subject [Not!]. I guess your letter yesterday about the friends hand painted China triggered me off.

Was cooler this morn and quite pleasant in house with fans going. Charlotte called she was at Zitas over Sat & Sun. The men went fishing all day. They have sold [their] trailer park [in Missouri] and will get deal all settled Sept 1st then go home, has been a long drag.

Dear T&N Yesterday had Jenay for lunch then had her take me over to see Avis Shuart as was her 95th birthday. Jenay left us to visit and went on errands until time to bring me home. I had made sugar cookies the day before, covered a coffee can with con6tact [paper] and had a small jar of the garlic pickles for her, she has had them before and loves them, also a very small jar of jam. She often skips the evening meal and takes 2 slices of bread from noon meal and makes a jelly sandwich for supper.

She was always a neat person in dress and neat room, but she has so much furniture in room now hardly enough space to walk in, and dresses, piled up boxes on top with letters and clippings and photos of her family on top of tables etc. and the room was so warm and stuffy I felt faint. I had to look at old photos, etc and sometimes she cried and I thot I didnt want to live so long [Florence lived to be over 100 years old] and lose my identity but we have no choice so I thought about the many happy times in her home etc, and when we got home there was your letter with the article "Do the Dead Sing" and I cried and when all was over I felt alright. But old old age is pathetic at times. And I feel good about Georgia as your letter today about her. and am glad that you have been kind to her. I didnt get to say goodbye to her as she was gone when I came back from the church meeting. Please address enclosed for Nellie. I didnt know her last name. [Georgia Summers was our long-time cleaning lady. Nellie Washington was her sister.]

I called Mrs Diehl [neighbor from the old High Street neighborhood] after came home to see if she could come for lunch but her sister from Calif was here and its hard to have a 3 way conversation when one is an outsider and so we decided when the sister went home we would get together. She said she had such a good letter from you and I told her I read a good one Walter [her son] sent you. and we said we had good kids even if they did fight a lot when little.

Sat morn A still morn, last night the sky was so red for a long time. but sun hadnt been out, and a new moon was up there. So hope this is going to be a nice quiet day. November is going so fast.

My old neighbor Martha Hawks has gone to Pa, Everett and I have been trying to get hers since have come home, and couldnt so finally called her son here and he said she had gone, so got a card this week. She had been to Johnstown [Pennsylvania] and was snow there. She is leaving Nov 20 (today) out of D.C.

Sunday Evening [January 1983]. Handwritten

Dear Son. Such a satisfying talk with you as have been anxious how things were going there. I guess all you need to do is tell Dovey [cat] and she knows when things aren't right.

I didn't tell you my dream or sort of a nightmare I had last night. it was rather upsetting and kept me awake until morn woke up at 12 [that night]. Seems like Ed Hahn called and said they would all be here later as they had sold out and going to locate some other state. Well Dad and I wanted them to come (only 2nd time have ever dreamed of your Dad, finally they all came. the 3 girls, Jean, Barbara & Patty still young, and Marie and Ed and then dream seemed to taper off before before got to talk to them. Ed & Marie were young also. So I felt sad and laid awake and got up and walked around the apt then at 5 dropped on to sleep and woke up at 8.00.

So Georgine [friend] came after me to go to church [University Methodist Church] as Jenays [daughter and family] to early to get their kinds in SS. I dont fix a dish anymore to take as they have so much food so put something, money, in a dish on table that they use for coffee, etc. And am glad not to have to carry a casserole and lug it around. They have 4 men & women in the kitchen to take care of dishes brot in, salads in fridge and hot things to keep warm. And when church is over we go to lower floor basement and casseroles are lined up on table. can go back for seconds, then the table is filled with the desserts.

There are quite a number of handicap young folks that come to church and they sure eat hearty, there home is back of our church (Sheltered "Living" it is called). I happened to be standing by one of the fellows and he wanted me tom eet his friends, so I went with him and met them, everyone seem to be kind to them. Except a few frown upon having them and that isnt the spirit a church member should have.

I think about Dovey and what a remarkable cat she is, but you have treated her like a child and she responds, but they dont all do that.

I ate something with some kind of spice in it that doesnt do me any good. I am not a highly season cook, and it sends me trotting when have eaten something that is, so have some hard toast with milk and butter in it for supper and cottage cheese.

Yes, the young folk some times think bringing a child into the world is a bowl of cherries. They can make make plans, but they dont turn out so easy, not these days . . . Recd the clipping from ??? paper, anyway it has the article The Nature" in it, and the writer tells about the days after Christmas. the clutter, and mentions Grandma's Sewing table bought from Larkins. She mentioned it twice in the article, and I know about Larkins, it was a company that sold house hold articles . . .

And now am remembering the July 4ths of the past when a little girl, all we sisters were given a nickel for a package of firecrackers, and the first thing on that morn we would get up and shoot them first thing. Mother would be so busy all morning over a hot stove coking a big dinner and we always had new peas, beans, potatoes from our garden and fried chicken. In the evening some of the folks that had money would shoot off a few sky rockets and we would sit on te porch and watch from a distance, the drug store was the only place that sold them. In the morning we would take the little wagon across the street to the ice house and get ice for ice cream. We would go in the ice house and it was so cool as the ice was packed in saw dust, this was river ice and we were not not to eat it as it was germy, and one of us would sit on the freezer to hold it down and what a good taste to lick the paddle after the ice cream was frozen.

One holiday [older sister] Mae and Bob drove down and Bob brought a freezer of manufactured ice cream and we ate all we could hold for dinner and he said in afternoon we had to finish up what was in the freezer as he had to take it back. Well that afternoon it turned quite chilly and we were not in the mood for more ice cream and there was no freezer of refrigerator like we have now to keep it frozen so we had our fill that day of ice ream.

I have thought so much about your Dad Tom also today as he was always so fond of Hahn picnics and last night the girls were talking about the picnics that we would have when Dad would have a fish fry.

Afternoon. [4 July] Handwritten [S] Have made nice big crusty rolls to take to Jenays, have never taken them there before, the house smells so good and was hot baking them but well worth it not any hotter than baked beans or some other over dish.

The morning walk was so hot and I miss the freshness of the morning but am getting the exercise the same but my legs lag more.

Forgot almost that Sam was there. I dont know who asked him probably Alan after all he is his father. Sam Lamantia, niece Barbara Hahn's former husband] looks older and has a mustache which looks pretty good on him. He looks more Italian.

Day after Fourth. Was a nice quiet time at Jenays. They have a small family Garys father and mother and his brother and wife and Jenays mother and me. Gary had the grill going and fixed beef short ribs and chicken and did a fine job of it, their eyes bugged when they saw the container of fluffy rolls, every one liked them. We ate inside as so hot out and then Gary showed slides of their trip to Calif and then the next door neighbors called and has us over there for a few fireworks on their patio, and after fireworks the gal brought out brownies and Jenays folks had made icecream and took it over there and it got pleasant outside on the patio and was a nice homey gathering and quiet and safe. The neighbors have two little ones younger than Jenays and they were so cute and each had little patio chairs to sit on. This is a new neighborhood where there are all new homes not pretentious just ordinary family places and all have a small garden, and I felt like a great grandma with these young folks just starting out in life. Garys folks went home at 9.30 and Jenay urged me to stay longer and her mother would bring me home. His folks had to get up early as he goes to work early and the mother is a day care, rakes care of several kids as the mothers work and so I stayed an hour longer and we had a quiet little talk and the little ones played around. The neighbor put her little one to bed but the children were very good.

Mr. Findlay apartment manager] came and put a new detector and the problem in kitchen was in the switch in the light bulb alright. [Clear as mud] She he has gone and then that loittle problem has been solved.. Sometimes those things seem so big to me and the hassel of waiting etc but usually he is quite prompt and another nice thing happened, a letter from you and how interesting the little trees are bearing fruits. You will also enjoy the rhubarb plant. I usually buy one mess of it in spring, and it is always so expensive, but a little goes a long ways as is tart.

How fortunate that you have had so much good fish this summer. And hope you will have a good vacation trip with your friends. This article about cherries, for 2 yrs the cherry pie filling has been so expensive. We used to get it a lot for desserts before then, and now hope they jar loose, but one news mention they would hoard them to keep prices up, will wait and see.

I wonder if you remember on our trip to Wisconsin [perhaps 1940?] and back of the cabins were those large dark cherries, an orchard of them. and the cabin manager told us to eat and use all we wanted as the crop was insured, a hail hit them and damaged some, so they (owners) werent allowed allowed to sell any and collect insurance to, so we ate them and was on the end of trip before coming home so we filled up the car refrigerator box with ice and cherries and had them along the trip and some when we got home, They were like bing cherries, maybe they were them. [My Grandma Mattie Hahn also went with us, the only time I remember her going .]

Thurs Morn (cool)

This letter written hurriedly yesterday as I was full of news and just dashed off this letter, yours typed so neatly. Too bad I never took typing. For 4 mo my typewriter has been sitting in case on floor as the table has 3 plants of my neighbor who lives upstairs. She has been if Calif, so I had watered and cared for them. She ends her rent checks for me to drop in the box here. but think she will be home this week. . . .[portion missing] at 11.30. I had gotten up early and got a casserole dish ready to put in little electric oven in case Mr. F. came to work on the lights and was glad I had that all done & dishes washed when the company came. [Don't know who.] So as soon as they left out it in over then went on walk and there was a casserole of a large stuffed pepper, cut in halves and I filled it with ground beef mixture, rice with grated onion, celery bits, chicken soup over it all. Recipe calls for tomato sauce, but that doesnt always set [well] with me. tomato sauce and meat, so have enough for 3 more heat up meals.

Mon Morn [November 1982] Handwritten

Dear T & N Have just made up a jar of pickles. I seldom eat any but company likes them.

Watched the movie clear through last night and thot about being up in TV room with you in evenings and expected you to come in with an apple or crackers. so had to cut up my own and eat alone. And an odd thing happened, when all the gun battle and gun smoke going on my eyes smarted and nose ran, and an allergy seemed to have started up all at once, and kept up, but after went to bed was gone. Figure that one out.

Over to store they have a coffee urn going 7 to 8 am coffee free but doughnuts you buy if you want one, and yesterday I saw a man walking by carrying a cup of coffee and a donut on a paper napkin. Whether he was drinking it on way home or taking it to his wife who was still in bed??

And I sometimes watch a program cant recall name now but they discuss movies, and one was two men arguing about an electric blanket, one for and against and such funny arguments on each side.

Yesterday such a quiet day around here but a nice one for me, as did all sorts of little things, a good over dinner and enough for today, read, had a nap, and called Avis Shuart. I get so weary sometimes when she calls as she is so slow and have to help her fill in what she means, so I had the time and in the mood and she was so happy I was back. so we had a nice visit. Said there was an intestinal break of of flu order 2 weeks ago and so many were confined to their rooms and kitchen help had to take food to them. at her table of 10 only 3 came to meals for 2 days, but she is a happy person most of time. [Avis was her Sunday school teacher and an older friend that she had for many years.]

Dad I went to Gettysburg the time we went with the Blanks to [postal] convention. We didnt want to go but didnt say so, as was their trip too and am glad we went. She was looking up an uncles gravesite. So Ive been to Gettysburg [too]. And watching the movie last night I thought about Grandpa Owen. I never heard mother say anything about his [Civil] war experiences. or him telling about it to her as a girl. [He died when she was 9 or 10 years old. I (Tom) dont recall her talking of him, either.]

The grocery owner told me he was thinking of some way to help elderly folks over here more. I had a 5 lb sack of potatoes and another bulky item & said that was all I should carry, and then he told me this, he had thot one afternoon a week between 3 & 4 he would have a fellow bring them to the door, after we did the picking out. That may help us a lot. With love Mother

Thurs afternoon [December 1982] Handwritten. mt

Dear Son Wrote a long letter to Nathalie so not much news for yours, but recd your letter today asking for information about AARP [I must have been 55]. So looked that up for you.

I have been to Pearl [Zahorek's] funeral this afternoon, was at the Meth Home Chapel and a crowd there so many in the Home came and it seemed every 2nd one had a walker, and I sat wit Avis. Went with three other gals that Pearl & them & I had luncheons at each others homes during the years, the last one was Pearls birthday this past June.
Her last day here on earth she had gone to the dining room to supper and didnt come to breakfast the next morn, and some one went to see what the trouble was, she was dead in bed. What a good way to end life. There was a large crowd there quite a number from my church and was hers too until she moved to the Home and she said she would go to the Chapel there. [The church was the University Methodist Church. Earlier Florence and Pearl and friends and our families went to the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church until it closed, I believe. I do not want my casket open during service have a few requests in my Bible what I want done. [Circumstances and desires change and Florence died at 101 1/2 0n 5 October 1998 at Shepherdstown, West Virginia where her son, Tom and Nathalie lived. She was cremated in Smithsburg, Maryland and her ashes were buried the following spring and the family had a simple memorial gathering the next spring at the burial site at Mount Hope Cemetery at Topeka. Florence was buried next to her husband, Walter, who died in 1968.]

I sat with Avis [Shuart], who looked so frail and sad. She missed Trudie Harsh so much when she left, you know Pearl was one of Bone Heads. [A group of church friends who did things together at each other's homes for many years.]. She [Pearl] was left a widow fairly young. Now Avis and I are the last of that group.

Mrs Hawks (neighbor back of us on 1120 High) called me yesterday. She had been to Pa. for several weeks and just came home. Her son drove to Pa. on business and came back in a week and she stayed for a visit with her sister & husband. She said she came on Midway and cost more one way, it was 153 one way. She had never gone alone before so said she got along so well she wouldnt mind going again.

Jenay & Gary and girls went out to a place and you pick a tree and cut it down yourself a cedar (Christmas tree) they had that fun. They have it in garage sitting in a pail of water. like we used to do.

Am glad you are suggesting to Chris about the Indian check. [Grandchildren Chris and Betsy and Tom Hahn as Kansas Delaware received a settlement from the U.S. Government for partial payment of money that the Delaware were cheated of in the last century.] He takes your advice or doesnt mind your suggestions. He told me he admired you as a father. [Oh well, anyone can have bad judgment once-in-a-while.]

A letter from Zita today about their Thanksgiving, said they put 2 tables together and it extended into living room, looked like the Waltons, had 3 yr old in a High chair and 5 yr old on the telephone book on a chair. Those are Steves (son) step children and all the kids came but Julie. Zita sent the little story on her letter recd today. With love Mother [Enclosed in above letter. Typewritten] When I was young they didn't wrap Christmas gifts just hung them on the tree as is, and I remember after Mae was married, I was 10 yrs then and the first Christmas she came home, I looked in her suitcase, when no one was around. I knew somehow she would have hair ribbons and I wanted to see what color mine was. There was ribbons for all we sisters and all i one box with our names on them. And mine was the color I liked so well.

[January 1983] Typewritten May have been included in a letter.

The sunset was beautiful . . . I sat on the [sitting] stool just thinking about life, its pleasures, sorrows, mistakes, etc. Everyone has them some times, some more than others. They don't always just happen, we make them.

Sunday Afternoon [February 1983] Handwritten Age 84. s

Dear T & N. Well at last am seeing it snow in the daytime, Very large wet flakes. The saying goes, "the old lady is It is not cold or windy, and largely picking her geese." And usually large flakes do not last as long as is melting as it falls down. Am doing a little family research stuff. As I was straightening up the box in the closet of picture, etc and this little enclosed envelope] has always intrigued me as a girl growing up.] It was in a little drawer on side of a dresser. You know the kind that has the two little drawers on each side of a mirror. Well, may times when mother was gone I would go in her room and look at this envelope contents, a little ring, a party invitation and the 2 pictures, and someone has the ring and invitations. but want you to look it over. I have spent the day thinking about those little sisters and I don't remember them. Mother has told us about them. I have one thing straightened out. Have always thought Millie was the older, but it was Merle and she died very young, two years old, while Millie was 7. And I remember mother telling what a good child it was and would be so neat and no doubt she was also missed her more 2 year old Merle. And I see Kate was born Dec 29, 1900 which was only 3 months after Merle died. How mother ever got through two babies deaths and 2 miscarriages and live as long as she did and have a good mind until she died. And I thinking of all the happy times I have had with all my sisters, all those reunions etc. Am so glad both of you like history and can share with you, mine. [Millie was the next sister older to Florence and Merle was the next sister younger. It must have been hard for her to having both sisters next to her die. This is the first time I remember her saying that her mother had two miscarriages, making it nine pregnancies in all. I don't recall seeing the two pictures that she mentioned and would love to see what those little girls looked like.] Am so glad both of you like history and can share with you, mine.

[Paragraph about the health of a neighbor, Norma, not included, but she commented, "I can run in with the mail and little deals. In fact don't go in unless something to take in, and I use the little pantry door and shelf [that opened into the communal hallway] when she is alone and can mail in there also.

Be glad Tom you have work and interests, Charlotte [her niece, daughter of Kate Torgeson] writes she wishes Gayferd [her husband] had some hobby or work as he is restless. A caretaker takes care of yards etc in the park where they live. She is trying to get him interested in cooking, while she does some sewing.

Now the flakes are fine. Rain not cold enough to freeze yet. but is midafternoon.

Had pieces of chicken baked. and potatoes, peas and jello, glad to get bananas again. They were green last week and I didn't know how that kind turned out so waited until yesterday and the yellow ones were in my store [in the little shopping center next door] [After my father died, they ate they main meal at noon. She maintained this habit after his death, always having a balanced meal.

In your last letter you mentioned maybe a [heat] register cut in floor for upstairs would help heat up a room. [We lived in an old 1775 log house with c1790 brick addition with an antiquated heating system.] We had one in W.[hite] C.[ity] home. It was over the dining room and into my parents bedroom. The heater was going in dining room all the time and real cold weather we kept the living room door shut. It made that bedroom cozy. We used to envy the folks having that room, they would shut that room up during the day, ant is was cozy there. Then would shut the register off at night, except when we had dates, we used to hear it open, as part of we couples sat in that room. Sometimes there were three of us dating at the same time. [Florence, Kate, and Gladys] Our bedrooms were sure icy. We wore long underwear and flannel gowns and blankets and I was still cold. Would take a heated brick wrapped in piece of blanket to bed. We had lots of covers but they were so heavy.

I got out the pages from and clipped them together and out in large brown envelope scrap book yesterday, so it will be easier anytime to dig out anytime to see what year we went etc for Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Monday Morning February 1983 Handwritten [The day following the preceding letter.] s

Wet snow yesterday and it was about gone by night, but ground covered this morning and it is still snowing. I had a Dr. appointment as haven't been checked since before went to see you, but too bad to get out and am alright. Jenay [younger friend] was going to take me but they have the flu and cabs are busy when is so bad and I don' want to take any risks about falling, so will enjoy my home. With Love, Mother

The water truck came by again. I waved at the girl and she waved back. There was another ahead of her and I think a girl was driving it too. They go so slow is the reason she saw me. With Love, Mother

Monday Evening [February 1983] Handwritten. s/m

Dear Tom: Sent a letter off to Nathalie this morning. Hope her cold isn't too bad. Recd such a nice letter from you so will answer your questions about the two little sisters. One of the sisters died of a ruptured appendix and the other of typhoid fever. The next year I had typhoid fever and out was touch and go for a while with me. The first solid meal I had was 3 t cream of wheat. I remember that and I cried for more, but Dr.'s orders not as been on liquids for so long. The doctor said the drainage [in the yard] was bad not far from the well, as stock was close or some such deal, so mother saw to it that it was taken care of. Even the first yrs of married life when I would go to Dr for some ailment he would ask if I ever had the fever. And once in a while when I was growing up after the big hurt of losing the girls, mother had said Millie was like and angel, almost to good to live. She was orderly and would pick up every little raveling from mother's sewing, and quiet. Back to me. I lost all my hair but it came back quickly for school the next fall. Short and curly. I don't know where the picture was taken [of the two little sisters, apparently] but it seems odd they, the folks hadn't them in a picture as most of us had a picture [taken] during our younger years and I never heard Mae [her older sister, Mae (Torgeson) Christensen]] talk about the sisters. She was home until I was 10. It may be folks didn't talk about things like they do now. Maybe bottled up their grief.

Today Jenay took me to Dr. for a checkup, I was supposed to go after I got back from seeing you but didn't feel the need to go as am OK.

Sunday Afternoon [March 1983. Handwritten] s

Dear Tom. There are three things to do this afternoon to pass the time, one to take a walk, so that I did right after came home from church and the dinner good, lots of good food and a good attendance, and I got to visit with folks I know, that stay for the dinner. Surely folks don't don't pile the plates up like they do there at home. There is something about a heaped up plate, that gets me. Seconds are alright but to take a heaped up plate. I didn't go back for seconds and the first [serving] had good starchy food, cottage cheese and mixed veg and meat stuff. Then after we have finished that, doors between kitchen and dining area, those half doors, are open and there is the dessert. Pies all kinds, cakes and cookies. but I didn't take only 1 sq [of] cake and a little tart deal, and don't feel stuffed. My little family sat with me [Jenay and Gary Weekly and their two girls] or rather I sit with them like I belong and how good to feel that I have them there too. Georgine [Jenay's mother] comes after me and sits in church with me and then goes home. She doesn't like to stay for the dinner. Says it is one of her hang-ups. She is church Secy, and is in touch with so many during the week. Hears their woes and sorrows, so is ready to go home after church. So Jenay & Gary [Weekly -- younger friends] bring home the girls. Now is Chelsey, she is the oldest. She went through a phase where she ignored me, now she tells me about her activities etc and Ashley ignores me at this church deal. She has the ministers son sit by her. He is 16 years old and teases her, and she hits back etc, and so she doesn't see me. She has lost some of her tenderness, a phase. [At this time, Florence, Florence attended the University Methodist Church on West 17that Topeka. Earlier, she and Walter and most of the rest of the Hahn Family, attended the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church about a mile to the east, not far from where the Walt's parents lived. At some point they transferred to the other church. The original church was sold to an African-American church and is now in the hands of a private owner.]

So have had a walk. There is a slight chill at times and sun goes under for a few minutes and then out. You want a sweater on and turn the corner and want it off. You know how that goes and I thot about one time in kindergarten r 1st grade. You didn't want to wear a sweater to school in afternoon. [We went home to dinner [lunch] in both elementary school and junior high school. Not always a pleasant thing to do in inclement weather. It was about six blocks to elementary school and about eight blocks to junior high school. I began riding my bike to school in the 5th or 6th grade.] It was one of those changeable days in early spring, our first one, and you begged me to let you go without and a norther wind came up in afternoon. and it was very cold, then you came all sniffly and almost bawling you were so cold. [Scorpio, single sons can be very persuasive, sometime to their detriment].

I watched the mothers today with their little little folks and thot about the Hahn clan. An another little episode came up came to my mind when I saw a little boy and girl, were about 10, sort of chasing each other. One Sunday you were hitting the preachers daughter (I think her name was Margo) with a folded up SS paper, and Grandma Hahn [Walt's mother, Mattie (Defries) Hahn]said "Tommy you mustn't do that." and Margo said" That's alright I like to have him chase me." [Well, how about that!] So you see every generation goes through a growing up phase and through teen age and on to maturity and you love them thru all of them, and I am in my old age enjoying the mature man

And now after the walk an letter going to fill a spring basket for Jenay. She is hep on baskets, and I have made, fall ones, Christmas one, winter ones and spring. She furnished the baskets and flowers, I do the arranging. She says the name for it now is "Florists designer", so I have done so many and yet haven't fixed any for myself. She has a cupboard or shelves in the basement now and can store them until the next [season]. Cupboard has doors so they don't get dusty. Also haven't looked at the Sunday paper yet

Last night on TV a tornado warning on from 6 until 8 30 and started to rain and blow. I turned TV off and went to bed and to sleep by 9 30. I don't think it rained very much. but to think that snow storms off recently, now tornadoes have to pop up.

This portion of a letter may belong to this one:
Someone in our town [White City, Kansas where she lived from birth in 1897 until she left for Topeka in 1920] was a representative and ordered from wherever the Co was located, and when a customer bought something they got coupons and could use them with some cash Mother bought a double swing from the Co. One of those swings that have seats facing each other, and we sure made good use of that

Then when I was first married there was a tea co, sold coffee, spices, etc called Jewel tea Co. and with coupons, you could get dishes, but I never got into that. Seems money was so scarce that hard to save up for when goods were delivered.

Has rained in night, streets are wet, 34 but sun trying to shine. Zita sent a piece of material in letter, cut off a calendar towel. It is so pretty, a bird feeder with a cardinal, 3 little chickadees, a blue sky, and snow on roof of feeder. [She and her husband Walt had a bird feeder at their house at 1120 High Street in Topeka. They never had much variety, but enjoyed it greatly.] How are birds doing there on your feeder?

I always pick out one outstanding Christmas card every year and have up all during season and cold Jan. This year, the Indian card from you and wild life from Mary Taggart [daughter of an old friend and neighbor] and it has two mallard ducks in flight and is snowing quite colorful.

Today am having Jenay for lunch as have a dental appt at 2:30 for cleaning and check up, has been over a year since had one. She is taking me. Am thinking about you and hope you are O.K. With love, Mother

The big truck that waters the st. just went by and I looked out and a young looking girl was driving it.

What do you think of this. [An ad for surrogate mothers] I didnt think it would come to the place where one would make a living at it, there was a case in court a while back, where an abnormal child (baby) was born, and neither couple wanted it.

The article about the "Hope Chest" reminded me of mine, they were quite popular in my day, and I was working so I could buy things. The girls who didn't usually had relatives or friends make them things to put in a box. I bought sheets & pillow slips, towels, etc, which lasted for many years, if it hadnt been for that chest, would have had to wash the sheets and put right back on bed, as some had to do, and after I was married in a few weeks came a notice from the bank in White City, I was in the red 79 cents. Dad thought it such a good joke, he liked to tell about it but I had a come back and told him the dowry I brot with me when I got married, that cedar chest full. Sheets, toied comforts etc.

. . . Had a sad sight yesterday afternoon until now Sun at 7.00. Someone put a dead cat up on the parking or rather our yard on north where I would see it, and it hadnt been dead very long , a beautiful soft tan color and large, and had been there all day until now and I looked out and it was gone. I can see you Tom crying about it and I think about the family who owned it wondering where it was, and as I was pulling the shades down for the night I saw it was missing then went to pull the bathroom and bathroom shade and there was a large gorgeous sunset, the first one have seen in a long time. It has been so cloudy. and I think how one window on one side has a sad sight and can go to te other where it is beautiful.

Back to Jenays, Gary modeled his clothes, and they all seemed to fit, those women seem to get the right size always. I never got Dad clothes.

Always take the Smithsonian magazine to the brother He likes them. I am enjoying my magazines you sent, the Readers Digest for table reading like breakfast time, and the Country Living for drooling over when sitting down between chores. Dad always liked the Digest for Bathroom and breakfast time, and I havent had it since he left, only when some brought it to me . . .

Wed Morn [April 1983] Handwritten

Dear T & N Seems as though its an effort for Nature to get here with Spring weather, the sun waits until noon to come out so its chilly.

Have you read in Readers Digest Flags, Flowers and Thanks pg. 75 in May no. read it last night and it brot back so many memories of our trips to White City Cemetary on memorial Day. I would put pkgs. of Peonies in refrigerator in the bud 2 wks before, if it was a warm spring the flowers (peonies) would be gone by that time so in case I had dozens of them wrapped and one shelf of them in refrig. and had plenty for here and down at White City and am wondering Tom if you ever went with us. []I did.] I know in later years we went every year and after Bob Christensen [sister Mae's husband] was gone we would pick up Mae and would take something baked or fruit for a picnic dinner at Aunt Celia's. [Florence's father's brother John's wife] And there was only one or two times when Uncle John and my Dad were there and Bob Christensen and the rest of time was Mae and sometimes Gladys [Florence's sister]. Joe White, Glady's husband] worked on Sun and holidays [as a fireman for the Santa Fe Railway] so he couldnt go. We would go to cemetary first to a program and decorate the graves and visit with our friends and thento Aunt Celia's, her house always seemed so cool (sometimes was hot the 31st of May], but they had shade. Aunt Celia was a good hostess, never flurried and we would help set table etc and do dishes and outside a porch swing and chairs in the shade. and we would go back to Maes and stay the all night and talk about the friends that we had met that day, and old time stuff. Mae so loved having us, and she was like a second mother to us. Dad [Walter] loved her. So this article brot back memories. If you dont have it will send it to you.

Last night watched "The Miracle of Kathy Miller" a beautiful movie about a handicap girl. And this article in the mornings paper about the library [on the Topeka Capitol grounds] & dome on capitol. I thought it interesting also. And I am so pleased with the labels to stick over writing. on env etc. Many times folks have given me a beautiful birthday card etc with my name on it, and I wished they had left it blank.

Thursday Morn Yesterday went to Church Group it meets once a month, and at a home. There are 16 in the group and only 2 in their early 60s the rest up to 90 yrs old. We meet at a home and after meeting refreshments, but have a time meeting at a home, as most of members live in apts or small house, for for 2 or 3 yrs now one of members has ir at her home when others cant have us, and it is sure a free for all. she has a husband and they are 75 yrs old and live in a big 2 story house, so her house [remainder of letter missing].

Dear T & N. No mail Mon so will send this letter today anyway so it will be there Tues.

I was quite excited over the phone call and the news and now will not be waiting and wondering what gender we will get. [This was about the birth of her great-grand daughter, Beverly Anne Hahn, Chris's daughter.] In my family have been no May births. but you have one, Nathalie--Diane. maybe m. s we will have to study up on Gemini now what makes them tick. Chris was so excited and happy when talking to m, and he said, "She is so cute and pretty." The miracle of birth is a wonderful thing. I had not thought about the gender of this one, in fact from Oct until now the time has gone so fast and it was such a surprise to hear the baby was here. and so glad you were with them.

A tornado warning from 5pm until 1 a.m. I had the radio going and went to bed and listened to my night programs, they are on WREN, our local station, so the reception is always good, so this morn sun is out and all seems calm.

Charlotte and Gayferd leave this week for Albuquerque, to visit their son & family, then up to K.C. and plans are we leave Fri morn June 3 for Goodland weather considered.

Thurs Morn [May 1983] Handwritten

As usual we are having a shower, had one yesterday early morn, so later in morn Norma [neighbor] and I went shopping. No luck, just dont seem to cater to the elderly any more it seems sleeveless sleeves or very short ones, and dresses with elastic at waist and a small opening to get into and put on so our morning was a flop. But, I went to the the Annual Mother daughter Banquet and it was certainly a success, the men in the church cooked the dinner set tables the whole works. For years we have been going to a public eating place where they have large separate rooms for eating and programs, but now it has folded up and they tried another place last year, food poor, so men in church volunteered, as they have been putting on the Mens Breakfast once a month, and the meal last night couldnt have been better, ham, escalloped potatoes, green beans, and real bran muffins, not the box kind and they were delicious, baskets of them, so I brot 3 home to have today for my dinner, not all three, but I bet 2 anyway. The dessert was ice cream sqs with lots of strawberries over (fresh ones) the ladies donated the salads so the meal was 3.50, try to get a meal as good as that out for that, some had mothers or daughters for guests, so I asked Chelsey to be my guest, children were 2.50 and she was so pleased and and full of chatter. while sunny little Ashley was a sullen little girl much of time. She had her back up about something, very few children there.

And the program was lovely, 2 songs by 8 ladies and then a book review (not long) by a lady not a member of our church and it was about a late book, "Pioneer Women, Voices from Kansas Frontier Women" which was good. I have just read it. Then one of our old ladies, Mrs. Tompkins, you may remember her from "Trinity" [Church]. Evans was sons name, a very smart boy but very homely. And she told about an event back in Trinity days, that I well remember a ladies meeting and a lady from K.C. came and talked about hats and had hats of all kinds, and a story of some, I think and most sure it was an afternoon affair. , a Ladies Party, and after the talk was over she made an announcement that she had picked out a hat in the crowd as her favorite or outstanding or some such (and it was mine). I about swooned and remember the hat well, it was a delicate shade of green, straw and had white & green spring like flowers on it, and was I ever happy about that. I used to like hats but am glad they quit wearing them. Those days back at Trinity are very Memorable and I was talking to Jenay about things we used to do and she said the young folks now days dont have time to do things like I did as they had to work and help make a living and it is true but it isnt altogether a living, its the things they want. And this morn I read this article (isnt it odd how things come to one at a time when just got to talking about it?)

Had a good nights sleep so am ready for the day, and I have another letter to write before get to work.

A nice letter from Marti in the Mothers Day card. She said that she would get crib sheets & pads with the check I sent. Se is so excited about having the baby and I am glad for her. With love Mother [July 1983] Handwritten.

Jenay sent this brochure for you. I see what a big deal Washburn [University] put on this year for 2 days, the day before and the day of 4th [of July] like a Fair and turned out to be a big success and will have it next year. So she is very proud of Washburn, her Alma Mater.

And I told them about my 4th of Julys. We 4 sisters each had a 5c pkg of fire crackers, which we shot off first thing in morn, then took the red wagon over to ice house across the street from us to get ice for making ice cream. And our noon dinner was fried chicken (we raised the chickens} new potatoes and peas, beets etc and we thought it a wonderful day. One thing I got on a 4th of July was a card from my cousins Ruth, and I have never seen a Fourth of July card since and wonder about Hallmarks not getting wise to that, they make paper plates and napkins for that date. [I will try to find out who Ruth's parents were.] This card of mine had a little girl on it and a fire cracker as tall as she with the words "Go off with me on the Fourth." I wish I had that card now, and it was the first card I ever recd thru the mail.

And ten my mind wandered to another Fourth of July, a sad one. Grandpa Hahn died the day or 2 before the Fourth of July, I do not or have not kept the dates of the Hahns, but you Tom were around 9 or 10 years old. [He died 3 July 1934. I was 8 3/4 years old.] That was the terrible hot summer where for days the temperature was 116, very dry, and folks slept out in yards etc, and the day of the funeral the men suffered wearing their good winter suits as they didnt have summer suits in those days.

One 4th of July after Mae was married she and Bob drove down for the day and for a treat he brot a freezer of store ice cream. It was a large one too, and he said we had to eat it up before they went back home in late afternoon. We were excited about it, but got over it by having to keep eating it. No way to freeze it like now.

Dorothy, Garys mother makes ice cream but somehow I do not care for it. She uses good stuff in it but doesnt make a cooked custard like mother did and then add cream and milk.

[Wed Morn] Have been on walk, and was cooler yesterday and is this morn. Now no more legal holidays until Labor Day and today will get mail again.

This obituary was in yesterday paper and quite a shock, poor little girl what a life she has gone thru. Ever since she was 8 yrs old, but she had a good mind and could do many things with her crippled hands un way of craft, but otherwise had to be cared for like a baby. Gladys was very fond of Jo Alice and so was the girl of Gladys. I have a painting of hers. I brot it from Gladys. This is a wooden plaque of sunflowers. Florence's sister, Gladys (White) Murphy was married a second time to Joe White. I believe Joe Alice was the daughter of one of his sons. Because Gladys had no children, Jo Alice was her "grandchild."

Am wondering if you watched the movie Private Battle last night July 26, is one of the best. Also watched Chas Kuralt "On the Road." He is usually on once a week. And has turned warm again, the cool spell was great while it was here.

Have done the laundry and tore up a pr of yellow [pillow?] slips, a wedding present from Louise Hahn, and are 62 years old and very thin. The were embroidered and lovely, so have made sqs from the very thin soft parts to use to wipe my eye glasses. And I got to thinking about that time of year and we were married and how happy to be in my home as a domestic and I got to thinking about [sister] Mae, the nice times with her, her house was always pleasant and cool in summer time and I loved the screen in porch. How nice to sit out on it and she would bring out lemonade or ice tea and cookies. I dont know why I cant remember when she lived in our home. I was 10 yrs old [when she left]. but only times I remember was when Bob [Christensen] came to date her and her Wedding Day. And I remember seeing mother crying days after she left. She must have been very lonely without her. . . [The remainder of the letter is missing.]

Yesterday I sent Norma a note writing about the hot summer of 1936, this was her reply, thought it interesting. [Not included in letter] We had cots out on front porch some nites, and did a lot of day time being in basement as was dry and cool down there and Sundays, Beckmans came for dinner, you kids put wet gunny sacks [burlap bags] in drain and then sat there with water dripping down from the faucets on your feet. The rest of us setting around playing Rook or something, then when evening came, go out and have the hose or sprinkler on and run around in it getting wet. Hot times but interesting, weather so dry, no humidity at all. I would get up early almost before sun was up to avoid the heat. We didnt have even a fan in those days.

Well must get on my early walk. A card from my neighbor over home [1120 High] Martha Hawk. She & daughter are on a trip in France.

Sunday [July 1983]. Handwritten. tm

Have been lying down on bed, trying to take a nap, but no sleep came and I got up thinking abut hot afternoons when I was growing up. We called August dog days, dont know what they meant, seems as though we associated Aug. as the hottest summer month. Mother would dry the shades [on windows[on the sunny side of house and we kids had to stay in or out during the middle of afternoon as Mother didnt want the screen door open and shut so much and let the flies in. She would make us a pitcher of lemonade and we would take it and sit in the shade of an apple tree, and late summer apples called Maiden Blush. which was yellow and so sweet. They have ripened in late July. We went barefoot all summer, wore shoes on Sun. Not ear as cool as under the apple tree, and then as we grew older she bought us one of those double swings, a seat facing the other and we enjoyed that and always had swings under some bug tree. She wanted us to stay home since there were 4 of us. Mae was too old to play with us, and if we went out in sun to go to well or toilet hot afternoons we had to put our sunbonnets on, and I can see now that she wanted us to keep well. She did not know then that being exposed to hot sun for a period of any length caused skin problems etc.

Dad did not raise watermelons but he would bring one home, from some farmer wagon, and we would leave it out on north side of house in grass & dew and it would get cooled off. Then sometimes would set it in a tub of cold well water, how we lived watermelon. We had one cherry tree. maybe more, and it had such good cherries, and I was picking one morning and a large bull [black?] snake was lying on one of the branches, so I have never been fond of cherries, and I was scared to go pick after that but mother made me do it. She had to kill the snake and she didnt like to do that but it had to be done.

Now to go to Jenays for a change, she is getting so antique minded, and they are having a ball going to sales, etc, but she will never get the look in a small house like hers like your old house 1775 log and 1790 brick addition in Shepherdstown, West Virginia] She just doesnt have the room. She takes "Country Living" and drools over the crocks & jugs, and I tell her about yours. Gary knows how to fix the furniture and finish it.
Later in evening Sunday Have put off writing to Bob & June since Jo Alice died so I called this afternoon. They were not home, so called this evening and Bob was home so talked to him. [Remainder of letter missing]

Saturday [Probably July 1983] Handwritten]

Dear Nathalie On my in 1980, you sent a small album, with special pictures, one of my girlhood home, all of us out to Bernices (you & Tom and Zita and Charlotte, and pictures of the Maine Lake and cabin and all of your kids, and the Black Cook Stove with the pie on top, and I have enjoyed that handy little book so much and I look at it so much when you are in Maine.
The the other evening Jenay was here to tell me about their trip to San Diego, and we had a good time talking about it and while I havent been in San Diego, have been other places where they went, and later Gary came over with the girls and the little girls told about the ocean. Chelsea loved to be in the waves and Ashley said she was afraid/ I told her that was alright, I wouldnt go in waves either. And we got to talking about Maine as that morn te "country Living" came and in it was a cook stove like yours. Jenay takes that magazine also, and so I showed her the little album Maine pictures to them and the picture of the stove and the pie setting there on it. The little girls were awe struck and asked how it worked etc/ and thje Lake. They dont know much about cabin living, only at Scout Camping. I can see Gary cooking on a cook stove but not Jenay.

I asked her if she would like my old work box, as it is something. She is interested in all antiques and any old thing that is brown/ This sewing box I have had for 63 yrs and a piece of wood is off one side but not noticeable and needs to be sanded or touched up a bit. The shape is interesting. You know, the sides open out. I got down a straw basket purse affair you gave me years ago for summer bag. and I have used it a lot and still looks like new, so for the present I will use it for a sewing basket and see how it works. It looks nice setting around altho I put it away when I get the sewing done. So she showed it to Gary for him to do some work on it. She doesnt do anything like that. I wish a place to work in like in my basement at home [at 1120 High Avenue]. In this box was a needle holder tacked on. My mother made them years ago. It was in a bad shape, the material for the needles, so I may get felt out and fix it up. I have a time when I change things in the cupboard or any place, getting used to a change.

The little girls had their ears pierced and they wanted it done as they love earrings, isnt that something, it must be the style among the very young.

Yesterday a note under the door from [neighbor] Norma, wanting to know if I wanted to go grocery shopping late in afternoon. so we went at 5.00 and planned to on my way home to turn in 2 coupons at Dairy Queen not far from here, brot them home and I said come to my place and I will have tea, crackers, and cheese and that will be our supper. o I set up the card table as is cooler in middle of room than at the dining table in the corner, and so we got our Sundaes on way home, had 2 coupons with 50c off each one, and brot them home and we were late and she was expecting a long distance call so said for me to come there and she had a card table set up in middle of room, so I took cheese, crackers, tea as this was supposed to be my treat also the sundaes and we had a god time over the little supper, and then Dallas and Falcon Street came on so we watched that.

Norma and I went to St Joe one day this week to shop and she got 3 full dresses. This store is a Jen store, has been in business for years, and is a good place. They furnish robes to wear while trying on clothes, and have a sandwich and coffee at lunch time. She got a robe also, and she showed me one at a time and each one was 67.00 and I didnt think that a bad price as they are that and more here, and then she said she got all three for 67.00. I was floored, they sort of make a bargain.. I would be happy with one. I havent been clothes sh9opping for so long, in spring rained all the time and these hot days I dont get out, so I havent any new summer things and havent started on fall. I did too go on one more late spring and I did several stores but the styles were not for ladies my age with gathered sleeves, etc. Everything is getting so expensive.

I would like to find some thin wash cloths, am getting short and heavy ones are hard for me to wring out any more. So one uses them a lot this hot weather. I guess the good old bargain days are gone. Am glad Dovey has taken to the cabin life. Does she like fished cooked? Guess had better get this buttoned up for mail. This week has gone fact in fact August will soon be on way out. I keep the balsam pillow on dresser, and smells woodsey. The little box with blue berries on top of shelf. With love Mother

I have a think for old depots [railroad stations]. The MK&T [Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway] in White [City] had such a nice one. That train we took to Junction City to see [sister] Mae and in real early years to Grandma and Grandpa Owens at Parkerville.

Then the Rock Island depot rains to KC, Goodland etc Topeka and went on it for years, during First War both stations would be crowded with soldiers coming from Ft Riley from Rock Island trains. One time during [World War I] war times word came the Wilson daughter. President Wilsons, were coming thru at midnight on the RR to go to some city to be in a concert so a group of us went to station to meet the train and they came to steps of train and waved to us. That was a big deal for us then, and my dad got his job [as postmaster] under Pres Wilson and now celebrities on T.V. on the Sts and everywhere to pass, and shown on TV, but those war times when is was in P.O. [Post Office] were very exciting and learned a lot about what made folks tick. I had to finger print Germans, men & women and some got mad, some of the women cried, others calm. Some days would be big mail days when carloads of foreign mail came and the post office would be crowded with folks when they found out mail was in and crowded in, and I never had a chance to read my letters until time to lock up and go home, sometimes several at once.

Friday Morn [July 1983]. Handwritten

Dear T&N The morning walks these days are not very invigorating. just do it to keep legs strong, the birds are quie. On the way I talked to grand nephew] Mark [Lamantia, who worked at Porterfield's Florist in the little shopping center next to where Florence's apartment was.] Surprised to see him since the store has moved out but he said he gets up a little earlier and sweeps up the outside are where the stores are here. He needs the extra money and they are buying a little house (I dont know where) and doing work on it and will move in a few weeks, in meantime he and Barbara [Lamantia, his mother, daughter of Ed Hahn, Walt Hahn's brother] are having sales and getting her garage, attic etc cleared of his and her stuff, having a sale this Sat.

So folks are getting uptight about scarcity of jobs. Norma's grandson [Norma a neighbor] has been on unemployment for a long time. She has them over later this week since has been so hot in afternoons and he does little jobs for her. She is a good grandmother [and neighbor] and adores her little grandson, he is in the terrible two's. I go to store in mornings on hot days, this morn got a few more of the purple plums for a treat. I dont eat very heavy food on hot days as dont get so hungry.

A friend called this morn and said she drove by the other day and saw air conditioners stacked up and said we must going to have new ones, did they break down. After she hung up, I looked out she had it all figured out wrong, all are now exposed as had to take the picket fences around them down as the termites were there.

[August 18 1983 probably.] My Day. Handwritten

Dear T & N Went on a walk at 8.00, did up the work first. I defrost [the refrigerator] every week since temperature way up. One this about this fridge it freezes ice cubes so quickly and works fine otherwise, keeps food good and simple to defrost as I dont load it too much in summer. So after that job was done went o walk and down to [friend] Hillarys and she is always pleased to have me. She was watering in back yard where it was shady and we sat in yard chairs, sure was hazy at times and a light breeze so was comfortable, but sitting by all that vegetation I got choked up and breathing heavy. I watched the bees, bumble bees and other kind of insect pollinating the zuchini and other squash and was so interesting but Hillary was provoked as so many of the blossoms were male, so no fruit or vegetable from that blossom. She gave me 4 small zuchini and small ones I like better than big ones, also a small egg plant, one cucumber, and a bunch of mint. We then went in the house and there was so much work staring us in the face. tomatoes to be made into juice. She never seems hurried when I am there, and she showed me a Garden Book our local gardener (on TV) has put out, so I looked thru it and the girl that helps him on TV has made illustrations for it, sells for 7.95 and of course she bought it. She has a shelf of garden books large illustrated pictures in them and expensive ones too and the same of recipe books. Norma has given me several long narrow color cards with flowers on thrum and they look like Book marks or could be used for that purpose so I kept two and she had the one I gave her in her garden books. She had told me over the phone that her daughter was home for the weekend and they were in a place where they had seeds to grow inside like the alfalfa, we get. Her daughter got some but she wrote her mother she had no instructions how to grow them and Hilary said, "I'll ask Florence, she grows them, and I happened to have the instructions and recipes how to make salads, etc. so took that this morn so she could send it to her. She the daughter mixes up all kinds of greens for salads and is not using heavy oils, uses vinegar and seasoning, and a little sugar. She uses wine vinegar and I just use the dark not the other and dilute it.

I also brought home two peppermint leaves or stalks and washed them, put in open jar with little water in fridge and it keeps well, so when I have tea I use some and also chew it up, rather nibble is a nice word for that. So that little part wit nature made a nice time to carry on in thoughts during the sizzling part of day. Oh another thing setting around on chairs in dinette was trays of onions drying out. She has no basement. She wanted me to take one or two or whatever but some one had given me 2 good sized ones and 3 white and I use onion not often or very few at a time. Today I had sliced carrots with several small slices of thin onion and then when that was tender put in cubes of egg plant and barely cook it, then put in casserole with a cheese sauce, in the electric oven, took short time to cook it then it had cracker crumbs on top and had a pineapple slice with cottage

Your letter came today and I had to look up about a Shrew, as only knew one definition of it and that is witch so I found out it is a mouse like creature with a longer snout. Your cat Tar[Baby] used to find so many mice in the vacant lots back of us, and he would play with one and wear it out. I have so little outside news. Oh yes, Jenay was over Wed eve awhile and she talked about her trip or theirs, they all went to San Diego. and later on Gary Gary came after her and the girls and they were full of talk also. San Diego is a nice place to visit.

Fri. morn Out for walk but so humid and it sure slows me up, not my usual brisk walk. The lady upstairs (Mary) left this morn, he daughter came 10 days ago and she is going home with her and stay until after Christmas, s I get to take care of her plants (3), thats jolly. I get that job every year the same ones, she should pitch them out and get new one when she gets back.

[Clipping enclosed] "I came back to Topeka recently with my daughter to visit her grandmother and we felt our visit was not complete since there was no brown bread ice cream to be had. Does anyone have a recipe they will share? We still remember the horse-drawn Baughman wagons and the ice cream our family always shared."

Sept [1983] Monday. Handwritten. mwh

Sixty three years ago was my Wedding Day, and Louise and Margaret went with us to the minister at First Meth Church. He was a stranger to us, and we met in a small room for the Service. And then back to Grandma & Grandpa [Hahn's] for a Wedding dinner and the family all there, that is the Hahn family and Dad & I Stayed in our home that night as had bedroom furniture there and went to Hahns for breakfast. and too the train to Baldwin. Louise & Margaret and Grandma & Grandpa went in the Ford, and this was Ed & Marie [Jenkin's] Wedding day. Marie's mothers [Mrs. Jenkins] had a noon dinner for us and Ed and Marie married in the afternoon. Then went two couple went to K.C. [Kansas City, Missouri] on train and stayed at same hotel that night. The next day went to a furniture store with a discount. We were so green about buying. I imagine it was full price, but did buy a buffet, table & chairs, and didnt have any money left for anything else. So we lived with furniture we got at a yard sale for the Living room, which was a wicker settee and a chair and a little table of some sort, the Living room was so bare for a long time. Someone gave us a new porch swing, the one we had many years after and such a nice gift. They sold for 5 or $6 new and think how many years it lasted. I could have sold 8 of them when I had my sale to move here to apt. I got $8.00 for it. At each side of garage on High St were white clematis vines on a lattice, and every year they bloomed on Sept 5 and did years after Dad was gone, but took them down later as wood broken and vines about gone.

And now will go on to other Labor Days when lived on High. We bought Colo peaches which came about that time and were so good to can, and then was when I made a peach jam which everyone liked to well, it had orange rind and Marashino Cherries) a few for color. You, Tom, called it Halloween Jam, and was so pretty and yellow, and one time two men from White City came for super. Dad met them downtown and invited them, and I put on a dish of that jam and one fellow kept spreading it on so thick was gone too soon, so I went to basement and brot up a pt jar and he sure made headway on that, and I thought if he came again would put on apple butter or some cheaper spread . . . [The remainder of letter is missing.]

This is sort of a sentimental weekend for me, as tomorrow would have been Dads and mine 63 Wedding am remembering it so vividly I came to Topeka several days before the wedding and stayed at the Hahn's. Louise and Margaret were living at home. I did not want to be married at home in White City as Mother had undergone an operation a short while before and wasnt up to having anything special and I didnt want a wedding like most girls do. I was beat up getting my job at the Post Office lined up. [She has written sever times about the wedding days, but this is the first time she has mentioned why she didnt get married in her home city, White City. Since graduating from high school, she had been working as Assistant Postmaster to her father, Postmaster Tom Torgeson.]

The evening before I was married was with Louise and your Dad, others out some place. They had a record and I rushed to the bedroom and cried "When you come to the end of a Perfect day" and dad came in to see what was wrong. I was just plain homesick and missing I had grown up [with] etc, that is called I have head Prenuptial blue, and after a quiet talk, I was back to normal. [My dad was a nice man who had a way of being kind to people.] Leaving the nest after 23 years was a big change. I loved my parents, sisters, and home. My brother had been gone 10 yr or more.

Am getting interruptions while writing. the 3rd time have got up top answer the phone.

[9 November 1983] Sunday afternoon. Handwritten.

Dear Son A dark dreary day outside, has been drizzling all day up to now, and I thought of my last Sunday there [at your house in Shepherdstown, West Virginia] and how wet it was outside, and in burst Betsy her friend and the dog. So all began bustling up some lunch. Guess Nathalie was [gone], all the rest watching the [foot] ball game\. I did a few duties. The fireplace going. But I went to church this morn, Georgine, Jenays mother, came after me as the others go to SS first. There was lots of food and church was filled as a group from [Baker University] at Baldwin put on a play, so no other service, they put this on the early service also and was very well done. "The day Christ was risen."

I dont take a covered dish anymore as is a chore carrying it and getting into a car etc so they have a dish on the table for money to help on coffee, tea, napkins, and if short of chicken go out and get some. There is always a good variety, but I am so used to eating alone that I dont care to try some of this or that. The ways folks pile up their plates sort of gets to me, especially when one hurries thru a meal, longtime dawdling is better. And I am wondering of you are having dinner at Chris's.

And now after talking to you last night I got to thinking about 2 days before you came into the world, 2 days before I had my new house all shiny as we moved in the last of May [1926]I had my new house all shiny as we moved in May . And I got busy making fruit cakes for the fall holiday eating. And so the day I did that in the evening Dad & Mother Hahn came over with Uncle Paul who had come that day, and when he got inside he said, "house smells so good, like someone has been baking. [Uncle Paul was Paul Hahn, the youngest of Chris Hahn's brothers and Walt Hahn's uncle. He lived on a farm in Kansas City, Kansas. Then by morn I was feeling like was almost time to have a baby and waited around until evening, Myrtle [Hahn] McCollister [Walt's sister] came over in afternoon, and so Pop [Walt Hahn] and I went to [Christ] hospital[on West 6th Avenue] around 7.00 and at midnight you came. He [Walt] was very nervous and walked the halls. And then after the event, he was like Paul Revere, went from house to house to tell the news. [However, I don't seem to remember that midnight ride chronicled in the history books.]

I had told mother I was going to hospital a day or two early to rest up, so she wouldnt worry, so he went over next morning to tell them the news and brot them to see the new grandson. They were first in the family to see you. My dad [Thomas Torgeson] was always fond of babies [He should have been; he had nine of his own.] and when they brot you in in he held you and kissed you. and I told him your name was Thomas Frederick after the 2 grandpas. In those days they were not strict about visitors being around babies. And the first light snow of the season came while in the hospital and I was the happiest person looking out and watching it snow and holding a little bundle all wrapped in a blanket.

[November 1983] Handwritten. "Memories of Autumn" Handwritten

"Autumn has to be the loveliest of all the seasons, I enjoy the fall of the year, the changing of the trees and they exchange their cool summer greens for their warm bright yellows, muted rust and fiery reds of Autumn as fall now beckons to winter."

And this afternoon am thinking of one afternoon at the first of my visit of one afternoon to the trailer [a few miles southeast of Shepherdstown on the Potomac River] and while you worked on the porch most of the time I sat with my head in cupped hands looking at the Potomac, waiting for geese or ducks to pass by, but none came and I thought of other autumns that I have been with you and how fast the years go by and what nice memories to carry thru the Shut in wintry days. This is Mon morn.

Found this started letter in my tablet so will carry on, dont know the date, and now it is Mon and quite cool but sunny as was yesterday also.

Norma and I went out to White Lakes Mall just to look around but a bad idea if you want to be waited on as was Sunday and others took advantage of the day also, but we milled around and bought very little, and sat and rested and watched the people. So now am off for a haircut, on a bus trip. [She was fortunate that the bus to downtown Topeka stopped right at her corner and she still took the bus at this age of 87. At some point, she fell while downtown and didnt venture out on the bus on her own thereafter,] With love Mother Sycamore leaf, think you mentioned it on the phone call, and pressed it, is 12 in across, brown and old looking, it is standing against the cabinet wall in kitchen and has a stem on it and is wrinkled around the stem like a skirt, and made me think of a magazine article you sent a long time ago. And then when started the Nothing Book in 1977, I put it in there for Nov. The article is ""November's Faded Brown Dress" And at the end is this touching bit. T "The days grow quieter and the Skies heavier. The restfulness of November is in her faded brown dress is here." It is a beautiful nature article.

A long letter from (niece) Charlotte today, the RR [Round Robin} letter came yesterday from West Virginia. Charlotte and I had it dangling as both were away but now will do better as we will be staying put, at least I will.

Am also thinking about the Hahn Thanksgivings, we did have such good times at that time and the last time that [Niece] Marti [Beckman Kilkenny] was here at holiday time, 3 yrs ago I think, you young ones looked at the Scrap Book pages of Thanksgivings in the past.

Here is a Thanksgiving quotation or rather about a turkey and now my mind is on Thanksgiving. "Redder than a turkeys rump in pokeberry time," get it?

Wed Morn Is snowing, a wet one. Am thinking of the First Thanksgiving with your first one, here, a tiny creature, and only a few weeks old. Mother said she thought you were too young to be out and come to her house, so they would come to ours,

She, Dad [Torgeson], Bernice and Gladys and Tom Taggart and she would bake the pies and the girls could help with setting table, etc. So I baked a large hen etc. and cant remember what the weather was like that day but we had a nice time, you cooperated and was a good baby [naturally!] and slept a lot that day.

Am going to make up cranberry jelly this morn, to have on hand, for the winter, and then make a jello salad for the dinner tomorrow at Jenays, so as I busy around I will have many happy thoughts of the Past Thanksgivings.

The snow is the fine kind, so it may last and may not, anyhow, "Snow Bound" Story may be read this weekend, Who knows. With love Mother 10 December 1983. Handwritten.

Dear T & N Christmas has come early to my house. This week have received noticed that will be receiving Readers Digest, Country Living and Early American Life ([the latter] from Gary [Weekly]). Now I will surely enjoy all of them., what a nice gift. Something to look forward to every month, thanks you, so much, then someone sent a small box of cheeses, also one to [neighbor] Norma [Eaton] and we dont know who it is, just has on it from Magi. Norma and I went grocery shopping yesterday, to a large store not far from here, and is in a small mall and P.O. to mail to)[sister] Bernice [Taggart] and she had mail to go too. This grocery store sends out a sale bill in one of local magazines that send out want ads (free) every week. In this store Sr Citizens 20% off grocery bill (this weekend) and a book of stamps 4.00 for 3.50 with coupon, so we got those little benefits, also had other coupons we could use, so we stocked up, and she has a cart we use to bring the sacks in.

Every week groceries get higher and higher, this week eggs go up first time in a long time, 95c and 1.00 but a coupon for 20c and raises are like buying candy but I still use them, and I came home and I went to my little store for cottage cheese, milk and cranberry juice. Was over to Jenays for supper Tues night, was Georgines 65 birthday. She is going to work another year, she is Sec. my church and makes a good salary but feels able to keep on. So we had a nice time. I took rolls and Dorothy salad, and Jenay had cheese quiche, I think they were frozen kind and Birdseye mix veg. frozen and a carrot cake from scratch. The brother & wife didnt come, so Gary was the only male and he dozed thru the evening off and on, the girls and Georgine play Christmas carols and we sang, and when we werent on guard the cat was taking decorations off the tree. The branches are too close to floor and so are decorations so they will have to put them up higher.

Hillary wanted me to come for lunch and help her cover coffee cans for her Christmas giving (with cookies) but her car broke down and she cant come after me, so I am spending the morning getting letters off. Tis overcast like might snow. So must get on with more letter. With love Mother

I have kept the little red apple basket had going at Christmas still in living room under the brass table, has large pine cones and two wooden apples setting beside it and it looks so pretty there today with the snow coming down outside, and I think about "sitting in front of a fire, Remembering, Wishing, Dreaming" [pasted it excerpt].

When I was a girl had two friends. my best friends, and one lived in a large 2 story house in White City and they had a fireplace downstairs and one up, and it was in the Bedroom. Faye Dodderidges home, and I not often but maybe twice slept in that blue& white bedroom with her and the other friend Jesse Simmons [whose] folks lived in a one story house had lots of room and a fireplace in loving room, and I loved to go there on a cold, Sun. afternoon and sit in that room, our house so crowded so many around, but now I know I ad the best time later on and into ageing years with my four sisters and our reunions. something they never had. [I may have mentioned elsewhere that Florence also had a younger sister and and older sister, both next in age, who died of prevalent diseases of the day.] Jessies mother & father [were] English and her cooking wasnt very good, and she never had doughnuts and cookies etc like we did. Fays Mother a good cook and when she had Special company she would call to a grocery store in Herington west from White City and have them send lettuce on trains and there were several trains a day.

[13 February 1984] Friday Afternoon. Handwritten.

Dear T & N Have been over to store, it is pleasant but chilly. Last evening about 6.00 there was a fog and quite thick and lasted a long time. I didn't look out late.

In answer to your question of the man who shot Silvers, he was [caught, I guess], dont recall if a Topeka man who shot Silvers, so many crimes here. We have what is called Crime Stoppers deal, dont know if it is a club or any individual and if a fellow if caught who has committed a crime [the informer] gets a reward of $1000.00 or more. This particular fellow about Silvers case wanted money. [I am wondering if this was my old classmate Marvin Silvers? I will attempt to find out.]

The last picture of Missy [granddaughter Beverly Hahn] is so cute . . . So I am keeping all to see what I want [to put into a large frame]. I look at them often. I get frustrated at times when I have a notion to make or do something and want to do it then and dont have the stuff to get it done then, as is an effort to get to places now days, as I dont get around like I used to, hop on a bus and go, but thats alright, I just wait until the opportunity comes along.

Tom do you remember a stick horse you used to have, probably not, she, mother, used a broom stick, cut it short, and made a head from men's pants and the head was so natural looking and had straps to hold on, too. We girls used to make mud pies and out them in old jar lids etc and put in the sun to bake. Martha [her mother's sister but Florence's age] was visiting at our house one tie and started to make mud pies and decided we ought to have eggs in them and got some out of a nest, and Mother caught us doing that and sure gave us a talk. Probably separated us for a time.

Sat morn. Dampish, and think I have a frame here for the project pictures, found one that I think the right size. Making bread this morn, and a small cinnamon loaf. I dont make cookies or cake for myself as I get to eat that when I go to places at the girls. So am having cinnamon loaf for my sweets this time. With love Mother

[February 1984.] Mon Morn. Handwritten. Portion of letter missing. Chrism

Sure enjoyed seeing "Golden Pond" last night and glad I was by myself as I cried all thru it and got out the bag of herbs [balsam, I think] you send me from Maine. I keep them in a corner in by the sheet stacks, not close as is so pungent, and every time I get out fresh bedding, I look at it, and remember hearing the loons on the lake in Maine, and not long ago, was a wildlife movie on and showed them.

Hepburn was especially touching in this movie, as more soft and tender, usually is very brusque and hard and Fonda was one of my favorites, and enjoyed your call also and nice of you to think about telling me the movie would be on, but I had seen that it would be and looked forward to it.

And the young boy reminded me of time Chris was with us for 2 wks or so [when we were living in Silver Spring, Maryland], but I think he was eleven yrs old, and what I good time Dad & I had with him. Dad said to me, let him do anything he wants to, and Ill clean up the mess. He would stand in front of frig and the door open and eat peaches or piece of watermelon and juice dripping on floor, this was in evenings and Dad would go out and clean it up. He was so good and his grandpa took him fishing and on walks on his time off and on rainy days. He and I made puppets . I am not good at that sort of thing but we played with them. W took him on picnics, one day Jenay went with us on a big picnic some organization, cant recall now, and all the cokes and soft drinks free, and he & Jenay drank so many. And he fooled around with the little shed back of garage and go out there a lot to read and when he got ready to go back home, at airport he said he wished I could go back with him. He was timid but I always loved him very much because of that and he always said "he would take care of me when I got old."

Have just called weather and its 13 degrees and will be in 30s or 40s by this afternoon, and isnt windy. Yesterday was terrible. Tomorrow a warming trend. So a new week has stared.

Yesterday afternoon a lady from my church cir call in morn and said she was coming to see me after 3.00 as she wanted a magazine that had something she wanted. She lives across this street in next block. She has never been here, so I thot of tea and cookies, had made some as going over to Jenays tonight for a little Valentine family get together party.

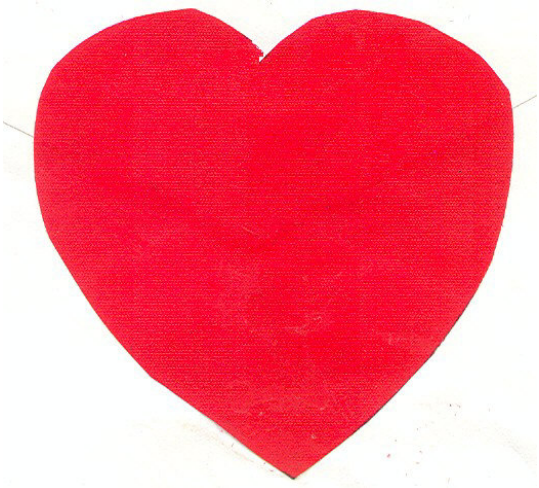
So I set up the card table and looked in drawer to see if any Valentine stuff there and found 4 red lacey heart paper doilies so arranged them in center of table , a white cloth on table and looked so pretty, ad the good China, 2 little red fringed napkins, and with a plate of cookies it looked festive and the ladies eyes bugged out when she cane in and saw the table. She had walked around the block and was cold, so she loved the warm welcome. I had a tiny pink sugar bowl and a little spoon in it in case she took sugar and she picked up the bowl and admired it. I have a little pitcher to match also, a nice pair for a sick tray as so dainty & small. I had made sugar cookies, and made a few real small rounds, dont know why I did, and they looked so dainty and had 2 [with] larger scalloped edge in center of plate. It is easy to talk over a cup of tea. We had refills of that, and I use my smaller purplish blue pot with gold flowers on it when only two here. It has kept so bright So that was done before hand but it doest make any difference what is served, plain or elaborate it leaves a memory, that is it does with me. And the last on the day before I left the quickie with the Gannaways [our neighbors in Shepherdstown, West Virginia] was so nice and I am sure it was a Memory day for them too.

Florence T. and I had such a nice visit several weeks ago over tea. So maybe that is my speed these days, who knows.

Must get on the ball and get some work done. I ran the cleaner this morn between writing this letter and reading the paper.

I dont recall about you taking a trip Nathalie, in Toms last letter you were gone, write about it. With Love, Mother

[7[?] April 1984] Tues 4.30 pm. Handwritten



Dear Tom Its that hour when it gets lonesome for some one to have tea with, especially when that some one [Tom?] has been here for several days, and has left today. But I have tried to keep busy some of the time and not think. So this morn did a load of clothes and now at 4 oclock began to get that feeling again so ran the sheets thru.

So that keeps me making steps. An tis tea time too, but Im sure I cant have tea today and drink alone, no cookies left. Has been cloudy all day. The call from airport was nice. Has been so quiet, the work men didnt come today and Norma didnt show up either and the Library card came.

I miss you very much and you are sop kind to me and I appreciate you making the trip, it always takes me two days to get over thinking that there is no one here.

And during the day I was with you at the airport in Chicago walking around. And I hope the flight back was comfortable, no storms, and how Dovey [our cat] acted. Watched Terrible Joe movie, Cagney last nite and wish it had been on when you were here. With Love, Mother

Happy Easter [22 April 1984]. Handwritten.

The above at the top of the letter was made by Florence from Sewing Scraps at 87 years old

Dear T & N A beautiful morning, no wind and will be in upper 60s by afternoon.

Went to Gary's [Gary Weekly] birthday last night. He cooked hamburgers on grill outside and we had a simple meal. I took baked beans and I put in one large can of baked beans and had one of regular size, so didnt want to go over to grocery store so put in a can of red kidney beans and had one of regular size, and the combination was very good. We all pan to go to church then eat out at noon Easter.

I have an Easter basket on dining table, and a little one you sent in my birthday box, and took one each to Ashley & Chelsey last nite with a plastic egg in each. They set on their dresser. Hope you enjoyed you canal activities this week Tom. I am remembering the times I have been on those affairs and the lovely trip one spring when the Dog Wood Trees were blooming/ I have so many wonderful memories of times spent with you.

May will be a Good Spring Month. With Love, mother

[14 May 1984] Monday Morn. Handwritten. mt

Dear T & N This will be sort of a diary since havent an address to you.

Yesterday had Hilliary [Her name was Hillary, but Florence always spelled it this way, to the chagrin of Hillary) for noon dinner as was Mothers Day and her daughter (lives in KC) had gone to Eng. for two weeks) so I knew Hilliary would miss her. So we had a nice visit and she brought me some asp.[aragus] from her garden. She has lost 3 lbs in two weeks as she has given up sweets and eating between meals, but still uses sugar in her ice tea. And we spent most of the afternoon looking at pictures and she said she would like to see some of your books (Tom) and I loaned her several canal books, she is interested in diaries etc and is writing memoirs, but hasnt assembled them yet.

I looked in my "Nothing" book and there was an account of a trip to Sheptown in '81 and was there on Mothers Day, and a picture of "The Hilltop House" [at Harpers Ferry, West Virginia] where we had diner at noon and then went to a quilt show, and drove back through the Grandma Moses Valley [not really, but Florence thought it looked like the setting where she lived in Virginia] and in the evening to the colored singer ["Brother of Harmony"] musicale. Chris & Marti brought Nathalie & I each a vase of flowers. and on that visit there, we went to a Canal Rally with Shanks [William "Bill" E. and Ruth Shank, of York, Pennsylvania] and countryside [Pennsylvania] was so beautiful dogwood in bloom, so I sat and thot about that trip.

I did this after Hilliary left and I sat a long time thinking about i then Chris called and we had a nice chat and then Marti talked and I told I was thinking about that year on Mothers Day and she remembered.

Yesterday I did something different. Had a good nites sleep and got up feeling like trying my wings, so after early lunch went out to Halladay [Holiday?] Square, is south and

I have felt it would be too much to go by myself, but twas easy. Take bus here [in front of where she lived on Wes High Ave], transfer downtown on a bus and it went to this mall. is on way to White Lakes, the large mall, and there is a store there that used to be a store downtown (same management) Pelletiers only on one floor and when bus came back, only a short ways to a shelter waiting to get a bus to town, was such an easy trip and a beautiful spring day. I have been shut in so long, so found or bought a pale green skirt with figures in it, the color of blouse. I wanted an unlined sent by didnt have any, so will look for a white jacket next, none there. And manager of store was sitting there and his wife looking over the clothes, I -knew them slightly from way back in early married life and would see him off & on when went to their store, so that was nice talking to them, This store has two of the old clerks from the past, and its so easy to shop here if they have what you want, and when I got home I had an hours nap[and enjoyed the trip. [Florence did very well for a 87-year old at this time. The Pelletiers store in the earlier days in town at the corner of Ninth and Kansas Avenue was a lovely store.]

Everyone has been too busy lately to take me, Jenay winding up with last of school. and Norma busy wit settling up her cousins affairs . . . [personal] and has to go back next month to finish up the business, lawyers are helping out, so I have seen very little of her. She isnt feeling very well but has lots of grit, and had good help from relatives where she went.

Wednesday Evening Have been to my Church Meeting, the place where we went, we go often. We meet once a month. There are so few that have a home large enough for 18 people (women) and the member has a large living room, and we are always welcome there. Some one brings a large pan of cake, the lady makes coffee, and there are always nuts and mints & candy we take out of napkins, so the lady doesnt have to fix anything. Today I was the oldest one here, others in 70's and we had such a nice time. one lady gave a short talk. The lady that took me doesnt stay as she had come from from a weeks stay in hospital from a bronchitis attack. She gets them often and so she picked up another lady, and the man whose home we had meeting brot us home, and I asked him in to see apt, she, his wife, has been here, and so I stood up all the time & and he did too and dont know how long he would have stayed if we sat, we were in kitchen looking house over and I said the stove was so hot in summer and the oven door needed fixing. so we did have some minor problems here, and we were standing by the sink and now the dumb story begins. The faucet has been spurting water etc for 2 or more wks and I hadnt called Mt. Findley [manager] to come fix it and I told this man and said I never did it at my home (fix a faucet) and just the I turned the thing on and I didnt have any wrench it just came off so easy [when he did it, I guess] and only had one filter, ours over home had 3 filters and had to be placed just so, and this only one, and I sure felt foolish. I was so dumb and had to call Mr. Findley to come fix it all these yrs,. Well I did two surprising things this week, so had best not try anything else.

Must go watch the sunset. it is so far north and about to sink out of sight from here and tis 8.00 o'clock.

Thurs Mon, May 17 This article in this mornings paper and it and others of hers brings me back to my younger days, This one about greens, mother used to cook horse radish, lambs quarters. We kids wouldnt eat them, and now we are eating all kinds of greens. I sure like beet greens.

Your nice letter came this morn, gets here quick.

Got a bag of cranberries out of freezer and made it up in jellied form, so good on salads etc. I always buy an extra bag in Dec. for later use. . . [Remainder of the letter missing]

Dear Tom Such a good letter from you today and I sat some time mulling it over, the clippings about flowers very good. I especially liked the one

"The skies cant keep their secret.
They tell it to the hills.
The hills just told the orchards
And they the daffodils."

I had never read that one before. he others were good too, and I got out a book you sent "Essays on Nature" and read about spring, you see we havent had but very little of spring according to weather, but the flowers and bushes were lovely even tho cold weather.

And the article about the bonfire I thought about. I dont remember them as a child, but liked them on 1120 High, when all the neighbors would rake leaves and kids would jump in a big pilevisiting back & forth, and speaking of neighbors [. . .] personal data about the health of a neighbor omitted]

Dont run yourself down because you cant do certain jobs. I am in the same boat, some women can sew, saw a board and all kinds of womens work and mens work. I have never made but one dress in my life. My mother tried to teach us all, but Bernice and I didnt take to sewing.

Last time I was there with you at trailer and you were working so hard on the porch and getting no where, and I wanted to tell you to have someone do it. I was afraid of the electric thing [electric saw?], might cut you, that you were using. [We had a trailer a few miles from Shepherdstown, West Virginia on the Potomac River. Later, our friend, Lou Dittmar and a friend of his helped me, that is did, the porch. Years later the people to who we sold the trailer tore it down to make way for a new house on the slope above. My Dad couldnt make a chicken box [coop] for hens to set come spring or put new screening on screens, etc but he could raise lovely vegetables and made a living. [I guess I have his genes, my dad and his father were both good mechanics, but I was worthless, but, I am a good gardener and did make a living at other things.]

I have been criticized by women by letting pop buy groceries, he did a good job of that, we ate well, so what. Now days men are staying home and doing home work if they cant get a job, but wife can, so dont run yourself down.

When there isnt anything worth watching on TV, I go to bed and listen to radio, a fellow comes on at 9.00 and answers questions about mortgages, wills and all kinds of things, and talks folks out of some things etc, interesting at times.

Interruption. I have asked several old timers about "Whispering Willow, in State Journal. No one could remember the man. I called one of Book Club members who is 88 yrs and she couldnt remember. so she just now called. She had been out somewhere and asked a friend and this friend knew at once, its Art Carruth, they lived over across 17th on McVicar or close there [farther east on north side]. I remember the house. He must be moved or passed away, no address in phone booth. Why did you want to know? [The newspaper consisted of only a few pages, but on Saturdays it carried his column which covered most of the page, I believe, and I used to read it out of curiosity or boredom. Apparently my mother didnt read it as much as I.]

The Joyce Whitlow, no relation to the Mary Whitlow that had me to lunch 2 wks ago. [Again, I must have asked about her.]

Sent Nathalie a letter today. and recd a card from Zita [Schump, of Kansas City, Missouri, wife of nephew Francis Schump], they will come around 9 Sun morn if weather is fit, should be a quiet day since have just had Sun & Mon holiday Still chilly mornings down to 40 this morn but just right this afternoon, sun out.

. . .[speaking of grocery shopping in a different store] so I gave she & Jenay a list of staples and I got the green stuff, and did I like the green stuff I got, some fresh spinach, green beans, a zuchini, the fruit not so good and very expensive so I got some eating apples. over here [at her regular store] they always have bananas, and I got a bunch of green onions and I cut up some spinach, so I use the little steamer every day.

The weather has been hard on the Sta here (TV), so have missed some programs, but not many, some good movies on the others. Summer programs are reruns and I wonder why they cant have good ones same as in winter.

The baby [grand-daughter Beverly Hahn] is beginning to have a grown up look, does she try to walk? You will see quite a change in the time when you are gone. Poor Dovey doesnt like changes but you had good luck with her last year on your trip [to Maine].

There have been several teenage driving accidents here lately, and cause from drinking, maybe the law changing to 21 years driving may help.

This little book I am working on amuses me, it really is for grand-parents not great grands "What was your allowance when a child." I never had a nickel or a dime, only when I went to Parkerville [Kansas] on train to see my grandparents & [Aunt] Martha, her same age, at Dwight, Kansas, each only a few miles away.] The R trip was 20c and Dad gave me a quarter and I bot licorice with the nickel. I didnt make only one trip a summer.

Keep safe on trip. With Love Mother

Dear Tom & Nathalie Just recd your letter about the busy weekend. That took some doing for all that and company there too. [We must have been in Maine.] I live such a quiet life anymore, and am used to it. There are times when I feel restless and I try to do some thing about it. It seems we always look forward to spring and summer, when are house bound in winter, but so much rain and humidity are still housebound to a point here.

A think I have written you about the two books Jenay brot me, they are 8 1/2 by 11 and 22 pages. They do not have a hardcover so went to store and got large manila env to keep them neat, and I will enjoy working on them. Have already started gathering up pictures and clippings.

I didnt realize was so near time for Maine trip or would not have sent for dates, they can wait of grandparents, you fill out. [Must be taking about the books she was working on.]

That little girl [grand-daughter Beverly Hahn] is growing fast and getting a grownup baby look, her hands she uses with expression.

Have moved writing stuff in bedroom, and such god daylight there and keep my material all together, or rather here as am in room, now, sun is bright and will get warm some afternoons but will try doing this way, one of question s [in book], how much allowance did I get growing up? What kind of toys? I want a small picture of kerosene or coal oil lamps to put in my new history book, keep your eyes open for them in magazines for them or in ads.

Thurs morn Cool, and fresh with windows open. A joke on me, night before last, a wild storm came and I didnt hear it I slept so hard was still raining awhile after I got up, however no damage done, to trees, etc, its surprising that trees are so beautiful with all they have gone thru, the old sycamore at the west window was so bare looking and now so beautiful, but they are a dirty tree always shedding leaves. [Shame, shame.]

Jenay and I are going grocery shopping this morn, I need fruit and green stuff, which is scarce and poor over here, except bananas always have them and I get tired of them almost everyday one. They are good for one, how I would have loved to have eaten my fill when a kid. The stores only had them in at Christmas time.

This book am working on, is called a grand parent book and it really isnt good for a great grand parent. One question how much allowance. When we were older Dad gave each of us a silver dollar for Christmas. And was I a member of any clubs, probably means Girl Scout etc/. you see it isnt for good for great grand parents. [That is , people of an older generation at this time]

Hope your sale went well. [Remainder of letter missing.]

"MAINE"

If you stand very still in the heart of the wood you will hear many wonderful things.
The snap of a twig and the wind in the trees
And the whir of invisible wings.

One day when I was there [at the cabin in Maine] out sitting in yard was so still and all kinds of little noises, mostly birds twittering and some strange ones to me also and in the distance heard a or maybe more loons way off and reminded me of this poem.

"On the Old Porch Swing"
"Oh that was nicer than anything,
A warm summer's night on the old Porch Swing.
Settling down with a comfortable sight,
Chatting a bit as the neighbors went by."

Thoughts and Reflections of the Past - - "Memories of Days gone by"

I get this little book out every summer and have it on the lamp table. Its from Tom and Nathalie and I think about that porch swing many times, but it was lonesome after Dad [Walt] left, so I rarely satin it unless someone came to see me. I could have sold in 8 or 9 times [times] if had more. Did I tell you Mrs. Diehl had her porch screened in, looks different.

Your letter day also reminded me of Spring and fall when the heater in dining room had to be taken out, on back porch for the summer and had to clean out some of the chimney and put on a cap in that open hole in wall, and polish the stove good so it wouldnt get rusty. Dad was awkward about doing things like that and Mother had to be right there to see that soot and dirt didnt fly around. The room looked much larger after down and we liked the look but stove was welcome in the fall. And, the cookstove had to be polished up too of course. We left it there all the time to heat wash water etc.

. . . [first portion of letter missing] Grandpa Hahn died the day before the 4th of July, and that was the year had temp of 112 for days. Going back to 4th of July, when I was at home in W.C. Bob & Mae came [from Junction City] for the day and brot a large freezer of ice cream (commercial kind) which was a treat for we kids as we so seldom had store kind as mother made ours. Well we had big helpings at noon after a big dinner of fried chicken etc, and then another helping mid afternoon and Bob told us we had to finish it up as he had to take the freezer back to the ice cream pace. Well we got our fill that day of ice cream as had no refrigerator then to keep left over ice cream, so 4th of July was one of our favorite holidays. Mother always made a freezer of ice cream. We went over to an ice house close by, in sort of a barn, men hauled in river ice and had it covered with saw dust to keep frozen and it was fun to go in ice house as was so col. Mother warned us not to eat any ice as was full of germs from the river.

Jenay has a beautiful pie cupboard in her kitchen dining area. It was dilapidated and he fixed it up, sanded it down and has a dark finish on it, and has a lot of room for dishes she has had stored away and now ca use them. It has the tin sides, now he has another one that is taller which he will use in the basement for books. Remainder of letter missing]

[19 July 1984] Wednesday Morn. Handwritten

Dear Tom In a letter yesterday you asked about Grandpa Hahn as I had written he died the day before 4th of July. You were 9 yrs old and did not want to go to the funeral so stayed with Grandma T. It was such a hot day of the funeral. Maybe I have written that was the year that we had 111 degree weather for days. and the men folk suffered with their heavy winter suits. In those days only one good suit. They wore light color cotton pants for their dress up, but did not think the looked well for funerals. Grandpa Hahn had diabetes and cant recall how long, but he would not diet as he should and the doctor told him what to eat, and he got a large splinter in his hand and was hard to get it to heal, so was in a bandage when he died. He could have lived longer had he taken care and stuck to diet. You little f0lks would ask about grandpa and then when you were eleven yrs old Grandpa T died and we could explain more then about death and you went to White City with us to his funeral, and then when both of your grandmothers died you were overseas. Was a sad time for Dad and I to not have you home and I know how hard it must have been to get word that they were gone and you so far from home. But we have happy memories of the days the Sundays when we were all together over to grandma Hahns and we would go in afternoon and in summer some of the men folks would go to Baughmans and get a freezer of ice cream, and grandpa Hahn always had a box of fresh crackers and we loved them with ice cream and still now I like crackers with ice cream instead of cake. And I am the only one left in both families, and trying to carry on.

At Avis party affair I so enjoyed Ken (Patty husband) and Charley (Jeans), they were with me all the time, watching me and holding on to me over rough places. Avis and I were the two old ladies, all the rest were young or in their middle years. And now you have your little family and a grand child.

Wed Evening So happy to hear you last night and to hear you approved about me getting a hearing aid. Well, Ashley & Jenay took me and watched all the details about how to use one and after they brot me home, I went thru how to adjust it some more, so I watched a program for an hr on TV, and didnt move the TV out like I have been doing and sat back farther and it seemed to work well. {remainder of letter missing.]

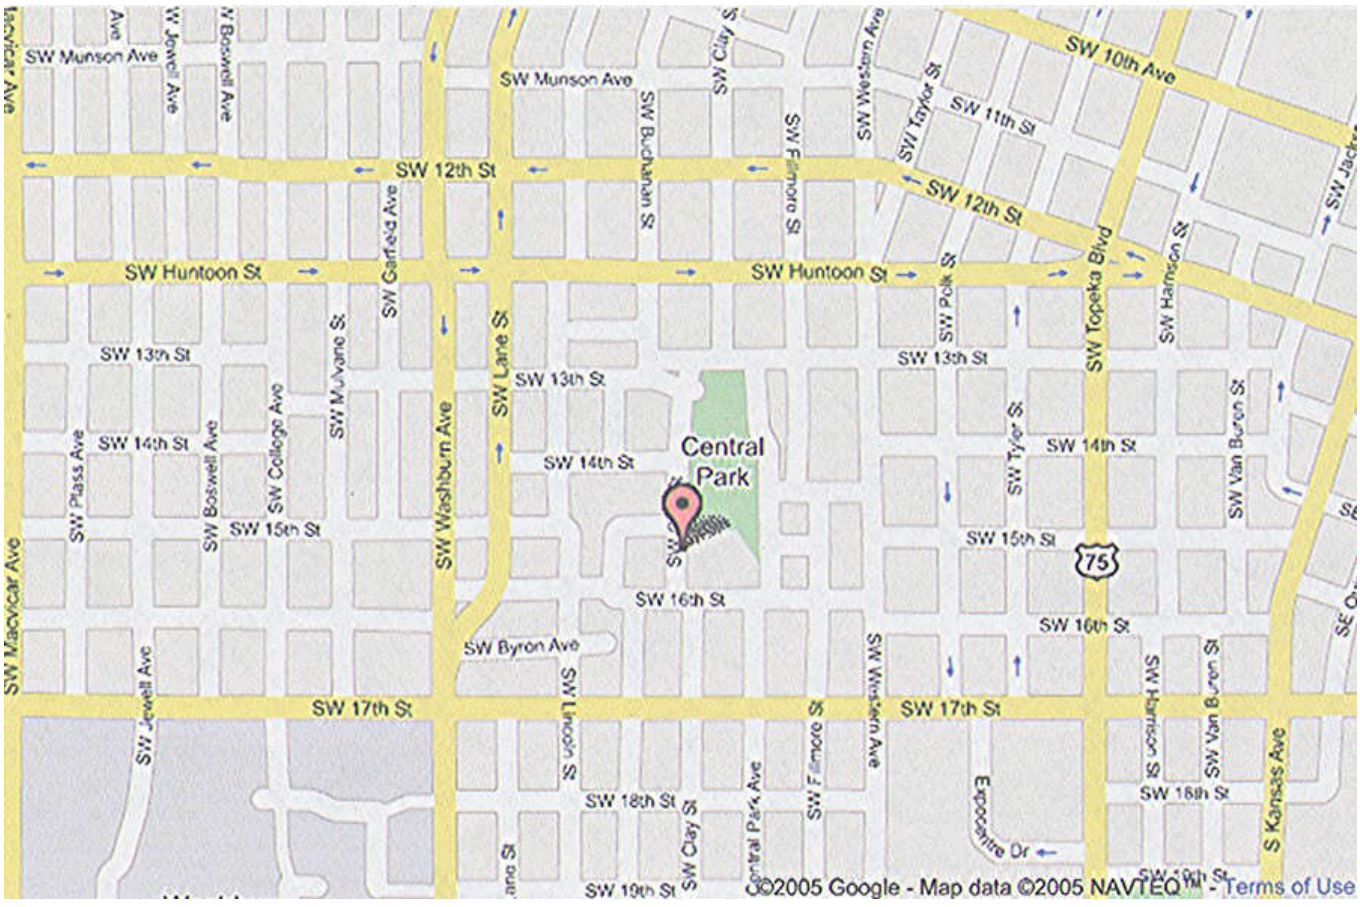
The Lobster place mat letter came today and I always have it up on kitchen wall, as you usually send one [from Maine]. Would love to have a fish meal where they are plentiful and not have to be shipped in. You folks are sure on the g a lot but am glad you are free to do that.

This hammock story reminds me of a hammock we had at home between 2 apple trees, half way in front yard, and I dont remember if I bought it or not. I know I was grown up and when out of H. School into post office. I would get things for the house and for mother as I did not pay rent, and got 50.00 a month and I thought I was rich. Mother got things for us to enjoy and one was a 2 seated swing you would sit in and rock back and forth. held 2 in each seat and we liked that, then we had a porch swing which we girls liked for when boy friends came. I loved to lay out in hammock and relax, if I got there first. We four sisters we had to take turns.

Does Dovey sit in your lap any more since she has gone wild? [She means since she had been enjoying the out-of-doors at our cabin in Maine.]

The Olympics has been something. I dont watch all the time.



Vice President Curtis [from Kansas] seems to be in the lime light in the mentionable in history again. [Remainder of letter missing.]

[Aug 1984] Sunday Morn. Handwritten. pwf

Dear T & N Tis a sticky humid morn and I went for a walk, started to sprinkle and came home. I used to take walks in the light rain and loved it. . .

Feel so happy about Chris doing well at his job, that makes him feel good. . .

I thought about how hard it was to get go when first [married] learning ho to buy groceries and cook them and nothing [money] left for fun, but we had lots of free entertainment in these days, the park wasnt far and of course we walked and that was Chesnay [Chesney] Park [also known as Central Park, I believe], and there were good band concerts Sat or Sun Eve which we enjoyed and then not long after that the families got settled here and that filled the need for outside entertainments. And then the Big [Kansas] Fair was the high light of the year and it was free then also, lots to sell inside, and after you came Tom, we left you with Grandma & Grandpa T, in the evenings, as I thought it no place for little ones. the dust, noise, etc and after a days work Pop didnt need to carry a youngster around. So we were fortunate to have folks to care for the little ones. . .

Sometime between 1920 and 1926, Florence and Walt Hahn lived just east of Central Park and the Torgeson's (Florence's parents) lived just south of West 17th (earlier Euclid Avenue) and the Hahn's (Walt's parents) lived just a couple of blocks south of the Torgesons, and Walt's brothers and sisters and two of Florence sisters all lived within about a half-mile from the park, so it was familiar to both families.

This little lady here to call (she is short and a little plump) and has a quiet voice, and have only had one visit with her and that was when I called and took a small loaf of fresh bread and he was sitting with us all the time, so our conversation was somewhat stinted. He said very little. He has had a slight stroke and doesnt talk much but I got her started yesterday about your Navy career Tom. [Boring] [Portion of letter missing]

Baughmans have quit the business but were still in the business when Bill and Jerry [friends] lived here and twice we went and had brown bread ice cream. I used to make ice cream and put grape nuts in it, that is what it is.

When you cousins were young Tom, we used to go to Grandpa Hahns on Sunday afternoon, he always got a large sq box of crackers (soda) the day before and then Sun afternoon, couple f men would go to Baughmans for a freezer of ice cream and we ate crackers with the ice cream and that salty with ice cream went so well and I still like crackers with it, sometimes crush them and stir around with the ice cream.

The last 2 days have been quite warm, but humidity down and that makes a difference, lots more pleasant. I thought about you on the way [to Maine for the summer] and looked at travel pictures going thru New Hampshire. & Vermont. With love Mother

[Part of same letter above but some of it missing or incomplete.] Sat was this open house so we went. nothing startling about it except looked nice with new woodwork, etc in that section, take a beating so young folks mostly there. [Don't know where or with whom.] This Co. as I have been told own Ttr[???] Florence T[aggart] lives, and the apts where Minnie Higgs [former neighbor when at 1120 High] lives, so they are a large firm now, and one never knows what is ahead except higher rent.

[September 1984] Sat Morn. Handwritten. mh

Dear T & N A fresh day after 2 days of high wind, a lite shower in nite. The days have been nice lately and nites good and cool. Calif is having a warm spell, they dont like to admit it. [Nice] Charlotte has air conditioning but she doesnt talk down Calif.

Went to a Weekly [Family] Birthday last nite over to Garys mothers (Dorothy). She is a good cook. We all took something by request, me the rolls and I tried out the new oven, was great, so now am in the business, but not too much while hot.

Mon. Would have been Dad & my Wedding Day 64 years [6 September 1920], thats a long time ago, but this year I remember it more than some years. I came to Topeka 2 or 3 days before and stayed at Hahn (Grandpa Hahns). Louise & Margaret still at home and I went shopping for my wedding suit and Hat, and Louise made my blouse, Navy satin and suit was Navy hot brown. I remember the prices of them also and at the end of that month got my banks statement from White City I was overdue .67. I never lived that down, but would always have a "Come Back" that I came with a cedar chest full of blankets, quilts, sheets, pillow slips and towels.

Twas a beautiful Sept day cool and bright and were at Grandma Hahn & grandpa had all the family for a Wedding Dinner. Louise & Margaret went with us to the ministers at First Methodist Church here and married in the chapel at 11 o'clock. The next morn went on an early train to Baldwin as Ed [Hahn] & Marie [Jenkins] married [there]. Grandma & grandpa Hahn and Louise and Margaret went in their "Ford." We two couples now married went at 6.00 on train in Baldwin to K.C. and there stayed 2 days and one night then back to Topeka. We had a reference letter from a man that ran a small furniture deal and was a mortician and he gave us a sort of a credit card at a large ware house (furniture) and we bot a dining table & chairs and a table for living room and then later on looked up 4 yard sales for other furniture. House was pretty bare for several yrs. I made an orange crate dressing table for the bedroom. Bare floors everywhere. Got an oil stove for the cooking and it did alright. We had one at home for summer use so I new how they worked.

[November 1984] Tues Morn. Handwritten

Dear T & N Tis a beautiful morn, down to 20, so tis cold and is clear our west so Bernice is on her way or I would have heard and I have a kettle of veg. soup cooking, and hair done up so all ready so far.

Hiliary called yesterday, she is going to her daughters in KC and the things she is taking. They will have quite a few for Thanksgiving. families from around here, her daughter lives in a 2 bedroom apt and has a dining room and large table so can accomodate quite a few. A relative brot her a freeze box yesterday, they live in a town close by and on farms, and in this box was quail, rabbits, squirrel, and fish all pkg and iced. and so she had quite a time getting them stored in her freezer.

I am thinking this morn about the Day before Thanksgiving when we were all here [in Topeka] and we started having Thanksgiving together with the Hahns in 1933 and I got those pages out from Scrap Book of our Thanksgivings and Christmas for Bernice to look at, didnt Marty and the rest of the younger Hahns enjoy looking at those pages when here one Christmas.

I called [niece] Becky the other nite and she was bushed from their trip, but looking forward to Dave & wife from Colo, and is having Rick & family, and would liked to have had me there also. She said Dovie [Tom and Nathalie's cat] went thru all her tricks [when they visited West Virginia]. so they now know I am not exagerating about how smart she is.

Have the house in order and brass table shined. I used Haggertys Brass polish, it is safe to use and not so hard, and below table on the smaller brass plate. I used to have it hanging on wall, but now under the table, sets on the cross bars just fine and have my waxed colored fruits, pine cones mixed in and colored leaves, is quite interesting, then on top is a bundle of wheat tied with green cloth bow, Jenay brot it to me on the way after the bazaar last week. The wooden fruits all polished up on buffet and Thanksgiving plate up. On dining table a bowl of wooden apples, so shiny and look good enough to eat, and have a fallish cloth on table. So am all ready but packing bag tonite. [They were going to Kansas City, Missouri.] All all the spoons in the racks are shiny again, gas is so hard and silver out in open.

I am so looking forward to being with some of my folks for a change, altho I love to go to my adopted families here also, but maybe the change will be good and such a good deal all around to have Bernice and one family of Zitas [nephew Fran Schump's wife] cant come so we will help out by being there too.

Your first Thanksgiving you were in a bassinet and at home from hospital.. Mother thot it wise not to have you out when so young and weather so cold, so she helped with making mince meat pies, etc and Bernice & Gladys were living here then and I think Tom Taggart was there also. And you slept most of the day, which helped make the day a nice one. [Well!]

Hope all of you will have a Happy Day and I will be thinking of you that day (Special) With Love, Mother [January 1985. Handwritten.

Dear T & N I wish you could see my picture window, the large one in the Living room, it is 2 o'clock and its still frost and looks like a woods with a pathway thru the center, just like Robt. Frost, in his "Walking thru the woods" and a form like a man on the path. I have had such a good time watching it and now it will soon be gone as the window is starting to melt. Havent had much wind today and a good thing as would be unbearable. Yesterday a wind and cold and has been 2 wks ago today since I have been out, was eleven below this morn, but I slept warm, the blankets are on now.

The alfalfa crop will be ready to eat tomorrow. The seed was. or is good as most of the amt in jar has germinated and that is from a T of seed.

Monday. Everything went well with inaugural and how sensible to have it inside. I remember when Poor Old Robert Frost stood outside with his white hair blowing, and I worried all during the time about him. Was it at J. Kennedys inaugural? Has been some years ago.

Tis a bright Sunny day and at noon 19 so is warming up. [Remainder of letter missing]

[March 1985. Sat Morn. Handwritten]

A fresh morn, yesterday was a sweater day and how I love that Lavendar sweater, is rite weight for early spring, then I inherited a lighter weight pale blue, which is good sometimes in the house. I have found out that I have lost 4 lbs is spite of all the stuffing in of food that I have been doing. Its in shoulders & face. The little spring flowers are coming up here too, but I have only the artificial little crocus in the house. If you get a card board pkg, light weight, it is a book for Beverly to look at when she comes to see you, so put it in her basket and see what she says.

Tis the Sat, the day that I dont like yet somet8mes nice little pleasures come along, so busy myself and do the house and cook. Chick & rice in oven. About getting rid of the cabin [in West Virginia] I think that wise, and it will soon get old and run down unless you are there often. There are times and things we have to give up as one goes into another age bracket and doesnt want to be working all the time on something or let it run down. So spring is a good time to do it, folks will be more apt to look when everything is lush and green.

Have made the sugar cookie dough to put in refrig, then bake Monday for my group afternoon on Wed. Havent had meetings for 2 or 3 months on account of ice and snow, so am sure the ladies will be glad to get out. We only have a few that will volunteer to make anything, but they like to eat when its brot there.

Marti wrote her teeth were about finished and she was glad they were being done. With love

I eat rice once a week, also have enough to warm over. I can eat any amt of the stuff. Today over chicken legs. [Remainder of letter missing]

The Day before My [88th] Birthday

And I am having such a fun time with Birthday cards, one from "The Governor Carlin", "Kansas State Senate," Nancy Kassenbaum is from Topeka. These greetings on printed stationary with Gold Eagle at the heading. Someone has sent in my name, but was fun and also interesting, and then cards from friends and relatives, so I have enjoyed the cards very much and have just put in most of this gloomy dark day thinking about the other birthdays and how nice to have folks remember you. I opened one pkg that came in the mail and the stationery is so pretty, just decided to try it out also, this from Bernice and she doesnt like any kind of sta just wants lined tablets for letters and I was plenty pleased that may be seeing you in April.

Sat Morn Am going for groceries and who do you think is taking me. Mrs. Foster. She is the wife of my Dr. Foster that died 2 yrs ago. I called up a lady who gets help for folks that need a ride to grocery store and they said I was to go with a Mrs Foster and yesterday afternoon she stopped by to introduce herself so we wouldnt feel so strange so I have a list made out for her and one for me, like I have done with Jenay.

And tonite I will go to Jenays for icecream and cake, so will have a nice day. I hope the day is bright at least starting out that way, but think that it is chilly.

So must get ready now to go grocery shopping, and am wondering how it will work out, but am sure it will as she no doubt has done much of it in her volunteer work.
I have hit the 88th birthday. With love Mother

I have used that scrap book many times for many things, to get a poem for Group Meetings, etc. So it has had its day and now have two later books that Diane [Torrey, step grand-daughter] has sent me for whoever is interested.

I have been thinking a bit about my future lately and I want to be with you, and since I cant get out places on my own, have been lonely at times. [We had told her that she could come to Shepherdstown if she liked when she was ready. Florence always knew when it was time to move on.] Will get thru summer and I hope I can get to Bernices also.

Have another trip to dentist this week and will have a partial bridge thing on 2 front teeth. Have been careful what I eat that wont break any until that is fixed. [Other than this, Florence had her own teeth to use until her death and 101 1/2 years of age.]

Just called weather report an 7.00, 55 and will get up to 83 this afternoon, so it sure is great and no rain for 2 days. Had the bathroom window open all day yesterday.

[July 1985] Monday. Handwritten.

Dear T & N AM so happy about my report from Dr. that had diabetes as found sugar etc in urine, and today went and they took some blood from arm and just called and said was normal, so now I can enjoy my thots more about the things have ahead of me. So even if am out of this deal am going to curb some of my eating habits, especially sweets.

Had a nice little trip last evening around 6.30. Jenay called and said she was taking me for a drive, and we went out to Shawnee Lake, and looked around, havent been out there in years, and coming home the sun was starting to set, twas a lovely scene, and with talking to both of you. I had a very nice Sunday.

And so I called Jenay to come for me when was there at the Dr office, the nurse took me as almost on her way coming to go from her place. She is so kind to me. Ive known her for many years back.

I will leave m y draperies here & try and sell them to the next tenant if they have one ahead of me looking. Jenay is happy about me going to be with my family and thinks its a wise move. I havent told anyone else, not even Norma, until its time.

I was scared with the flare up and felt like it was a lost cause, but have had my report by a phone call, turned out O.K., the blood sugar.

There are many little details I can work on in the meantime here. Sorting out things. Thank goodness nothing in basement to sort over [as there was in her own house before she moved to the apartment.] Its so wonderful to have this dream and pans. Altho it seems like a lot of work etc.

A letter from Bernice and she is missing me already, and I think she would come see me if Zita could come but I am not planning that far ahead. Jenay thinks it great, and said she & family have enjoyed me for many years. now you should have me.

Excuse if a repeat as I write a few lines then phone or something comes up to take me from a letter.

Have you told Dovey yet?

Tues Morn And a beautiful one, so still am getting ready for the morning walk. With Love Mother

Early walk over and went by the store, the Computer Store, has a cut Santa posted on door, and a lighted Christmas tree in window, and I wondered if I had overslept and missed out on Fall, but the heat from Sun is beating down, so it is July. With Love Mother

"Highway to Heaven if off now for the summer, but Cosby is on every week and that is a fun family to watch.

Has been 11 yrs ago in June that I moved here and was so very happy with the change and bus to go anywhere I wanted to, a grocery store so handy etc, but times change and folks change, and I cant go on a bus by myself any more, so am ready to move on, but this time seems such a big deal to me but this time I wont have to do it by myself as the other times and it is so nice Im wanted.

Georgine called at noon and asked me if I would like to go out to eat and go to a funny show, but I didnt want to go as I was too tired and had been up since early dawn, but wasnt hard to turn it down. She is only 64 yrs old, and likes to gad and a fun person. With Love Mother

[August 1985] Thurs Morn. Handwritten

Dear T & N Tis a cloudy morn 67 and humidity 93, so think it will rain. After your call last nite I got to feeling I was about ready to give in and let you two take over as am eager to start a new life. That seems strange at my age, dont you think? Am tired of doing the bills as have been doping and I will still have them and my bank balance and I am never the same [in bank balance], so who wants to volunteer to be book keeper, and who wants to be grocery boy? I miss the store over here so much, and so simple when ran out of shoe laces, scotch tape, etc. I mentioned these because needed some tape, so used Elmers [glue], and masking tape on something else until I got out shopping for groceries. How simple life used to be. [I think mother's life began to change when she no longer had a store or two to walk to and the ability to go downtown on the bus.]

I am writing this by the west window in bedroom and between the two. The man came to pick up the library books from a large iron container like a mail collect box and it also is there, the pickup mailbox, and a lady goes there every morn that am at that window writing.

Went for walk and looked down Shunga [Creek] way and my "Blue Ridge" mts that grove of trees, was blue and hazy this morn. Folks, the older walkers, had a light sweater on and others shorts, as I walked along I thot of Mother and Dad about their move to Topeka. Dad did not want to leave [White City], but mother did, and she was so happy in Topeka, city life intrigued her the st cars etc and she was young enough to go on busses and st cars to town, and Dad was unhappy at first with it all. I think in later years after they moved close to Central Park [West 17th], he enjoyed goping over there and [played] croquet with other men who went there, and I was torn between the two. But now no one has to be in that position as I am the one who is willing and eager and alone, so I will burn my bridges behind me and am wanted, so what do I have to lose. [Regarding the offer to have her come to live in Shepherdstown, West Virginia].

Today will be working on two shelves in kitchen, the bottom ones and find something for Becky. When she was over last week, said she would like something from my house. That is an old fashion idea, when some one died or moved away, to have something from their home. But I will not give away anything you want Nathalie or think you would, and so will get to doing something today and think its going to rain.

Thank you both for your concern and phone calls about them. I think I am worn out in mind & body, just old age. Mother

Part of a letter from her sister Bernice at Goodland, Kansas included: I almost wished I was going with you to West Va, I know you will be happy and Toim will see that you will be taken care of -and yet you can be independent in your own apartment.]

August 1985] Monday afternoon. Handwritten

My Dear Son Read the letter with the pictures of my new house, and I looked and figured out about where certain places are in each room, ands to think it is all new. and the toilet doesnt have to have a pan under the tank, and that the stove is electric. The burners on this gas stove go out every time a breeze hits them, I mean the pilot light, and I don't like to call him over [manager] , mumbling to himself. And those closets, I wont have to put boxes under the bed. I didnt have to over here as that is one thing about these apts they have plenty of closet space. Oh, it will be so much fun to have a little home in your town and am looking forward to being with folks. This winter sure decided me and right now it is pleasant and cool but the humidity is very high so I didnt try to take a walk this morn, it may be better early evening.

The Sunday outing with Margaret Diehl [old neighbor] was a profitable one, as beside the visit, the idea about going to the market is just what I have longed to do this summer, and it was not out of way to get to it on our way home, and this noon had cut dish of peaches, ripe and so sweet (no sugar) and lat nite some cantalope (that was rip) and not hard green. I peeled it and cut in chunks and put in a qt jar in fridge and I got a few apricots to, they were about out of them. I had apples on hand so didnt get any. There is one fruit that is always good that is in fruit dept at grocery stores and that is grapes.

Hiliary went out with some one last night out to market to get sweet corn to dry or freeze, her garden didnt do so well this summer. She is facing a serious kidney or bladder operation the 15 of Aug and is quite disturbed about it.

I would like to see the Waltons again, it is such a loving family. Have you met the Old Maid Sisters yet? and papa's recipe. It is such a wholesome picture.

Now Dovey is good company for you while the boss is gone.

Having the [grocery] store over here was a pleasant time of day for me, to go over and visit folks or the boss, he was such a pleasant person, that bldg still empty. The owner is sure losing money on that bldg, he owns all the bldgs there.

Am using all kinds of odd env. and scrap paper.

I drink buttermilk sometimes when I cant get straight milk.

Four O'clock Got the weather report 88 and humidity 66, but seems hotter than that, so am thinking this may be a hot August, as I remember last Aug. was more pleasant, so stay where its cool and enjoy it, as you have a big job ahead of you. [Taking care of Florence when she moved. We were probably in Maine.] Sure nice pictures of the apt and that a good idea to let me see it now. What colors are he walls & carpeting. The bathroom looks so nice and new. I like the cabinet around the lavatory. You will know how much furniture the rooms can take. I have sat for almost an hour and looked at those pictures. What a nice idea to take them. There certainly is enough closet space. Looks like mine here.

I thot about a change and didnt know what to do about it and am glad you have started the pot boiling and am all fired up now about moving. It all seems so big a job etc but cool weather coming will be better. Its so hot out today, air is heavy and I went for a walk around the bldgs and its 7:30 and sun still up high, but my legs got some exercise.

What a nice idea taking those picture, have studied them and trying to get located. Now if expense comes up about rent etc let me know, will send a check. The floors are bare, are they not, but dont wax them. What is on the kitchen floor, and what a nice lavatory with a cabinet in the bath room, its all so nice and hard to think I will be there to live, but am ready now

Havent told anyone yet and will not until its time, and such a nice season to come.

GENEALOGY

FOOLS RUSH IN, WHERE ANGELS FEAR TO TREAD!

William the Conqueror was the 28th Great-Grandfather of your editor, Tom Hahn, but a little humility in genealogy goes a long ways.

"Oh, sure, they all love William the Great, but nobody loved little Willie Poopy-Pants."

AND, you never know what you will turn up in your family research!

The First Thanksgiving

We will develop a page for Family Histories, Family Group Sheets, and Pedigree Charts. For the time being, I will stuff them in here. This may not work out as it seems to be working well to put this kind of information in the biographies o in the Family Histories. Editor

DELAWARE ROLLS

A Group Of Oklahoma Delaware who Participated in Negotiations in Washington, District of Columbia in 1867. (The photograph can be found in the Western History Section, University of Oklahoma and at the Bartlesville Public Library).

FINAL ROLL DELAWARE CHEROKEES

According to the alphabetical listing below, they were 196 roll members. Edito)

The full title of this roll is The Final Rolls, Cherokees by Blood, Citizens and Freedmen of the Five Civilized Tribes in Indian Territory, Delaware Cherokees. The roll was prepared by The Commission and Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes on or prior to March. 1907 on the authority of an act approved by Congress on 21 June 21, 1906 (*34 Stat. L. 325). I*t appears then, that the listing is composed of the survivors on 21 June 1907 of those on the 1867 Roll.

GRINTER REUNION PHOTOGRAPHS 1930-1941

[Check to see if there is an archive hard copy. Editor]

Moses Read Grinter and Anna "Annie" (Marshal) Grinter constructed their house on the bank of the Kansas River in present Kansas City, Kansas between 1857-1862. As explained in the section on The Grinter Place, Moses Grinter patterned the house at which the reunions were held after that of his uncle, Samuel Grinter. The basic difference seems to be in the presence of the porch that is shown in Moses Grinter's House. It is possible. of course, that the Samuel Grinter House had a similar porch at some time. The Grinter's lived in their Kansas home until their deaths. Moses Grinter died in 1878 and Kansas Delaware Annie Marshall Grinter died in 1905. Their daughter, Martha Vashtie Grinter Kirby, and her husband, Henry Clay Kirby, lived at the Grinter House -- now know as the "Grinter Place" -- for many years. Their daughters, Anna "Annie" Kirby (1886-1938) and Mattie Jewell Kirby (1892-1960) lived there after them. Annie and Mattie sold the property to Harry E. Hanson and Bernice A. Hanson in 1950. The Hanson's operated a chicken-dinner restaurant on the site until the mid-1960s. The Hanson's were tragically murdered later at their home in Kansas City, Missouri (I think it was. Through the assistance of the Junior League of Kansas City, Kansas and the Grinter Place Friends, the State of Kansas acquired the site in 1971 and opened it to the public as a state museum. The site is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

From probably 1930 until probably 1940, descendants of Anna (nee Marshall) Grinter and Moses Grinter gathered for Family Reunions at the Grinter House. The earliest photograph that we have is the one for 1931. There should be a 1930 photograph because of the captions on some of the other photos. If anyone knows of the existence of a 1930 Grinter Reunion photograph, please inform Martin Weeks martinweeks@cox.net . The first image to be identified with the year of the reunion is the one for 1933 that says that it is the "4th Annual Reunion," certainly suggesting that there was a photograph for the "1st Annual Reunion" in 1930.

Each of the photographs that we present is accompanied by the same image but with a number for each person. If you can identify anyone in any of the photos or if you detect any errors, please inform Marty Week, e-mail martinsweeks@cox.net . In the case of those still living, the person's name only will be provided with the notation "Living." We are excited about this project and hope that you are too. If you need a better image of any of the photographs, you may want to contact Marty Weeks to see if you can arrange something. We are limited in the size and quality of the images due to space restrictions. Accordingly, some of the photographs have been cropped "reduced" to save space on the web site for other data and to make the loading of the images faster.

The Annual Grinter Reunions were halted as a result of World War II when gasoline rationing made it difficult to travel. A sort of Grinter Reunion began about 1995 when the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians, many of whom are members of the Grinter and collateral families, resumed meeting in Wyandotte County. The 2001, 2002, and 2004 Annual Meetings were held at the Grinter House and group photographs were taken at the time. .

Annie Kirby and Other Grinters at probably one of the Grinter Reunions, perhaps ca. 1930 (Provided by Martin Weeks)

Marty commented in the accompanying email to Editor Tom Hahn: There are no identifications on the photo itself, but I think I recognize one or two of them. I am positive the person standing to the far right is Annie Kirby Langford. From Annie's age, I would date the photo between 1925 and 1935. . . Reunion photos. I think I recognize the older woman seated in the middle as Mary Elizabeth Grinter Mooney, based on her appearance in the 5 generation photo of about 1900. If that is her, then that might be her husband Robert Mooney seated next to her with the beard. He died in 1930. I have some thought that this may be a side photo at one of the first family reunions, because it appears to include members of the Mooney, Hahn and Kirby families. Your father [Walter Frederick Hahn] would probably be of the same age as the young men on the left, but so would the brothers of Annie Kirby, and probably several others. [Tom Hahn could not identify any of the persons in the photograph as members of the Hahn Family. The two dark-haired women on the front row are in many of the reunion photos. The older women next to Annie Kirby may be some of the sisters of Marie Mooney, possibly Nancy Hill Grinter or Annie V. Grinter.

The Honorable Kent Glasscock
The Speaker of the Kansas House of Representatives
State House
Topeka, Kansas 66612

Dear Speaker Glasscock:

Through the good offices of Representative Tom Sloan of Lawrence, I recently received the handsome certificates of Tribute commending the descendants of the Kansas ("Citizen") Delaware for our contribution to the progress, development, and well being of the State of Kansas.

The message to us is quite fitting. We are grateful that the House of Representatives has honored us with this tribute. Additionally, we appreciate the fact that the State of Kansas has seen fit to treat its Native American citizens with respect. On behalf of the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians, I thank you and your fellow representatives for your recognition of our tribe for its long-term relationship with Kansas as the site of the Delaware Preserve, as the Territory of Kansas, and as the State of Kansas. Rest assured that we would continue to support the State of Kansas, as it supports us, through our words and deeds.

We especially commend Representative Tom Sloan of Lawrence for his sponsorship of this Tribute. He was supportive of us throughout this process. Without his help, the commendation would probably not have been possible.

Thank you, Dear Father. I have spoken.

Former Principal Chief, Wanda (Hodge) Weeks as a Young Woman.
Wanda led the legal battle in the 1970s and 1980s for compensation to the descendants of the Kansas Delaware who were not inadequately compensated for the lands that their ancestors lost in the 1860s. (Photo provided by her son, Martin Weeks, legal adviser of the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians)

The following is a listing of Delaware Indians Who Elected to Dissolve Their Tribal Relations and Become Citizens of the United States in 1866. They remained in Kansas when the main body of the Delaware went to Indian Territory (later Oklahoma) and became known as the "Kansas (Citizen) Delaware".

The basic list of the Delaware and their minor children who chose to remain in Kansas is in Record Group 21, Subgroup: Kansas (Topeka), Record of Indian Naturalizations, National Archives (Kansas City, MO), was compiled by the Reverend John G. Pratt. Pratt based his list on the third article of the Treaty of 4 July 1866, between the Delaware and the United States at Sarcoxieville, in which it was stated that, "It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give each of the Delaware Indians who have received their proportion of land in severalty an opportunity, free from all restraint, to elect whether they will dissolve their relations with the tribe and become citizens of the United States: and the lands of all such Indians as may elect so to become citizens, together with those of their minor children. held for them in severalty, shall be reserved from the sale hereinbefore provided for." (Kappler, Treaties, 937- 942.) The basic listing, which is in the public domain, can be found in Microfilm Roll No. 5. at the University of Kansas and and at the Wyandotte County Historical Museum at Bonner Springs, Kansas. Pratt's listing can also be found in Fay Louise Smith Arellano's Delaware Trails: Some Tribal Records 1842-1907, p. 185 in which it is entitled DELAWARE INDIANS WHO ELECTED TO DISSOLVE THEIR TRIBAL RELATIONS AND BECOME CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES Under Treaty of July 4, 1866. There is a listing of heads of family only in C. A. Weslager, The Delaware Indians: A History, Appendix 10, "List of Delawares on Reservation in Kansas Who Decided to Become American Citizens." Weslager's Listing provides a list of the nineteen heads of families only. See the Bibliography Section on this site for the ordering data and additional details of both of the latter two titles.

Several of these persons later went to Indian Territory to live on Cherokee Land with the main body of the Delaware called "Registered Delaware " or the "Eastern Oklahoma Delaware Tribe of Indians" or the "Delaware Tribe of Indians," as they call themselves today. Accordingly, such persons are no longer considered to be members of the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians or "Citizen Delaware." Those persons generally can be distinguished by being on the 1898 Dawes Commission Roll and in the 1904 Cherokee Census. Though most of the Delaware who went to Indian Territory were considered to be Cherokee by the Cherokee Nation, they never really lost their Delaware connection. This has only been affirmed in recent court and Bureau of Indian Affairs decisions, but the matter remains in contention. To add to the confusion, the Delaware Tribe of Indians sometimes called the Delaware who elected to stay in Kansas-- but later went to Oklahoma-- "Kansas Delaware," a term sometimes used to denote members of the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians."

For convenience we have three listings of the Delaware who remained in Kansas. The first is alphabetical. It includes the 1862 Allotment Numbers. The second is organized by 1862 Allotment Numbers. The third is an annotated listing by Allotment Numbers.

Annotated List of Delaware Remaining in Kansas in 1866 by Allotment Number

This entry and all other entries regarding genealogy and family history do not contain the names or data on any living person without his or her request and or permission.

The numbers appearing with the names are the 1862 Allotment Numbers. The Dawes Number is the 1898 Dawes Commission Roll Number. The 1904 Census is the 1904 Cherokee Census. The first line of each entry is in the public domain. Those with the Dawes Number and/or the 1904 Cherokee Census generally indicate those persons who chose to go to Indian Territory later.

As a result of representations by Thomas Swiftwater Hahn, The State of Kansas House of Representatives presented a Tribute to the Kansas Delaware Tribe as requested by Representative Tom Sloan. The Tribute reads:

> Be it hereby known to all that: Sincere commendation is offered to the descendants of the 24 Lenape-Delaware people who became known as the "Citizen Delaware" and "Kansas Delaware," for their significant contributions to the progress, development, and well-being of the State of Kansas with the best wished for continued success.

Membership Information

An effort is being made to enroll all eligible Kansas Delaware, that is, descendants of the 26 adult Delaware and 54 children who remained in Kansas in 1867. Of the 26 adults, five and their children later removed to Oklahoma. Remember, a person can be a role member of only one tribe or nation. See the History Section of this web site for a listing of the Delaware who remained in Kansas. If you think you are one of the descendants who remained In Kansas, you may be eligible to become a Kansas Delaware. It is up to the individual to provide copies of documents that link him/her to one of the descendants. The following information is needed to determine either your status or the person for whom you are seeking status: The full name, including the person's family name in the case of a married applicant or an applicant who has a name different than his/her present name; street address, including the ZIP code; work phone; home phone; email address; the name of one of the original Kansas Delaware you are descended from. In some cases, the early part of the documentation may have been done by an ancestor or relative. The more information you can provide, the better. Copies of documents are not necessary for your first contact. In any event, do not send original documents, ordinarily they are not necessary, but the tribe retains the right to ask for further proof if necessary. Tribal enrollment is very important as we have an obligation to ensure that all of our roll names and data are accurate. Children can be enrolled at birth. Roll members who have paid current dues are eligible to vote in that year's election and for decisions involving tribal matters. A person can be on the rolls and not have to pay dues, but paying annual dues keeps you up- to-date, allows you to be an active participant, and provides strength to the tribe both internally and in its relationship with others. Membership inquiries and Roll Inquiries should be sent to Roll and Membership Officer: KDelawareRolls@aol.com

Annual Meeting, Election, and Council Members

The Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians has held most of its council meeting at the Grinter Place in Kansas City, Kansas, where the Annual Meetings and Elections are held at the same site. The Web Site: http://www.kansasdelaware.com . In 2002, The Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians also participated on 22 June in a special commemorative ceremony for eleven Lenape-Delaware who participated in the American Revolution, some of whom may have died in Kansas. The ceremony was held at the White Church Delaware Cemetery and at the White Church Christian Church (DOC) in Kansas City, Kansas. The Delaware Crossing Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution will sponsored the event. The public was invited to the ceremony. Thomas Swiftwater Hahn, Ceremonial Chief of the Kansas Delaware, performed the appropriate ceremonies for the Delaware. The Delaware Crossing Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution inducted Tom and his son, Chris Hahn of Shepherdstown West Virginia, the Technical Editor of this site, into the DAR based on their Descendancy from John Grinter, the grandfather of Moses Grinter, first settler of Kansas City and the spouse of Kansas Delaware Annie Marshall. See the article just below for more information about the Delaware who were honored. The next Annual Meeting and Election and Tribal Council Meetings of the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians, Incorporated, will probably be in June 2007 at the Grinter Place in Kansas City, Kansas on 78th Street,. DELAWARE REVOLUTIONARY WAR VETERANS ARE HONORED

Kansas City, Kansas --On Saturday, 10 June 2000, an observance arranged by the Delaware Crossing Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution to honor eleven Delaware who fought with the Americans in the Revolution was held at the White Church Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) and Delaware Cemetery. The group of veterans consisted of three captains and eight privates. It is possible that some of them are buried in the cemetery. If so, they are unique as no other Revolutionary War veterans are known to have been in Kansas. The honored Delaware served in Captain Montour's company from 17 September 1778 to 31 October 1781. The Sons placed a plaque of recognition and honor at the church. Among those present at the ceremony were their descendants who are members of the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians. The Kansas Delaware are those whose ancestors remained In Kansas when the main body of the nation was moved to Indian Territory (present Oklahoma) in 1867.

The chapter's color guard, accompanied by drum and bagpipe, started the occasion, accompanied by a smudging ritual by Kansas Delaware Thomas Swiftwater. Because of rain, the main ceremony took place inside the White Church. Roger James, the President of the Delaware Crossing Chapter, presided at the ceremony. Charles Goslin, the Sons' Artist/Historian, painted an oil of the famous Delaware Crossing on the Kansas River which was unveiled at the ceremony. In the painting, Moses Grinter, his wife Anna and Black Beaver, a Delaware, appear in the foreground. Grinter House stands in the background. The picture shows a ferry on the river. Black Beaver served with distinction in the Mexican-American War and the Civil War. Moses Grinter was the first white settler of Kansas City, Kansas and operated the first ferry in Kansas. His wife, Annie Marshall, was one of the Delaware who remained in Kansas in 1867. Several of their descendants were present at the ceremony. The painting is not only historically accurate but is quite beautiful. It is now on display at Grinter House in Kansas City. Charles Goslin presented a framed copy to Thomas Swiftwater Hahn. Roger James, President of the Delaware Chapter on behalf of the Sons of the America Revolution, made presentations to Bonnie Clark and to Thomas Swiftwater Hahn. Bonnie Clark presented a short historical talk on the history of the Kansas Delaware. Mr. James read letters from the Chief of the Eastern Oklahoma Tribes of Indians and from the President of the Haskell Indian Nations University at Lawrence. The ceremony concluded with representatives of the Sons; Mrs. Jones, widow of the Reverend Jones of the White Church Christian Church; and Kansas Delaware Corporation President Bonnie Clark, participating in a pipe ceremony performed by Thomas Swiftwater Hahn. That ceremony commemorated not only celebration at hand, but also the bond of friendship between the Delaware and those who recognized them honorably--the Sons of the American Revolution and the White Church congregation. The latter have been faithful stewards of the cemetery and have respected the Delaware and their customs for many decades.

The names of the Delaware honored were: Private Aleemen, Private Caylaylamind, Private Handutit, Private Hingwalupa, Private Pimeelaoughan, Private Quillpukamen, Private Shaughmek, Private Tawquatchee, Captain Mahingwapoosses (or Mahingwupooses), Captain Mawanapano, and Captain Nanawaland.

DELAWARE TRIBAL BUSINESS COMM. v. WEEKS, 430 U.S. 73 (1977)

430 U.S. 73

DELAWARE TRIBAL BUSINESS COMMITTEE ET AL. v. WEEKS ET AL.
APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA.
No. 75-1301.

Argued November 10, 1976
Decided February 23, 1977 ***

The Delaware Indians, who originally resided in the Northeastern United States, were gradually forced to move westward in the 19th century, and the tribe became geographically scattered. One group (the Cherokee Delawares), which initially had settled on a Kansas reservation as part of the tribe's main body, eventually moved to "Indian Country" in Oklahoma, became assimilated with the Cherokees, and is today a federally recognized tribe. Another group (the Absentee Delawares), which never joined the main body in Kansas, but migrated to Oklahoma and settled with the Wichita and Caddo Indians, is also a federally recognized tribe. A third group (the Kansas Delawares) lived with the main body on the Kansas reservation, but remained in Kansas when the Cherokee Delawares moved to Oklahoma; under an 1866 treaty the Kansas Delawares elected to become United States citizens and to receive individual parcels of land in Kansas on condition that they dissolve their relationship with the tribe and participate in tribal assets only to the extent of a "just proportion" of the tribe's credits "then held in trust by the United States," and the descendants of this group are not a federally recognized tribe. The question presented by this litigation is whether the Kansas Delawares were denied equal protection of the laws in violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment because they were excluded from the distribution of funds authorized by an Act of Congress, which provided for distribution of funds only to the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares pursuant to an award by the Indian Claims Commission to redress a breach by the United States of an 1854 treaty with the Delaware Tribe. Held:

1. The plenary power of Congress in matters of Indian affairs does not mean that an equal protection challenge to the instant distribution statute is not justiciable. "The power of Congress over Indian affairs [430 U.S. 73, 74] may be of a plenary nature; but it is not absolute." United States v. Alcea Band of Tillamooks, 329 U.S. 40, 54 . The appropriate standard of judicial review is that the legislative judgment should not be disturbed "[a]s long as the special treatment can be tied rationally to the fulfillment of Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians," Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 555 . Pp. 83-85.

2. The exclusion of the Kansas Delawares from distribution under the Act does not offend the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment, since on the record such exclusion was "tied rationally to the fulfillment of Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians." Pp. 85-89.

(a) The Kansas Delawares, not being a recognized tribal entity, are simply individual Indians with no vested rights in any tribal property, such as is distributed by the Act. As tribal property, the appropriated funds were subject to Congress' exercise of its traditional broad authority over the management and distribution of property held by recognized tribes, an authority "drawn both explicitly and implicitly from the Constitution itself," Morton v. Mancari, supra, at 551-552. Pp. 85-86.

(b) An earlier exclusion of the Kansas Delawares from participation in tribal assets in another Act settling claims of the Delaware Tribe, while not of itself legitimating their exclusion from the Act in question, nevertheless indicates that Congress has historically distinguished them from the Cherokee Delawares in distributing tribal awards. Pp. 86-87.

(c) It appears from the legislative history of the Act in question that Congress deliberately limited the distribution under the Act to the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares to avoid undue delay, administrative difficulty, and potentially unmeritorious claims, and this congressional choice is rationally supported, even though based on an unrelated experience in ignorance of the effect of the limitation of the distribution on the Kansas Delawares. Pp. 87-89.

MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

An Act of Congress providing for distribution of funds to certain Delaware Indians, pursuant to an award by the Indian Claims Commission to redress a breach by the United States of an 1854 treaty, is challenged in this action by a group of Delawares excluded from the distribution. The question presented by this litigation is whether their exclusion denies them equal protection of the laws in violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. 1

I

A brief history of the migrations of the Delaware Indians will serve as a helpful backdrop to the litigation. 2 The Delawares originally resided in the Northeastern United States, in what are now southern New York, New Jersey, part of Pennsylvania, [430 U.S. 73, 76] and part of Delaware. The Munsee Indians, related to the Delawares, resided in the northern part of that area. Under pressure from new settlers, both the Delawares and the Munsees were gradually forced to move westward, and by 1820 they were geographically scattered. During the trek westward the main branch of the Delawares stopped for varying lengths of time in what are now Ohio, Indiana, and Missouri, while others went to Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. In 1818, the Delawares in Indiana ceded their lands in that State to the United States in return for a promise of land west of the Mississippi River. 3 The Delawares then moved to Missouri for a short time, but under an 1829 "supplementary article" to the 1818 treaty, were again moved to what they were told would be their permanent residence on a reservation in Kansas. 4 The establishment of this reservation was purportedly the fulfillment of the promise made in the 1818 treaty to provide western land in return for their agreement to leave their Indiana lands.

Some Delawares, however, never joined the main body of the Delawares on the Kansas reservation. Among these was a small group that migrated to Oklahoma and settled with the Wichita and Caddo Indians. For a time during the 1850's and 1860's the Delawares in Kansas expected this group to rejoin the main body of the tribe there, but these Indians, called the "Absentee Delawares" in this suit, stayed with the Wichitas and Caddos. 5 Their descendants [430

U.S. 73, 77] have remained in Oklahoma through the present day, and are a federally recognized Indian tribe. 6

By the 1850's, the main body of the Delaware Nation, together with a small number of Munsees, had assembled on the "permanent" reservation in Kansas at the confluence of the Kansas and Missouri Rivers. But the hope that the Kansas reservation would be the Delawares' last stopping place was short-lived. In 1866, the Delawares living on the reservation signed a treaty, under which they were to move to "Indian Country" in Oklahoma to live with the Cherokees. 7 Each Delaware moving to Indian Country and enrolling on the proper register was to receive a life estate of 160 acres of Cherokee land and the right to become a member of the Cherokee Nation. Most of the Delawares on the Kansas reservation accepted these conditions and moved to Oklahoma, where they were gradually assimilated for most purposes into the Cherokee Nation, and were permitted to share equally with the Cherokees in the general funds of that tribe. See, e. g., Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U.S. 127 (1904); Cherokee Nation v. Journeycake, 155 U.S. 196 (1894). Despite their association with the Cherokees, these Indians, called "Cherokee Delawares" in this suit, have over the years maintained a distinct group identity, and they are today a federally recognized tribe. 8 [430 U.S. 73, 78]

The 1866 treaty did not require all Delawares on the Kansas reservation to move to Oklahoma. Rather, the treaty provided that any Delawares who agreed to "dissolve their relations with their tribe" and become citizens of the United States might elect to remain in Kansas. Such Delawares would receive 80 acres of land in Kansas in fee simple and a "just proportion" of the tribe's credits "then held in trust by the United States." but thereafter could not "further participate in their [tribal] councils, nor share in their property or annuities." 9 Twenty-one adult Delawares chose to accept these conditions and remain in Kansas. 10 Their descendants, called "Kansas Delawares" in this suit, are not a federally recognized tribe. 11

In 1854, while they still lived on the Kansas reservation, the main body of the Delawares signed a treaty with the [430 U.S. 73, 79] United States under which the United States was to sell certain reservation tribal "trust" lands at public auction. In 1856 and 1857, the United States breached the treaty by selling the lands privately and not at public auction. Approximately 100 years later, the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares brought separate but identical claims before the Indian Claims Commission arising out of this breach of the 1854 treaty. The Commission found that the two groups were "entitled jointly to represent the entire Delaware Tribe," Absentee Delaware Tribe of Oklahoma v. United States, 21 Ind. Cl. Comm. 344, 345 (1969), citing Delaware Tribe v. United States, 2 Ind. Cl. Comm. 253 (1952), aff'd as to parties, 130 Ct. Cl. 782, 128 F. Supp. 391 (1955), and determined that the private sales of the trust lands had realized $1,385,617.81 less than would have been realized for the tribe at public auction. The Commission awarded the tribe that sum plus interest, or a total of $9,168,171.13. 12 21 Ind. Cl. Comm., at 369-370. Congress appropriated funds to pay the award and later enacted Pub. L. 92-456 providing for its distribution. 13 [430 U.S. 73, 80] The statute limited distribution to the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares, with amounts payable determined under a formula provided in 25 U.S.C. 1294. Ten percent of the [430 U.S. 73, 81] total sum was to be set aside for the two tribal bodies, and was to be retained by the United States to the credit of the tribes, to be used in ways approved by the Secretary [430 U.S. 73, 82] of the Interior. The remaining 90% was to be divided among Cherokee Delawares whose names appeared on a "per capita payroll" described in 1292 (c) (1), and among Absentee Delawares whose names appeared on a "constructed base census roll" described in 1292 (c) (2). 14

Appellee Weeks, on behalf of all the Kansas Delawares, instituted this action against the United States, the Cherokee Delawares, the Absentee Delawares, and the Secretary of the Interior in the District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma, alleging that the exclusion of the Kansas Delawares from the distribution of the award constituted a denial of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. A three-judge court was convened. 15 The court declared, one judge dissenting, that Congress' failure to include the Kansas Delawares among those entitled to share in the award under Pub. L. 92-456 violated the Due Process Clause. The court also enjoined the Secretary of the Interior from distributing any of the appropriated funds pending amendment of the distribution provisions of the statute, or enactment of further legislation providing for distribution of the funds. Weeks v. United States, 406 F. Supp. 1309, 1346-1347 (1975). Each defendant separately appealed to this Court, the Secretary of the Interior in No. 75-1495, the Cherokee Delawares in No. 75-1301, and the Absentee Delawares in No. 75-1335. We [430 U.S. 73, 83] noted probable jurisdiction of the three appeals, 426 U.S. 933 (1976). We reverse. 16

II

Appellants differ on the issue of whether this suit presents a nonjusticiable political question because of Congress' pervasive authority, rooted in the Constitution, to control tribal property. Stated in other words, they differ on the issue of whether congressional exercise of control over tribal property is final and not subject to judicial scrutiny, since the power over distribution of tribal property has "been committed by the Constitution" to the Congress, Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 211 (1962), and since "[t]he nonjusticiability of a political question is primarily a function of the separation of powers," id., at 210. Appellants Cherokee and Absentee Delawares, citing Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U.S. 553 (1903), argue that Congress' distribution plan reflects a congressional determination not subject to scrutiny by the Judicial Branch, and that the District Court therefore erred in reaching the merits of this action. Appellant Secretary of the Interior, on the other hand, submits that the plenary power [430 U.S. 73, 84] of Congress in matters of Indian affairs "does not mean that all federal legislation concerning Indians is . . . immune from judicial scrutiny or that claims, such as those presented by [appellees], are not justiciable." Brief for Appellants in No. 75-1495, p. 19 n. 19. We agree with the Secretary of the Interior.

The statement in Lone Wolf, supra, at 565, that the power of Congress "has always been deemed a political one, not subject to be controlled by the judicial department of the government," however pertinent to the question then before the Court of congressional power to abrogate treaties, see generally Antoine v. Washington, 420 U.S. 194, 201 -204 (1975), has not deterred this Court, particularly in this day, from scrutinizing Indian legislation to determine whether it violates the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment. See, e. g., Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535 (1974). "The power of Congress over Indian affairs may be of a plenary nature; but it is not absolute." United States v. Alcea Band of Tillamooks, 329 U.S. 40, 54 (1946) (plurality opinion); see also United States v. Creek Nation, 295 U.S. 103, 109 -110 (1935); cf. United States v. Jim, 409 U.S. 80, 82 n. 3 (1972).

The question is therefore what judicial review of Pub. L. 92-456 is appropriate in light of the broad congressional power to prescribe the distribution of property of Indian tribes. The general rule emerging from our decisions ordinarily requires the judiciary to defer to congressional determination of what is the best or most efficient use for which tribal funds should be employed. Sizemore v. Brady, 235 U.S. 441, 449 (1914). Thus, Congress may choose to differentiate among groups of Indians in the same tribe in making a distribution, Simmons v. Seelatsee, 384 U.S. 209 (1966), aff'g 244 F. Supp. 808 (ED Wash. 1965), or on the other hand to expand a class of tribal beneficiaries entitled to share in royalties from tribal lands, United States v. Jim, [430 U.S. 73, 85] supra, or to devote to tribal use mineral rights under allotments that otherwise would have gone to individual allottees, Northern Cheyenne Tribe v. Hollowbreast, 425 U.S. 649 (1976). The standard of review most recently expressed is that the legislative judgment should not be disturbed "[a]s long as the special treatment can be tied rationally to the fulfillment of Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians . . . ." Morton v. Mancari, supra, at 555.

III

We are persuaded on the record before us that Congress' omission of the appellee Kansas Delawares from the distribution under Pub. L. 92-456 was "tied rationally to the fulfillment of Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians."

First, the Kansas Delawares are not a recognized tribal entity, but are simply individual Indians with no vested rights in any tribal property. Public Law 92-456 distributes tribal rather than individually owned property, for the funds were appropriated to pay an award redressing the breach of a treaty with a tribal entity, the Delaware Nation. It was that tribal entity, represented jointly in the suit before the Indian Claims Commission by the appellants Cherokee Delawares and Absentee Delawares, that suffered from the United States' breach, and both the Commission award and the appropriation by Congress were the means of compensating that tribal entity for the wrong done to it. Indeed, the Indian Claims Commission is not empowered to hear individuals' claims, but may only adjudicate claims held by an "Indian tribe, band, or other identifiable group." 25 U.S.C. 70a, 70i; see Minnesota Chippewa Tribe v. United States, 161 Ct. Cl. 258, 270-271, 315 F.2d 906, 913-914 (1963). As tribal property, the appropriated funds were subject to the exercise by Congress of its traditional broad authority over the management and distribution of lands and property held by recognized tribes, an authority "drawn both explicitly and implicitly from the Constitution itself." Morton v. Mancari, [430 U.S. 73, 86] supra, at 551-552. This authority of Congress to control tribal assets has been termed "one of the most fundamental expressions, if not the major expression, of the constitutional power of Congress over Indian affairs . . . ." F. Cohen, Handbook of Federal Indian Law 94, 97 (1942).

The ancestors of the Kansas Delawares severed their relations with the tribe when they elected under the 1866 treaty to become United States citizens entitled to participate in tribal assets only to the extent of their "just proportion . . . of the cash value of the credits of said tribe . . . then held in trust by the United States." (Emphasis supplied.) We cannot say that the decision of Congress to exclude the descendants of individual Delaware Indians who ended their tribal membership and took their proportionate share of tribal property as constituted more than a century ago, and to distribute the appropriated funds only to members of or persons closely affiliated with the Cherokee and Absentee Delaware Tribes, was not "tied rationally to the fulfillment of Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians."

Second, the exclusion of the Kansas Delawares under Pub. L. 92-456 was not their first exclusion from participation in a distribution of tribal assets. In 1904 Congress appropriated $150,000 to settle claims of the Delaware Tribe of Indians, one of them arising out of another injustice done to the Delawares under the 1854 treaty, unrelated to the breach which forms the basis for the distribution under Pub. L. 92-456. 17 See United States v. Delaware Tribe of Indians, 192 Ct. Cl. 385, 403-405, 427 F.2d 1218, 1229-1230 (1970). The 1904 Act directed the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the settlement to the tribe known in this suit as the Cherokee Delawares "as said tribe shall in council direct," thereby excluding both [430 U.S. 73, 87] Absentee and Kansas Delawares. 33 Stat. 189, 222. This distribution was limited to the Cherokee Delawares although it was compensation, inter alia, for a wrong to the Delawares in 1854, before the Kansas Delawares split off from the tribe. Some Kansas Delawares unsuccessfully sought to participate in the distribution but, as noted by the District Court in this case, "were denied participation on grounds similar to some of those argued in the present case." 406 F. Supp., at 1321 n. 15. The Comptroller of the Treasury concluded that "[m]anifestly [the Kansas Delawares] were not entitled to participate in the distribution of annuities or other funds due or belonging to the Delaware tribe" for:

> "The provision in the [A]ct of April 21, 1904, supra, authorizes and directs payment to the `Delaware tribe of Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation, as said tribe shall in council direct' . . . . The proviso immediately following the appropriation in the [A]ct emphasizes the clear indication that the appropriation was made for the tribe as distinguished from the Delaware Indians who had severed their tribal relations and become citizens of the United States." 11 Comp. Dec. 496, 500 (1905) (emphasis in original).

While this precedent of excluding the Kansas Delawares from the 1904 distribution does not of itself legitimate their exclusion from the present distribution statute, their earlier exclusion nevertheless indicates that Congress has historically distinguished them from the Cherokee Delawares in distributing an award based in part on a breach of the very treaty involved in this litigation.

Third, Congress deliberately limited the distribution under Pub. L. 92-456 to the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares because of substantial problems it apprehended might attend a wider distribution. H. R. 5200, the bill originally introduced to distribute the funds, had contained a "catchall" clause authorizing distribution "to include the names of all [430 U.S. 73, 88] persons born on or prior to and living on the date of this Act who are lineal descendants of members of the Delaware Tribe as it existed in 1854 . . . ." 18 This catchall would have been analogous to a clause in a 1968 statute distributing funds to compensate the Delaware Tribe for the United States' inadequate payment to them when they were moved off their Indiana lands in 1818. 19 Under the 1968 catchall clause, all lineal descendants of the tribe as it existed in 1818 were permitted to share in the distribution, 25 U.S.C. 1181 (d), and about 300 Kansas Delawares were thereby allowed to participate in the distribution of the award redressing the 1818 wrong.

The omission of the catchall provision from Pub. L. 92-456, as finally enacted, followed legislative hearings at which the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares testified. At these hearings they directed Congress' attention to problems that had arisen when Munsee Indians, in addition to the Kansas Delawares, had claimed eligibility under the catchall provision of the 1968 statute. 20 Because of a dispute over the eligibility of the Munsees to participate under the catchall clause, there had been inordinate delays in the distribution of the funds. Indeed, as late as 1972 many of the Munsees' claims [430 U.S. 73, 89] were still unresolved, and distribution under the 1968 statute was virtually paralyzed. Hearings on H. R. 5200 before the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, 92d Cong., 2d Sess., 12, 22, 59, 79, 97, 105-106, 113 (Mar. 13, 1972) (unpublished).

We recognize, as did the District Court, that Congress omitted the catchall provision from the present statute in order to avoid a repetition of the problems with the Munsees, and that Congress was not "made aware that the limitation of distribution to [the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares] would exclude a group which had lived on the Kansas Delaware lands and which could trace their Delaware descendancy as the Kansas Delawares do." 406 F. Supp., at 1332. 21 But we do not conclude from Congress' ignorance of the effect of the elimination of the catchall on the Kansas Delawares that the statute is therefore irrational. Congress chose to limit distribution of the award to the Cherokee and the Absentee Delawares, in whose names the Delawares' claims had been prosecuted before the Indian Claims Commission, and whom the Commission had found to represent the interests of all the Delawares. Regardless of Congress' knowledge of the effect of this limitation on the Kansas Delawares, we cannot say that the congressional choice, though predicated upon the Munsee experience under the 1968 statute, does not rationally support its decision to avoid undue delay, administrative difficulty, and potentially unmeritorious claims by distributing the award only to the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares. 22 [430 U.S. 73, 90]

IV

Our conclusion that the exclusion of the Kansas Delawares from distribution under Pub. L. 92-456 does not offend the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment of course does not preclude Congress from revising the distribution scheme to include the Kansas Delawares. The distribution authorized by Pub. L. 92-456 has not yet occurred, and Congress has the power to revise its original allocation. United States v. Jim, 409 U.S., at 82 -83.

The District Court made no finding as to the Cherokee Delawares' status as a recognized tribe, but it is clear that Congress, prior to the enactment of the statute, had dealt with the [430 U.S. 73, 78] Cherokee Delawares as a distinct entity. See, e. g., Act of 1904, 21, 33 Stat. 222, providing for payments to "the Delaware tribe of Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation, as said tribe shall in council direct . . ."; 43 Stat. 812; 44 Stat. 1358; and 49 Stat. 1459, amending 43 Stat. 812.

Under an 1874 treaty, however, the minor children were all granted citizenship in the United States, and were granted land on the same terms as their parents. 18 Stat. 146, 175. The District Court found that the 1874 treaty eliminated the necessity for an election by the children. 406 F. Supp., at 1320.

[Footnote 11] Appellees stated at oral argument in this Court that a Kansas Delaware, Mr. Joe Bartles, was prominently involved in prosecuting the Delawares' claims before the Indian Claims Commission, that two Kansas Delawares had served as members of the (Cherokee) Delaware Tribal Business Committee, and that the Business Committee in 1952 adopted a resolution recognizing a number of Kansas Delawares as entitled to share in Delaware lands. Tr. of Oral Arg. 59-61. There were apparently no Kansas Delawares on the Business Committee during Congress' deliberations on the statute to distribute the award to redress the breach of the 1854 treaty.

[Footnote 12] It is not disputed that the credits "then held in trust by the United States" which were distributed proportionately to the Kansas Delawares under the 1866 treaty included the amount received by the United States when it sold the trust lands privately rather than at public auction. We may assume that compliance by the United States with its promise to sell the lands at public auction would have meant that the sum paid to each Kansas Delaware who bought out of the tribe would have been larger.

The [430 U.S. 73, 81] funds so apportioned to the Absentee Delaware Tribe of Western Oklahoma shall be placed to the credit of the tribe in the United States Treasury and shall be used in the following manner: 90 per centum of such funds shall be distributed in equal shares to each person enrolled pursuant to section 1292 (c) (2) of this title, and 10 per centum shall remain to the credit of the tribe in the United States Treasury, and may be advanced, expended, invested, or reinvested for any purpose that is authorized by the tribal governing body and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. "(b) The funds not apportioned to the Absentee Delaware Tribe of Western Oklahoma shall be placed to the credit of the Delaware Tribe of Indians in the United States Treasury and shall be used in the following manner: 90 per centum of such funds shall be distributed in equal shares to each person enrolled pursuant to section 1292 (c) (1) of this title, and 10 per centum shall remain to the credit of the tribe in the United States Treasury and may be advanced, expended, invested, or reinvested for any purpose that is authorized by the tribal governing body: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not approve the use of the funds remaining to the credit of the tribe until the tribe has organized a legal entity which in the judgment of the Secretary adequately protects the interests of its members." 1295: "Sums payable to living enrollees age eighteen or older or to heirs or legatees of deceased enrollees age eighteen or older shall be paid directly to such persons. Sums payable to enrollees or their heirs or legatees who are under age eighteen or who are under legal disability other than minority shall be paid in accordance with such procedures, including the establishment of trusts, as the Secretary of the Interior determines appropriate to protect the best interests of such persons." 1296: "None of the funds distributed per capita under the provisions of sections 1291 to 1297 of this title shall be subject to Federal or State income taxes." 1297: "The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of sections 1291 to 1297 of this title."

[Footnote 14] So defined, Cherokee Delawares eligible to share in the distribution must necessarily be members of the tribal entity as presently constituted. Absentee Delawares eligible to share in the award, on the other hand, are defined somewhat more broadly, so that some nonmembers of the tribe are eligible under the statute.

[Footnote 15] A similar action in the District Court for the Northern District of Oklahoma was consolidated with appellee Weeks' suit in the District Court below, and the appeals to this Court are from the decision in the consolidated cases.

[Footnote 16] The United States, also joined as a party defendant, was dismissed from the suit on the ground that it had not consented to the action. No appeal was taken to this Court from that dismissal. Appellees also filed an appeal from the District Court judgment which is pending as Weeks v. Andrus, No. 75-1328. Their complaint asserted that 25 U.S.C. 1181-1186 (relating to the 1818 treaty) and 1291-1297 (1970 ed., Supp. V) (relating to the 1854 treaty) violated the Fifth Amendment's Due Process and Just Compensation Clauses; 1181-1186, because the Cherokee Delaware class was wrongfully included in the proposed distribution under that statute; and 1291-1297, because the Kansas Delaware class was wrongfully excluded and the Cherokee and Absentee Delaware classes wrongfully included in that statute's distribution. The District Court held that neither statute was unconstitutional by reason of the inclusion of the Cherokee Delaware and the Absentee Delaware classes. It is from this aspect of the District Court's decision that the appeal in No. 75-1328 is taken. In light of today's decision, the judgment of the District Court in that respect is affirmed.

[Footnote 17] The claims had been brought by the Cherokee Delawares under a 1902 Act, 32 Stat. 716, 726, which, inter alia, gave jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear claims brought by the "Cherokee tribe, or any band thereof . . . against the United States."

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, with whom THE CHIEF JUSTICE joins, concurring in part and concurring in the result.

I join Parts I and II of the Court's opinion, but otherwise I concur only in the result.

For me, the reversal of the District Court's judgment is not a result that is so inevitable and so easily and smoothly reached as a reading of Part III of the Court's opinion makes it appear. The Court's justifications for exclusion of the Kansas Delawares are not very persuasive. The first - favoritism toward tribal Indians - is undermined by the fact that Absentee Delawares who are not members of that tribe nevertheless are entitled to participate. Ante, at 82 n. 14. The second - exclusion from a prior distribution - is troublesome because it is difficult for me to see how perceived prior unfair treatment buttresses further unfairness. And I wonder about the statement, ante, at 87, that Congress "has historically [430 U.S. 73, 91] distinguished" the Kansas Delawares from the Cherokee Delawares in distributing tribal awards, when in fact both participated in the 1968 allocation that Congress authorized for the Delawares. The third justification - administrative convenience in eliminating the catchall clause - may have some weight. But, as the opinion acknowledges, ante, at 88-89, there was no problem with the Kansas Delawares in the distribution of the 1968 award; the administrative difficulty was only with the Munsees.

Nevertheless, having said all this, I am not persuaded that the Court errs in its conclusion. For me, the case is one of that rare type in which the argument on each side is not at all strong. With the litigation in this lukewarm posture, I conclude that we must acknowledge that there necessarily is a large measure of arbitrariness in distributing an award for a century-old wrong. One could regard the distribution as a windfall for whichever beneficiaries are now favored. In light of the difficulty in determining appropriate standards for the selection of those who are to receive the benefits, I cannot say that the distribution directed by the Congress is unreasonable and constitutionally impermissible. Congress must have a large measure of flexibility in allocating Indian awards, and what it has done here is not beyond the constitutional pale.

MR. JUSTICE STEVENS, dissenting.

At the outset of these proceedings the Indian Claims Commission noted that in accordance with the Indian Claims Commission Act any recovery for a breach of the treaties of 1829 and 1854 "must be for the benefit of all the descendants of the Delaware Nation as constituted in 1829 and 1854," Delaware Tribe of Indians v. United States, 2 Ind. Cl. Comm. 253, 270-271 (1952). 1 In due course the Commission found [430 U.S. 73, 92] that the 1854 treaty had been breached in 1856 and 1857 when the United States disposed of the tribal lands in Kansas by private, not public, sale for about half their fair value. The opinion accompanying the judgment of the Commission reiterated that the named plaintiffs "were entitled jointly to represent the entire Delaware Tribe," Absentee Delaware Tribe of Oklahoma v. United States, 21 Ind. Cl. Comm. 344, 345 (1969). Thereafter, Congress appropriated the amount required by the judgment, 83 Stat. 447, 453, and adopted the distribution statute at issue here, which was intended to satisfy that judgment, 25 U.S.C. 1291-1297 (1970 ed., Supp. V).

Appellees, the "Kansas Delawares," are members of the class represented by the plaintiffs in the Indian Claims Commission proceeding. 2 There is no question about the fact that they are actual lineal descendants of members of the Delaware Tribe of 1854. Nor is there any question about the fact that their exclusion from the distribution statute is the consequence of a malfunction of the legislative process rather than a deliberate choice by Congress. At the urging of appellants Congress adopted an amendment to the bill in order to be sure that descendants of the Munsees - who had not been members of the Delaware Tribe since prior to 1818 - would not participate in the award. Unfortunately, the amendment had the unintended consequence of also excluding the Kansas Delawares, whose ancestors were members of [430 U.S. 73, 93] the tribe in 1854 and who suffered precisely the same wrong as those whose descendants will share in the award on a per capita basis. 3

These facts are undisputed. They make it perfectly clear that the special treatment of the Kansas Delawares does not in fact represent any rational attempt at "fulfillment of Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians . . . ." Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 555 . I think it is equally clear that each of the three hypothetical justifications for the exclusion [430 U.S. 73, 94] of the Kansas Delawares advanced by the majority merely emphasizes the lack of any rational explanation for the legislative malfunction because each of the justifications would, if valid, require a different classification.

First, it is suggested that the Kansas Delawares were properly excluded because they terminated their membership in the tribe before the claim was reduced to judgment. But so did the Cherokees. They ceased being members of the Delaware Tribe in 1867, when they joined the Cherokee Nation. 4 Moreover, some of those who would share in the distribution on behalf of the Absentee Delawares are not members of that tribe. 5 Resignation from the tribe after the time of the wrong does not provide a consistent basis for treating the Kansas Delawares differently from the Cherokees or the Absentees. 6 [430 U.S. 73, 95]

Second, it is pointed out that the Kansas Delawares did not participate in the $150,000 distribution appropriated by Congress in 1904 to settle a claim arising out of another breach of the 1854 treaty. But neither did the Absentee Delawares. The reason is perfectly clear. The claim involved in that settlement had been asserted pursuant to a special provision in a Cherokee allotment statute designed to resolve all claims which "the Cherokee tribe, or any band thereof, . . . may have against the United States . . . ." 32 Stat. 726. Obviously, only the Cherokee Delawares could qualify as a band of the Cherokee Tribe. That precedent does not provide any basis for treating the Kansas Delawares differently from the Absentee Delawares, or for differentiating among Delawares in a proceeding brought on behalf of all descendants of the Delaware Nation as constituted in 1829 and 1854. 7 [430 U.S. 73, 96]

Third, it is said that the amendment excluding the Kansas Delawares from the award is valid because (a) it was intended to exclude the Munsees, and (b) there were valid reasons for excluding the Munsees. The Munsees were the object of special legislative concern because the processing of their claims under a 1968 distribution statute had created administrative burdens and delay. They were properly excluded because their ancestors were not members of the tribe when the wrong occurred. Neither of these reasons has any relevance to the Kansas Delawares. They are admittedly lineal descendants of victims of the wrong and they had shared in the 1968 award in such an orderly manner that Congress was not even aware of their separate status. It is thus ironic - perhaps even perverse - to justify the special treatment of the Kansas Delawares by including them in a class whose other members were properly excluded from the award for reasons which have no application whatsoever to the Kansas Delawares. Because the Kansas Delawares were so administratively inoffensive that they literally became invisible they will fail to share in the distribution as a result of a decision to avoid administrative difficulty.

The statutory exclusion of the Kansas Delawares from any share in the fund appropriated to pay a judgment in favor of a class to which they belong is manifestly unjust and arbitrary. Neither the actual explanation, nor any of the hypothetical explanations, is "tied rationally to the fulfillment of Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians." But having said all this, I must confront the ultimate question whether the statute is therefore unconstitutional. [430 U.S. 73, 97]

Improbable as the possibility seems, I am not prepared to say that if Congress had actually reviewed the status of the Kansas Delawares, it might not have found some principled basis for treating them differently from other Delawares. And it is clear that the discrimination, far from evidencing actual discriminatory intent, is the consequence of a legislative accident, perhaps caused by nothing more than the unfortunate fact that Congress is too busy to do all of its work as carefully as it should. I must also acknowledge that Congress followed accepted legislative procedures in enacting the statute. Finally, I am most reluctant to suggest that the constitutionality of legislation should turn on the actual motivation, or the lack thereof, of the legislators who participated in the legislative process. Perhaps, therefore, the Court is following a wise course in declining to intervene in an area where the greatest deference is due Congress.

Nevertheless, four considerations persuade me that this legislative classification is invalid. First, the members of the class whose rights were adjudicated by the Indian Claims Commission have more than an ordinary interest in equal treatment. 8 Second, there is no need for any discrimination at all within this class of litigants; this, therefore, is not a case in which the need to draw some line may justify the otherwise arbitrary character of the particular line which has been drawn. 9 Third, no principled justification for the particular [430 U.S. 73, 98] discrimination against the Kansas Delawares has been identified. And fourth, there is no reason to believe that the discrimination is the product of an actual legislative choice. 10 Under these circumstances I conclude that there has been a deprivation of property without the "due process of lawmaking" that the Fifth Amendment guarantees. 11

[Footnote 1] Aff'd as to parties, 130 Ct. Cl. 782, 128 F. Supp. 391 (1955). The Commission relied on a contemporaneous holding of the Court of Claims to [430 U.S. 73, 92] the same effect, McGhee v. Creek Nation, 122 Ct. Cl. 380, 388, 392, 396 (1952), cert. denied, 344 U.S. 856 . That court, charged by statute with interpreting the Indian Claims Commission Act and reviewing the actions of the Commission, 25 U.S.C. 70s, continues to adhere to this view: "[T]he ancestral group `owns' the claim, and present-day Indian groups are before the Commission only on behalf of the ancestral entity." Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians v. United States, 203 Ct. Cl. 426, 458, 490 F.2d 935, 954 (1974).

[Footnote 2] Indeed, a Kansas Delaware was chairman of the plaintiffs' business committee when the suit was filed in the Indian Claims Commission in 1951. Brief for Appellees 22.

[Footnote 3] The words "Kansas Delaware" do not appear in the legislative history of 25 U.S.C. 1291-1297 (1970 ed., Supp. V). The court below noted: "There is evidence in our record that at least some of the Cherokee and Absentee Delawares, themselves, were unaware of the existence of the Kansas Delawares at the time they testified before Congress. Mr. Townsend, the chairman of the Delaware Tribal Business Committee (Cherokee Delaware) and one of the principal witnesses before Congress urging the adoption of a distribution scheme utilizing only the 1906 and 1940 rolls, testified in the course of this litigation that he was unaware of the existence of the Kansas Delawares . . . ." Weeks v. United States, 406 F. Supp. 1309, 1331 n. 29 (WD Okla. 1975). The District Court conducted an extensive review of the legislative history, id., at 1330-1332, 1347-1351, and concluded: "[T]he Congress was specifically requested by the Absentee Delawares and the Cherokee Delawares to delete the catchall provision [under which respondents would have claimed], and that Congress made the decision in response to the urging of those groups. On the record before us, we find that neither Congress nor its committees were made aware that the limitation . . . would exclude a group which had lived on the Kansas Delaware lands and which could trace their Delaware descendancy as the Kansas Delawares do. Instead the focus was on the Munsee Indian groups, including the Christian Indians, and paramount consideration was given to the Munsee situation in considering the proposed change in the distribution statute. ". . . It is distributing that the Congress was apparently not aware of the Kansas Delaware group and we are persuaded that it was not the intent of Congress to exclude a group such as the Kansas Delawares from the distribution." Id., at 1332. In view of these undisputed findings it is also disturbing that the majority refers to a congressional "decision" to exclude the Kansas Delawares, ante, at 86.

[Footnote 4] Articles of Agreement between the Cherokee Nation and the Delaware Tribe, Apr. 8, 1867, quoted in the Statement of the Case in Cherokee Nation v. Journeycake, 155 U.S. 196, 199 -202. The agreement states, in part: "`On the fulfilment by the Delawares of the foregoing stipulations, all the members of the tribe registered as above provided, shall become members of the Cherokee Nation, with the same rights and immunities, and the same participation (and no other) in the national funds as native Cherokees, save as hereinbefore provided. "`And the children hereafter born of such Delawares so incorporated into the Cherokee Nation, shall in all respects be regarded as native Cherokee.'" Id., at 202. Aspects of the status of the Cherokee Delawares were adjudicated in Journeycake and in Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U.S. 127 . To be sure the Cherokee Delawares have recently reconstituted themselves as a recognized Indian tribe. This did not occur, however, until 1974, two years after Congress acted on the legislation in question.

[Footnote 5] A person must have at least one-eighth Delaware blood in order to be recognized as a member of the Absentee Delaware Tribe. No such limitation exists as to the Absentee section of the distribution statute, 25 U.S.C. 1292 (c) (2) (1970 ed., Supp. V). Weeks v. United States, 406 F. Supp. 1309, 1339 n. 40.

[Footnote 6] It would be manifestly unjust to read the treaty of 1866, which led [430 U.S. 73, 95] to the resignation of the Kansas Delawares, as providing an affirmative justification for depriving their descendants of their rightful share of the recovery based on the proceeds that should have been obtained from the sale of the tribal lands in 1856 and 1857. The 1866 treaty expressly provided that upon becoming a citizen of the United States each member was "entitled to receive a patent in fee-simple, with power of alienation, for the land heretofore allotted to him, and his just proportion, in cash or in bonds, of the cash value of the credits of said tribe, principal and interest, then held in trust by the United States . . . ." 14 Stat. 796. The 1866 treaty was plainly intended to give the Kansas Delawares their proportionate interest in the proceeds of the sales made pursuant to the 1854 treaty. It is true that those proceeds were only about half as large as they would have been if the United States had fulfilled its treaty obligation, and I recognize that the unknown claim for the balance of the fair value of the tribal land was not technically "then held in trust by the United States." But surely it was the intention of the parties to the 1866 treaty to give the Kansas Delawares their fair share of the credits which should have been on the books as a result of the sale of tribal property as well as their share of the actual credits. See the discussion below, 406 F. Supp., at 1337 n. 39, and accompanying text.

[Footnote 7] The more relevant precedent is the 1968 statute distributing the proceeds of the award based on the breach of the 1818 treaty, ante, at 88. All Delawares, including the Kansas Delawares, who traced their ancestry [430 U.S. 73, 96] to membership in the tribe in 1818, participated in that award. That award, like this one, but unlike the 1904 appropriation, was in satisfaction of an Indian Claims Commission judgment. Thus the more recent and more relevant congressional precedent supports inclusion of the Kansas Delawares, not exclusion.

[Footnote 8] The fact that the legislative action under review is the culmination of a quasi-judicial proceeding brought on behalf of the entire class distinguishes this legislation from policy decisions of general applicability. Cf. Eastlake v. Forest City Enterprises, Inc., 426 U.S. 668, 680 (1976) (STEVENS, J., dissenting). Moreover, "`Congress' unique obligation toward the Indians,'" ante, at 85, surely includes a special responsibility to deal fairly with similarly situated Indians.

I see one of my family members posted a comment below. Thanks to her I have been learning much about my Native American heritage. Thank you Jackie... I am a proud member of the Sears family from Bartlesville OK and would like to learn more about our ancestors. I am concerned with some of the things I read however. There was something I had read once in a posting from teh Lenape tribe in PA. It seems as though they cannot get PA to recognize them as a tribe because they don't want them to open up casinos. My understanding is that the Lenape tribe is against gambling (religous reasons according to the posting) What they are seeking is benefits etc.. I'm not quite sure cause I don't know much about politics, but I'd like to learn more about what is going on. I can't find the posting I had read. Is anyone aware of where I can find more information about this. Also, is this what's happening to the Delaware Tribe in OK? Will the benefits still be available to those who have roll numbers?

Hi there - My name appears near the bottom of the genealogical list, perhaps 8th generation. I was very interested to find that a number of my mother's relatives also live in Oakland, CA. Her father was Delbert Paul Ray. I can provide more information on our side of the family if someone is willing to contact me.

Comments: Wanishi Chris & Staff, I just discovered your web site, and literally sat down and cried! I have been researching (or attempting to) my family's Lenape/Delaware history for more than a decade now, yet still have only bits and pieces and wonder if I will ever find the complete story of our ancestry. The main line I have been working on is the Hickman family. Although I have just barely skimmed your site, I did notice there were Hickman individuals listed in more than one place. I will be watching for your updates, etc., and hope to use your site often in order to help pull together the many Hickman relations who are also interested in their Lenape ancestry. Just a few of the allied family lines include Keeling, Helms, Kinneer, Fry, Ketchum, Beals, and many more. Again, thank you very much for putting forth a tremendous effort in order to bring all of this together. If there is any way that I can help, please let me know. Best Regards, Jan Helms Hendricks (Jecasse@aol.com)

Wonderful site from what I have seen so far. I congratulate you on informing people on the Delawares and our history. I am from the Turtle Clan and a descendent of Captain Falleaf. My grandfather was Richard Falleaf Sr. We have the Delaware Pow-Wow every Memorial Day weekend in Copan, Oklahoma. I would like to take this opportunity to let everyone know we have lost two of our elders within this past month. The first being Leonard Thompson who was 98 years old. He spoke and understood our language extremely well and was our Ceremonial Chief. The second being Fred Falleaf who owned the land where we have our pow-wow who passed on due to cancer. They will be greatly missed during 2003 activities.

Comments: What a wonderful website. I am so happy to see the listings for cemeteries. Has anyone information on the Killbuck family? I am descended from Gelelemend (alias William Henry Killbuck) a Delaware Chief during the Revolutionary War. He became a member of the Moravian Mission of David Zeisberger in 1789. He is buried in the Cemetery in Goshen, Ohio. Has anyone looked at the Moravian Cemeteries? There is one in Ottawa, Kansas with a lot of Delaware buried there. Also at Goshen, Oh. At Willow Springs Cemetery in Ketchum, a lot of my family are buried their that are Delaware. Gelelemend's great granddaughter is buried there along with several of her children and grandchildren. Some of the surnames are Marker, Rogers, Warner, Davis, Dietrick, Woodall. Has anyone run across William Henry Killbuck who died in at Leavenworth, Kansas in 1852? He is my ggggrandfather. I would love any information.

Comments: Though we are thoughtlessly not recognized in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and in Washington DC, we are still here in Lenapehoking as 'caretakers' of the Earth Mother and of each other. Many of us here are not 'full-blooded', but we are still Lenape, regardless of the infamous BIA 'regulations' which arrogantly decides who's Indian and who isn't. The 'blood quantum' games are the invention of a Government agency that has (for years) mismanaged the funds that they are responsible to hold in "trust". They are the parasitic bunch that issue BIA registration cards (dog licenses) to whom they determine is Indian. Their questionable agenda to commit cultural genocide, is well known to thinking non-Indians who are becoming more 'educated' about the matter. As long as there is self-determination among all American Indian people (regardless of blood quantum) then we have the means to survive spiritually, culturally and economically. "As long as there is 'one to dance',' one to sing', 'one to speak' and one to listen', life will go on."

Comments: After speaking with a great aunt, I got a lot of information on who I am looking for. I am hoping to make some phone calls in the morning, and get more information, now that I have more to go on. Here is what I found out, and what I am looking for.... The woman I am looking for is full blooded Native American. She had a son Norman Earl Lewis. This is what I know about her & her son. If anyone knows how to fill in the gaps, I would be most appreciative. My great great great grandmother had Norman Earl Lewis in Burlington or Mercer County, NJ. We are in question of who his father was, if any was around. We assume that Lewis was the mother's maiden name which she gave to her son. The father is said to be partial Native American, but we know nothing about him. My great great great grandmother then married a man of the last name Slimm who resided in Burlington, NJ. Norman Earl Lewis (my great great grandfather) looked very American Indian. He is very handsome in his pictures. He married Emma W. Pennington & lived in both Smithville, NJ & Trenton, NJ. He died spring 1968. He is buried in The Pemberton Baptist Cemetery in Pemberton, NJ. His funeral arrangements were made by Lankenau Funeral Home in Browns Mills, NJ. It was then called Miles Funeral Home. I am hoping if I call Mercer or Burlington County, they can give me Norman Earl Lewis's birth date and mother's name from his certificate. Than I will have my great great great grandmother's name. I assume that she wasn't part of a tribe because she remained in NJ after 1900s when most Indians relocated to reservations. But she had to have had parents, siblings, cousin who relocated & became reservation members. I know I have long lost cousins out there!!! I can't wait to find them!. I assume it would be the Lewis family. I am trying very very hard. If anyone has any clues, please help! mtribit@home.com

HISTORY

The Lenape-Delaware Origin in Modern History

(From Algonquians of the East Coast, recommended reading for all, with beautiful illustrations)

Map showing the migration route of the Delaware and Munsee Indians. Many Munsee settled in Ontario, Canada and in Wisconsin and Kansas. Large numbers of Lenape finally settled in Oklahoma, following stops in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, and Kansas. The dates are indicated on the map. The "Absentee Delaware," now the Delaware Tribe of Western Oklahoma, veered southwestward' from settlements in Arkansas and Texas, they finally relocated near Anadarko, Oklahoma. One group, the Kansas or Citizen Delaware elected to remain in Kansas.

Yes, to the end.
Will the day's journey take the whole long day?

The Early Contact Period--1500 to 1829

At the time of first contact with the Europeans, the Lenape people were residing along the Middle Atlantic coast in parts of the present day states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and New York.[1] The Europeans gave varying names to these Algonquian-speaking people, but after 1700 the colonists eventually adopted the name "Delaware Indians" after the middle band of the tribe which resided along the banks of the Delaware River. The name Delaware comes from Thomas West, de la Warr, an early governor of Virginia. The state of Delaware was named as were the Lenape who lived there. The Indians have always identified themselves as the Lenape, meaning the original people. All of the Algonquian tribes respectfully referred to the Lenape as the "Grandfather" tribe.[2]

When the Europeans arrived, the Delaware were living in three contiguous territorial areas, defined primarily by the dialect. The central group, the Unami (people down the river), resided on the middle Delaware River, controlling nearly all of New Jersey, parts of Pennsylvania and the lower Hudson River; the Munsee or Monsey (people of the stone country occupied the northern territory on the Lower Hudson River and the Upper Delaware River; the Unalachtigo (people who live near the sea) resided to the south.[3] The Unami, Munsee, and Unalachtigo territories were further subdivided by smaller communities or villages. Although of distinct dialect, all three groups shared common lineage, customs, and political decisions.[4] The Unami group ultimately emerged as the main body of the Delaware Tribe.[5] Though during their removals to the west, many of the Munsee broke off and migrated in to New York, Wisconsin, and Canada, identification and communications with the main Delaware Tribe were maintained.[6] The Unalachtigo were eventually absorbed by the Unami during the removals.[7]

Prior to their removal from the east coast, the political structures of the Delaware were highly decentralized.[8] Each village or community appeared to have its own leaders or chief who acted independent of the others; yet, sufficient cohesion existed among all the villages of the three groups that the Europeans recognized them as one people.[9] In addition, the Delaware groups acted in concert during hunting drives, for collective defense, and in relations with other tribes.[10] Although egalitarianism dominated the tribal organization and decisions of the tribe were made collectively in general council, the various villages also had chiefs and councils.[11] The chiefs, however, were limited by the advice of councils and the elders; their authority flowed only from them power to persuade, and a less than persuasive chief would be replaced.[12] hen a singular voice was necessary, the chief with seniority, or commanding the most respect, would act as head chief on behalf of all the leaders.[13] In times of war, a war chief would also be selected based on his proven abilities in battle.[14] Though decentralized, the Delaware nevertheless maintained an interwoven social and political cohesion through membership in matrilineal clans.[15]

First recorded contact with the Europeans is believed to pre-date the sixteenth century. For the Delaware, the arrival of Europeans initially meant a new source for the fur trade. However, as the Swedes, the Dutch, and the English began to battle over control of the Mid-Atlantic coast, the Delaware felt the pressures to move west.[16] In the late 1600s, many of the Delaware villages were already migrating west to the Ohio River Valley.[17] By 1751, the majority of the tribe had settled in eastern Ohio at the request of the Wyandot.[18] In 1770, still more of the tribe's villages moved to lands on the White River in Indiana at the invitation of the Miami and Piankashaw Indians.[19] Yet another small band of Delaware moved to Cape Girardeau in southern Missouri in 1793, and settled in a tract of land which had been granted to them by the Spanish.[20] This "Absentee Delaware" band later migrated to Arkansas. Texas, and Western Oklahoma, and today comprise the federally-recognized Delaware Tribe of Western Oklahoma.[21] Under the Treaty of Greenville in 1795, the main body of Delaware relinquished their claim to land in Ohio and moved to Indiana to join the rest of the tribe on the White River."[22]

Increasingly weary of the problems associated with white settlement, the tribe agreed under the Treaty of St. Mary's of 1818 to relinquish all their claims to the lands in Indiana in exchange for new lands west of the Mississippi River.[23] Pursuant to the 1818 treaty, the tribe was moved to southwestern Missouri; however, the Delaware found the area unsuitable due to poor natural resources and increasing hostilities with other tribes. The tribe therefore entered a supplemental treaty in 1829 which provided for the Delaware removed to a new, permanent, reservation in northeastern present Kansas on the north bank of the Kansas River between Lawrence and Leavenworth.[24]

By the early nineteenth century, the Delaware tribe of the west scarcely resembled the peaceful and prosperous Lenape people of the east. Two-hundred years of forced removals, disease, acculturation, and wars had ravaged the social, religious, and political structures of the Delaware.[25] Of the estimated 20,000 Lenape people occupying the east coast,[26] only 2,000 Delaware were accounted for in the removal from Indiana to Missouri.[27] The Delaware societal structures had deteriorated almost beyond recognition. A natural response to the chaos was the development of centralized authority in a head chief.[28] In 1778, the matrilineal clans of the Wolf, the Turtle, and the Turkey, re-emerged to dominate the political organization of the tribe.[29] Each of the clans were represented by a chief. and of the three chiefs, the "first-among-equals" served as head chief.[30] Of primary significance, was the ascendancy of Kik-Tha-We-Nund (William Anderson) of the Turtle Clan to head chief in 1806.[31] Chief Anderson wished to unite his scattered people, revive the traditional ways, and settle them far beyond the influences if white civilization.[32] Anderson recognized that the centuries of removal and acculturation had broken the spirit of his people; the only possible hope for his tribe was to move as far west as [possible where the tribe could heal from the upsetting influence of the white world In particular, Chief Anderson opposed the work of missionaries who sought to further alienate his people from the tribe.[33]

By 1831, Anderson led the nucleus of the tribe to Kansas, and continued to try to bring the other alienated Delaware settlements in Ohio, Canada, Arkansas, and Texas to the new reservation to join the tribe.[34] Chief Anderson did have some success in reuniting the fragmented tribe; however, the great chief died soon after the removal to Kansas and did not get to fully realize his goal of total reunification.

The Kansas Experience. 1829-1866

Under the supplemental Treaty of 1829, the tribe was resettled on the forks of the Kansas and Missouri Rivers on a reservation which covered some two million acres.[35] Before his death, Chief Anderson had made progress in revitalizing the tribe, enabling the Delaware to again stand as the "grandfather" tribe among the removed eastern tribes.[36]

The Delaware political structures remained much the same during the early years in Kansas. However, throughout the nineteenth century the Indian agents of the Delaware agency increasingly sought to undermine the ways of the traditionalist in order to better control the tribe. After the death of the great Chief Anderson in 1832, the next "first among equals" of the clan chiefs to ascend to head chief was William Patterson.[37] The tribe's clan chiefs or sub-chiefs included Captain Ketchum of the Turtle Clan, Na-coman (Nat Coming) of the Wolf Clan, Ka-cock-ta-wha (Big Man) of the Turkey Clan.[38] Nat Coming of the Wolf Clan succeeded Patterson as the "first among equals" to head chief in 1839.[39] In 1849, Captain Ketchum, (Turtle) succeeded Nat Coming to head chief, the chiefs of the clans then included, Anderson Sarcoxie (Turtle), Ne-con-he-cond (Wolf), and Ka-cock-ta-wa (Turkey).[40]

Upon the death of Captain Ketchum in 1857, one of these three clan chiefs should have succeeded to head chief; however, the tribes U. S. agent intervened and requested that the government recognize Ketchum's successor to the Turtle Clan, James Conner (grandson to Chief Anderson), as head chief.[41] James Conner refused, however, claiming that the tribe would not accept him as head chief, but suggested that his estranged brother, John Conner, might agree to the government's proposition.[42] Indian agent B.F. Robinson wrote to the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, stating, "...I would be pleased the Indian Department would authorize me to treat him [John Conner] as principal chief."[43] John Conner, residing for some thirty years away from the tribe, agreed to the government's proposal and returned to Kansas to take his position as head chief, agreed to the government's proposal and returned to Kansas to take his position as head chief; apparently, his appointment was meant to bring some "civilized" influences to the tribe.[44]

During this period, the U. S. Indian agents found the Christian elements of the tribe more palatable and began to undermine the traditional leaders actions in favor of the minority Christian element. Of primary significance was the U. S. appointment of the mixed-blood, Christian convert Charles Journeycake to Chief of the Turkey Clan in 1861.[45] It is clear that the tribal leaders did not accept Journeycake as easily as the appointment of John Conner. Under tribal law, Journeycake could not even be a member of the clans because his mother was not a Delaware;[46] all clan membership and privileges were derived from matrilineal descendence. The tribe's cool reception to this intrusion in evidenced in the signatures of the Treaty of 1861, wherein Journeycake signs last, without any designation as chief or tribal delegate. The Treaty was also signed by John Conner, as head chief, Anderson Sarcoxey [Sarcoxie], chief of the Turtle Band, Ne-con-he-con, chief of the Wolf Band, and James Conner, delegate.[47]

Then in 1864, Journeycake's long-time friend and in-law, Baptist missionary Reverend John Pratt, was appointed as Indian agent for the Delaware Tribe.[48] Pratt's influence in Delaware affairs as a missionary was already well known, and the local newspaper openly criticized the appointment in that Pratt had a history of leaning toward his own financial aggrandizement. The Leavenworth Daily Bulletin lamented:

"The removal of Mr. Johnson, and the appointment of Mr. Pratt are significant facts that help to convince us that our conjectures are right...the fraud is not yet complete. The Indians have a few more acres of land. General Lane, the secretary, and the railroad men want them. They have concluded it to accomplish their object through Agent Pratt...We remember well that Mr. Pratt denounced the original treaty with the Delawares, by which they donated their lands to the railroad company, as a swindle, and was quite indignant about it until a quarter section was deeded to him by the company, and secretary Usher sold him another quarter for the low sum of two dollars per acres."[49]

Pratt and Journeycake had been working in tandem for nearly twenty years to convert the tribe to their Baptist Christianity.[50] Just as old Chief Anderson had feared, the work of the missionaries served to further destroy the tribe's traditional social structures, resulting in fragmented allegiances and alienation among the tribal members. Through the missionary schools, the children were lectured daily on the evils of their traditional ways. The elders and the Clan chiefs believed their children were being forced to abandon the tribe's customs and beliefs; references to the traditional Delawares as "non-civilized" or "heathens" were particularly offensive.[51] As with all historical attempts to assimilate the American Indians, the missionaries were somewhat successful in destroying the natural harmony of the tribal order and beliefs, but were not as successful in supplanting their own foreign belief systems. In the face of the breakdown of the natural social orders, the tribal council was forced to adopt a code of laws to bring some sort of artificial order to the tribe.[52]

with John G. Pratt to "terminate" the Delaware, for purposes of converting them to Baptist Christianity. Obviously, both men regarded conversion to Christianity as a desirable goal, but they, or at least Reverend Journeycake, probably didn't choose this means to accomplish their ends. Moereover, there were probably divisions between families as to who were the "rightful" chiefs of the Delaware at this time. Editor, Lenape-Delaware History]

After settlement in Kansas, the Delaware initially resisted the missionaries and the government's efforts to create a sedentary, agricultural existence. The Delaware preferred hunting, trapping, and trading, and continued to send hunting parties deep into the west to find new sources of game. The Delaware became legendary for their hunting, scouting, and military prowess, their services often sought by the U.S. Government.[53]

Prior to their removal to Kansas, the U. S. Government had assured Chief Anderson that the removal would be the last, and that the government would protect the rights of the Delaware to their new reservation against infringements by other tribes and white settlers. However, with the United States additions of California. Oregon, and New Mexico, white settlers would soon be overrunning the Indian Territory; the U. S. determined that for their own protection the Indians should be removed from the direct path of the settlers. As early as 1853, Congress authorized the President to negotiate with the Indians for their removal.[54] At this point the Delaware vehemently opposed another removal or the creation of a state in Indian Country. In an April, 1854 letter to President Pierce, Chief Ketchum reminds the government that "...our Great Father promised us solemnly that he would never again take this Country from us either by purchase or no other way because this was the last good place that he could ever move his Delaware Children to, therefore he would never again remove them out of this place."[55]

Nevertheless, on 6 May, 1854, the Delaware were forced to agree to allow the U. S. to offer the majority of the Delaware reserve for public sale which eventually amounted to 558,555 acres.[56] The U.S. breached this treaty, however, by selling the lands privately, rather than at public auction, resulting in a fraud of some 1.3 million dollars.[57] In addition, the U.S. swindled the tribe out of the 1,000,000 acre hunting strip for a mere $10,000.[58] A hundred years later, the Indian Claims Commission determined that the same land was actually worth sixty times that amount in 1854.[59] However, the Delaware did manage to reserve a ten mile by forty mile strip in Kansas as their "diminished reserve." The U. S. rationalized to the Delaware that the government could better protect the tribe if they occupied a smaller area. However, the depredations against the Delaware did not cease. In an 1858 letter to President Buchanan, the Delaware chiefs reported that, "Since the opening of the Territory, thieves (white men) have come in and are constantly stealing our horses, and in many instances have stripped some of our people of everything they owned.[60] In addition to stealing their land, squatters usurped Delaware livestock, cut down their timber to build their homes, and otherwise harasses and persecuted the tribe. The Delaware had no recourse in the courts as they were not citizens; they took no action personally for they feared the white vigilante groups who would come and take all their possessions and burn their houses to the ground.[61]

Under increasing pressure from the railroads, the Delaware entered yet another treaty with the U. S. in 1860 which provided for the allotment in severalty of the ten mile by forty mile diminished reserve, and the remainder of the reserve to be sold directly to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company under the supervision of the government.[62] The treaty specified that, although allotted in severalty, individual Delaware did not receive a fee patent, and the lands were not alienable. In addition, eighty acre allotments were also set aside for those Absentee Delaware residing to the south who were expected to rejoin the tribe.[63]

In 1861, the tribe signed a supplemental treaty with the U.S. which provided for the additional sale of any surplus Delaware lands to the railroad, and authorized the railroad to issue bonds and mortgages on the lands of the 1860 treaty to raise monies already due to the tribe.[64] The 1861 treaty also provided that if the railroad should default on the purchase of lands, the lands would again become the sole property of the U. S. in trust for the Delaware.[65]

Although the Delaware had given as much as they could to appease the railroads and the government, the tribe was not to be left in peace. The depredations climaxed in the spring of 1860 and the Delaware held a number of council meetings to discuss the state of the tribe. Indian Agent Sykes reported:

"...Many things tended to bring about their discontentedness. This Winter they have had a great many Ponies stolen from them, not a neighborhood or settlement has escaped the thieves. They are out of money, and have gone to the extent of their credit with their merchants. The white people around them are continually annoying them with threats, telling them they cannot nor shall long own so much land here among them. People are cutting timber continually, and hauling it off, and according to Judge Petit's (the judge for this district) decision they cannot be punished for it..."[66]

After several general councils on the issue of whether to move to the Rocky Mountains, the southwest, or to the far west, the tribe voted in May, 1860, to leave their Kansas reservation.[67]

Removal to Indian Territory, 1860-1868

Although the tribe had formally voted to leave the Kansas Territory in early 1860, favoring Cherokee lands for their new reservation, the issue was diverted with the outbreak of the Civil War. The Delaware initially sought to persuade the tribes in Indian Country, especially the Cherokees, to remain neutral as the Delaware had determined to do.[68] The Creek had even promised the Delaware protection against the southern sympathizers if they would remain neutral.[69] By 1862, however. the Delaware reservation had already been subject to attacks by both white and Indian secessionists, generating sentiments for revenge. The breaking point came with the arrival of the southern Indians, including 200 Absentee Delaware, from the Washita agency relating stories of starvation and robbery of all their possessions at the hands of the southern sympathizers.[70] In response, over eight percent of the Delaware able-bodied men men volunteered for service in the Union Army.[71] In 1863, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, William P. Dole, proclaimed that "no community within the limits of the loyal states can show a better record than the Delawares."[72]

As early as 1860, Delaware tribal leaders had been visiting the neighboring Choctaw and Cherokee Tribes to discuss the purchase of lands within Indian Territory.[73] Residing on another tribe's land was not new to the Delaware; during their removals to the west, the tribe was first invited by the Wyandot to reside on their lands in Ohio, and then the Piankashaw and the Miami to reside on their lands in Indiana. [74] Much to the dismay of these tribes, the Federal government later gave the Delaware valuable consideration to remove from these lands, even though the tribe had no title to relinquish. In 1853, the Absentee Delaware, under the leadership of John Conner (head chief of the main body by 1857), had entered into an agreement with the Choctaw nation to allow the Absentee Delaware to reside in their Choctaw District[75] at no cost to the Delaware, provided that the Absentees would be subject to the privilege, penalties, and laws of the Choctaw Nation. [76] Neither the main body of the Delaware, nor this band of Absentees, were ever considered to have given up their tribal sovereignty or identity when settling among the other tribes.[77] It was in light of these experiences that Chief Anderson Sarcoxie and several councilmen visited the Choctaw and Cherokee Tribes in 1860 with the intent of purchasing lands from the tribes with the similar understanding that the Delaware would also be subject to the privileges, penalties, and laws of those tribes.[78]

However, because of the southern Indians allegiance against the federal government, a Delaware General Council was held in May, 1863, resolving to request that the government allow Anderson Sarcoxie to explore the Rockies rather than Indian Country.[79] Commissioner of Indian Affairs, William P. Dole, replied that the government did not believe the climate in the Rockies was suitable, and advised that the U. S. government greatly desired the removal of the Delaware from Kansas.[80]

Although the U.S. did not specifically demand that the Delaware find a new reservation on Cherokee lands, it became readily apparent that this area had been set aside by the U.S. for the Delaware resettlement. As early as April, 1864, Agent Pratt received a telegram from Commissioner Dole directing Pratt to "(a)rrange to bring here soon the Delaware Chief and two councilors with your interpreter for the purpose of negotiating a further treaty."[81] One month later, in May, 1864, Cherokee Chief John Ross, wrote to Commissioner Dole stating, "[W]e have... expressed a willingness to receive...the Delawares...[a]nd we are now ready to negotiate a Treaty with the Government that will accomplish that object, if agreeable to the Government and the Delawares..."[82]

Accordingly, Sarcoxie made yet another trip down to the Cherokee Nation in the spring of 1864.[83] During their negotiations the Cherokee told Sarcoxie that they were not willing to sell outright any of their lands south of Kansas, but that the Delaware could settle on Cherokee land upon the following terms:

1. That the Delaware invest money equal to that invested by the Cherokee for the annuity;
2. That the Delaware pay the Cherokee a bonus for the right to settle on the lands; and
3. That the Delaware would enjoy equal rights with Cherokee as to laws, votes, and schools.[84] To these words the Delaware replied, "none of them would suit our people" and that "we consider our work here finished, further deliberations unnecessary."[85]

On 7 June 1864, the U. S. government warned the Cherokee that "in case an arrangement cannot be effected whereby the Delawares shall obtain a home in the Cherokee Country upon terms satisfactory to them, our negotiations may be considered at an end."[86] To this communication, Cherokee Chief Ross replied:

["] ...We are fully apprised that the chief object with the Government in opening negotiations was to provide a home for the Delawares in the Cherokee Country south of Kansas and their removal from that state...the Cherokees were not willing to sell any portion of their domain that lies south of Kansas, they were willing to receive the Delawares into their Country upon terms just and liberal [emphasis added]. ["][87]

The U. S. government apparently was severely disappointed with the Cherokee's decision to fight on behalf of the Confederates. In a letter to a Union military commander regarding the Indians' sentiment about the Civil War, Indian Agent R. H. Carruth reports, "I can not believe John Ross. of the Cherokees, has done what the papers state. If so, all there is left to do is kindle civil war over his head."[88] These correspondences indicate that the U. S. had a two-fold purpose for negotiating a Post-Civil War treaty with the Cherokee:

1. to punish the Cherokee for fighting on the side of the Confederacy; and,
2. to remove the Delaware from Kansas to Cherokee country as soon as possible.

[After the Civil War, the U. S. Government was trying to terminate the tribal relations of all Indians, and they were using all means possible to do it. It appears that one means was to force the Kansas Delaware to dissolve their tribal relations explicitly if they wanted to remain in their homes of forty years and to stay married to their husbands , mostly, who were economically tied to Kansas. The other means was to have the Cherokee Delaware be regarded as "Cherokees by blood," thereby eliminating the Delaware Tribe. We believe both actions by the U.S. Government were wrong and both should be equally opposed. Editor. Lenape-Delaware History Net]

In mid-June, 1864, The Cherokee unilaterally submitted a proposed treaty to the U.S. which was very similar to the treaty made with the Confederate government; however the U.S. refused to acknowledge or act upon the treaty.[89] Under the circumstances, the U.S. government felt the terms of the Cherokee's proposed treaty gave the Cherokee Nation more than it deserved, especially in light of the questionable legitimacy of the Cherokee government after its allegiance with the Confederacy.[90] Furthermore, the proposed treaty only reiterated the same terms for relocating the Delaware as did their earlier offer which the Delaware had equivocally rejected; the U.S. government had already informed the Cherokee that until terms were reached for the Delaware removal which were satisfactory to the Delaware, the negotiations would be terminated.[91]

In contrast, the Delaware were invited to Washington, D. C., in June, 1864, where Agent Pratt and Commissioner Dole negotiated a treaty for the removal of the Delaware from Kansas.[92] The urgency of the removal on terms satisfactory to the Delaware is better understood in light of the fact that Interior Secretary Usher was the controlling shareholder in the company of Usher, Hallet & Co. which allegedly was trying to secure the remaining Delaware lands on behalf of the Union Pacific Railroad (formerly called the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Co., the railroad still not having paid the Delaware for lands purchased under the Treaties of 1860 and 1861.[93] To exacerbate an already putrid situation, Agent Pratt was later subpoenaed to give testimony before a state court concerning his connections to the railroad interests and the disposal of Delaware lands.[94] Thus, the circumstances surrounding this 1864 treaty were suspicious at best. This may explain why the Senate did not take action on the treaty for nearly two years, and then the Senate declined to ratify the same just months before a new Delaware Treaty of 1866 was drafted and ratified.[95]

On 4 July 1866, the federal government and the Delaware leaders concluded the Treaty with the Delawares, 1866, 14 stat. 793, in Leavenworth, Kansas.[96] Special Commissioner W. H. Watson, reported that the negotiations were delayed pending the arrival of Chief Anderson Sarcoxie, detained due to poor weather.[97] The federal government's respect for the old chief is significant in light of Agent Pratt's later attempts to discredit Sarcoxie as "those of the unfettered class."[98]

By this 1866 treaty, the federal government promised that the Delaware would be removed to a reservation of their own in Indian country in exchange for the sale of their lands in Kansas to the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company. The quantity of land would be equal to 160 acres for each man, woman and child who removed to Indian Country.[99] In addition to these lands. the U.S. was to give to the tribe twenty-three sections of land within their new reservation absolutely free to compensate for prior treaty violations.[100] The U.S. `further guaranteed the Delaware peaceable possession of their homes, and protection from hostile Indians, and internal strife and civil war, and full and just participation in any general council or territorial government established for the tribes residing in Indian Country.[101]

Of utmost significance, however, was that the treaty expressly reaffirmed the tribe's domestic-dependant status, and the commitment of the U.S. to protect and defend the rights of the tribe.[102] The Treaty with the Delaware was ratified on 26 July 1866, and proclaimed by the President on 10 August 1866. This renewed commitment has never been repudiated by Congress in any legislation since 1866. Upon completing the Delaware Treaty, the U.S. immediately turned to finalize an arrangement with the Cherokees to allow for Delaware removal to Cherokee lands. The U.S. made it clear that the Cherokee needed to reach an agreement with the Delaware on terms that were favorable to the tribe loyal to the U.S. government.[103] The earlier terms that had been proposed by the Cherokee Nation looked to the incorporation of the Delaware as individuals into the Cherokee Nation, and these terms were unequivocally rejected by the Delaware.[104] Accordingly, the Cherokee Nation modified their terms and submitted the following proposal to Congress:

"The Cherokees will sell to the Delawares lands for their permanent homes upon these conditions, viz: That the Delawares will not sell these lands to the Government, or to other Indians, without the consent to the Cherokees: and the Cherokees will consent that the Delawares shall be governed by their own laws and customs, have the benefit of all their annuities and property, and will allow them a proper representation, according to numbers in their Legislature, and give them the benefit of their laws and customs, if it shall be the pleasure of the Delawares at any time to accept the same."[105]

The new proposal recognized the continued existence of the Delaware tribe as a sovereign entity residing on lands owned in common with the Cherokee Nation. This concept was nearly identical to the arrangement negotiated by the U.S. in 1855 for the Chickasaw residing on Choctaw lands.[106] With this proposal in mind, the U.S. and Cherokees drafted a treaty which would provide for the removal of the Delaware to the Cherokee Nation. The treaty between the Cherokee and the U.S. was completed on 19 July 1866, two weeks after the Delaware Treaty with the U.S. was ratified 27 July 1866, one day after the Delaware Treaty. With both the Delaware and Cherokee Treaties finally completed, the U.S. immediately acted to remove the Delaware from their home in Kansas to a new reservation in the Cherokee Nation.

All of the Cherokee treaties between the U.S. and the Five Civilized Tribes contained provisions for the sale and relocation of other tribes on their lands, however, the Cherokee Treaty contained a unique provision to allow Cherokees to retain ownership of its lands east of the 96 degrees, while allowing tribes settling on these lands to maintain their "tribal organizations."[107] This unique provision was provided for in Article 15 of the Cherokee Treaty.

- [The 1866 text in its entirety can be found under Treaties. For all of the details of this period, see A Lesson in Administrative Termination cited at the end of this article. Much of the remainder of that monograph is devoted to make the case that the Delaware Tribe of Indians has always been a tribal entity separate from the Cherokee Nation entity.]

The Treaty between the Cherokee and the U.S. was completed on 19 July 1866, two weeks after the Delaware Treaty with the U.S., and ratified 27 July 1866, one day after the Delaware Treaty. With both the Delaware and Cherokee Treaties finally completed, the U. S. immediately acted to remove the Delaware from their home in Kansas to a new reservation in the Cherokee Nation.

On 13 October 1866, Agent Pratt, under the direction of Commissioner Cooley, wrote to the Delaware Chief John Conner and Assistant Chief Charles Journeycake, directing them to go to Cherokee Country to pick out their new reservation.[108] Pratt included in his letter, maps for unoccupied lands in Indian territory, a copy of the Delaware Treaty, and instructions for the Delaware to pick out blocks of land in quantities of 80 or 160 acre allotments.[109]

Again, the U.S. had already fully concluded that the Delaware would be settled with the Cherokee, urging them to go ahead and make their selection of lands. Accordingly, the Delaware held General Council on 13 October 1866, and selected the Delaware delegates and giving them "full and complete authority to select and secure new homes in Indian Country for said tribe."[110] The appointed delegates included John Conner, Anderson Sarcoxie, and Charles Journeycake, as chiefs, Joseph Armstrong and Andrew Miller, as councilors, and Isaac Journeycake, as interpreter.

Similarly, on 7 November 1866, the Cherokee National Council passed a resolution giving authority to the "Principal Chief, the Assistant Chief, and three others to enter an agreement with the Delaware Delegation in reference to allowing the Delaware to select a reservation from our lands lying east or west of the 96th degree of longitude...."[111] In November, 1866, the Delaware delegation left Kansas to meet with the delegates of the Cherokee Nation. In possession of the 1866 treaties, and U.S. maps indicating the unoccupied `lands of the Cherokee Nation, the Cherokee and Delaware delegates, possessing full authorization to bind the tribes, surveyed lands both east and west of the 96 degree longitudinal. [See the Later Treaties Section for the full text of the agreement.]

Hence, the Delaware delegates, in company with the Cherokee delegates, electing to preserve their tribal organization, chose a ten by thirty mile strip of land on the Caney River, or 192,000 acres as their new reservation. All that needed to be determined was the price. Pursuant to the Delaware Treaty of 1866, and in keeping with the Treaty of 1860, the 192,000 acres would provide 160 acre allotments for every man, woman, and child

(1,000) in Kansas, and also provide the same for some 200 Absentee Delawares still residing to the south on lands of other tribes.[112]

Upon returning home to Kansas, the tribal members were fully apprised that the delegates had entered into an agreement with the Cherokee to purchase the use of a ten by thirty tract of land east of the 96 degree, of which the title would remain with the Cherokee Nation, but as between the Delaware and the Cherokee, the Delaware ownership would not be disturbed.[113] The tribal members were also told that. indeed, the tribe would preserve its tribal organization, but that the Delaware would have additional rights in the Cherokee national fund.[114] Settling on a ten by thirty mile tract of land along the banks of the Caney River was a natural transition for the Delaware--even if the tribe or individual members would not have the title to alienate. Under the 1860 treaty, the tribe had been residing on a ten by forty mile strip along the Kansas River, and under the same treaty, each man, woman, and child of the tribe had received a 160 acre allotment in severalty, without however the ability to alienate the land.[115] Accordingly, the tribe met in council on 18 February 1867, and registered in mass for the removal to Indian Country.[116]

The agreement with the two tribes being completed, the tribe sent the delegates to Washington, D. C. in April, 1867, to formalize the purchase of the chosen land. These delegates included John Conner, and Charles Journeycake, chiefs, and Isaac Journeycake, and John Sarcoxie, as delegates.[117] Suspiciously missing was the traditionalist Chief Anderson Sarcoxie.

On 8 April 1867, the Delaware entered a formal contract with the Cherokee in Washington, D.C. for the purchase of a quantity of land east of the 96 degree west longitudinal for the use of the Delaware Tribe pursuant to Article 4 of the Delaware Treaty and Article 15 of the Cherokee Treaty.[118] The total quantity was equal to 160 acres for each man, woman, and child who signed the 18 February 1867 registry, and any additional Delaware who might sign within one month of the signing of the agreement.[119] The Delaware agreed to pay $1.00 per acre for a perpetual occupancy right on the land, in addition to a sum of money which would sustain the same proportion to the existing

Cherokee National Fund that the Delaware sustained to the total number of Cherokee.[120] This was all in keeping with the terms negotiated prior to the 1866 treaties, and with the 9 December 1866 agreement between the two tribes; however, rather than enjoying "all the rights of native Cherokees," the Articles of Agreement further provided that the Delaware would be "consolidated with" the Cherokee would in all respects Nation, and the after-born children of Delaware "so incorporated" would in all respects be regarded as native Cherokee.[121] Thus even though the contract's requirements or terms were taken from the Article 15 provision providing for the preservation of tribal organization, the contract also lifted part of the incorporation language from the Article 15 provision for abandoning the tribal organization. The contract, therefore, required the Delaware to pay for the rights to preserve their tribal organization, but then, slipped in ambiguous language of "incorporation" that seemingly could be interpreted to void the very right for which they were paying.

Although this interpretation of the Articles of Agreement would violate the terms of the Delaware Treaty, the Cherokee Treaty, and the 9 December 1866 agreement, nevertheless, this ambiguity has allowed the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Cherokee Nation to periodically claim--when it suited its interests--that the Delaware terminated themselves in 1867.[122] But in fact, the Delaware delegates to the Articles of Agreement had no apparent or actual authority as agents to enter a contract that might contradict the terms of the two treaties of 1866, and the already ratified Delaware-Cherokee Agreement of 9 December 1866.

On 11 April 1867, the President of the United States approved the agreement as required by Article 15 of the Treaty with the Cherokee of 1866. Note, however, that the language of that treaty expressly limited the President's discretion to vary from the requirements of Article 15.[123] While receiving the approval of the President, the Articles of Agreement of 1867 were never submitted to or ratified by Congress, and was expressly rejected by the Delaware Tribe acting in General Council.

The Articles of Agreement were submitted to the Cherokee National Council, and ratified on 13 June 1867.[124] However, on 6 May 1867, the Delaware Council flatly refused to ratify the agreement as it was explained to them.

When the Reverend Pratt and Assistant Chief Charles Journeycake returned from Washington, D.C. in late April, 1867, they notified tribal members that under the agreement, the Delaware were to become merged with the Cherokee, and would be subject to the laws and customs of the Cherokee government.[125] In response to this news, the Delaware held a General Council on 6 May 1867, and overwhelmingly passed a resolution rejecting the Articles of Agreement as a violation of the Delaware Treaty of 1866.[126] In Particular, Chief Anderson Sarcoxie--who had not been invited to Washington--was enraged that the U.S. would allow such an arrangement in violation of the Delaware

Treaty of 1866, and the 9 December 1866 agreement with the Cherokee.[127]

Following the council meeting on 6 May, Sarcoxie circulated a petition and obtained the signatures of some 600 of the approximately 1,000 Delaware, and delivered the same to their 'Indian Agent,' the Reverend Pratt.[128] The resolution provided in part: " After much discussion and consultation it was agreed unanimously that the Delaware will never give up their nationality and become merged in the Cherokee Nation but on the contrary every consideration of self preservation, pride, and desire for our happiness and prosperity as a people calls upon us to maintain our Nationality and separate existence as a tribe. And to that end whenever they remove from their distant homes they will go in a body to a desired reservation of their own as is clearly contemplated by both the spirit and the letter of the treaty made between the United States and the Delaware tribe of Indians July 4 1866. And to which you attention is respectfully called.[129]

However, unbeknownst to the Delaware, Agent Pratt and Charles Journeycake had been in collusion to do away with the Delaware tribal government under the rational that the Baptist missionaries, such as Pratt and Journeycake, would have more control over the members and, thus, be able to convert them more easily.[130]

Thus, when Sarcoxie gave the resolution and petition, addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to Agent Pratt in June, 1867, Pratt did not6 forward it to the Commissioner. When Sarcoxie did not get a response from Washington, he wrote directly to the Commissioner in July, inquiring as to whether the Commissioner ever received the petition.[131]

Pratt, indeed, had not sent the petition, but in a letter dated 5 July 1867 to the Commissioner, Pratt does state that "[f]or the past months there has been considerable excitement among the Delawares, having for its origins the arrangements entered into by the delegates of this tribe at Washington in April...by which the Delawares are merged into and become a part of the Cherokee people, I believe the matter however is culminated and that the arrangement will be acquiesced in."[132]

Apparently the plan had not "culminated", and Pratt was ordered to transmit the petition to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; in his transmittal letter, Pratt states: In forwarding this paper I feel constrained to say that I do so only in obedience to official duty....The plan which has been adopted with the approbation of the government was in effect doing for them what emigration to the Indian Country would necessarily result in, that is to say the doing away of a tribal system of government and adopting that which civilization brings...It is not therefore surprising that before this great change should go into effect the most strenuous efforts should be made by the less enlightened portion of this tribe and other tribes, to postpone the time, interpose objections or create dissatisfaction in relation thereto...[133]

Thus, Pratt does not deny that the Articles of Agreement were a violation of the Delaware Treaty or that the majority of the tribe had refused to ratify the agreement of the General Council. Pratt only reasons that it is in the best interest of the tribe. and in line with the U. S. assimilation policy.

In conclusion, Pratt maintains that Sarcoxie's petition. which demanded enforcement of the Delaware Treaty of 1866, was an expression of the "unfettered class which seeks to perpetuate and keep alive old Indian customs and traditions.[134] It should be noted here that under tribal law Anderson Sarcoxie was the eldest of the chiefs and should have been recognized as head chief. and of such importance that the U.S. would not even negotiate the Treaty of 1866 until Sarcoxie had arrived.[135] However, less than a year later, Pratt attempts to portray Sarcoxie to the new Commissioner of Indian Affairs as "Captain Sarcoxie" of the "unfettered class." To counter Sarcoxie's petition. Assistant Charles Journeycake wrote to the Acting Commissioner in November, 1867, maintaining that the "arrangement" entered into in April were in the best interests of the tribe, and that he did not countenance the expression of Captain Sarcoxie.[136] Agent Pratt transmitted the letter on behalf of his old friend, Journeycake, and John Conner, James Conner, and James Ketchum, maintaining that these were the only persons with legitimate authority to act of behalf of the tribe.[137]

By the fall of 1867, the Delawares had not received an adequate explanation as to their status, thus, in January, 1868, the famous U. S. scout Captain Fall Leaf filed yet another protest with Washington,. D. C., pointing out that the Delawares already had a previous agreement with the Cherokees which had been authorized by the people, and that the delegates sent to Washington in April, 1867, had no authority to enter such an agreement - under which "the tribal organization of our people could be maintained."[138] (Note, however, that Fall Leaf was under the impression that the Delawares could only preserve their tribal organization if settling west of the 96 degree. and believed that this was where the ten by thirty mile strip of land had been chosen.) This Fall Leaf requested that a delegation be sent to Washington "in reference to a selection of lands and location of the Delawares in Indian Territory, west of the Ninety sixth (96) parallel of longitude..."[139]

This petition was also signed by over two-thirds of the Delaware Tribe.[140]

Pratt responded swiftly to this petition, affirming that the Delawares had entered a previous agreement wit the Cherokees - to se the ten by thirty strip of land east of the 96 degree longitudinal, while preserving their tribal organization.[141] Pratt, however, also contended that the Delawares would thereby still be subject to the constitution and laws of the Cherokee Nation.[142] Note, that Pratt's position contradicts the very language of Article 15 of the Cherokee Treaty which provided that a tribe paying to have land set aside would thereby preserve it tribal organization, laws, customs, and usages, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the Cherokee Nation.[143] The distinction is clear and if the Delawares were to be subject to the authority of the Cherokee Nation, then the language for preservation of tribal organization would be illusory.

During the spring of 1869, Assistant Chief Sarcoxie and Captain Fall Leaf continued to refuse to remove to the Cherokee Nation, and encouraged the tribal members to remain. However, the depredations and harassment against the Delawares had only increased. The people were bordering on destitution, as Pratt would not release any of their annuities until they agreed to remove to Indian Territory. In addition, in anticipation of removal, no preparation of their farms, crops, etc., had been made. The two Delaware leaders were still awaiting an adequate explanation from Washington, D.C., as their faith in Agent Pratt had been exhausted.[144] Finally in May, 1868. the Commissioner of Indian Affairs traveled to Kansas to negotiate a removal with Sarcoxie and Fall Leaf.[145] (154) What kind of assurances may have been able to provide is not clear, but he was able to obtain written promises from Sarcoxie and Fall Leaf to remove to the Cherokee Nation, and to encourage their followers to do the same.[146]

By the time of the removal, the ambiguities of the Articles of Agreement of 7 April 1867. had yet to be resolved. Nevertheless, pursuant to the initial 9 December 1866 agreement, the Delaware proceeded in mass to the ten by thirty [mile] strip of land originally selected for their use. This area covers the top two-thirds of present-day Washington County, Oklahoma.[147]

The 9 December 1866 agreement between the two tribes provided for the purchase of the entire strip of 192,000 acres, enough to assure a 160-acre allotment for each man, woman, and child in Kansas (1,000) and for the 200 Absentees still living to the south.[148] The Articles of Agreement, however, only provided for 160 acres for each man, woman, and child listed on the 18 February 1867b registry, and those names added within a month of the signing of the agreement.[149] As Sarcoxie had lamented in his petition, no provision was made for the landless Absentees to the south.[150] Thus, the Delaware were to receive 160 acres for each 0f the 985 Delaware who elected to remain with the tribe and remove to Indian Country. a total of 157,600 acres.[151] Per the Articles of Agreement, the tribe paid $157,600.00 for this land at $1.00 per acre.[152]

In addition to the $157,600.00, the tribe was also to pay the proportional amount of money into the Cherokee National fund which represented a ratio of 985 Delaware to 13,573 Cherokee as compared to the total value of the Cherokee National fund, including the $157,600.00.[153] This proportional amount came to a total of $121,824.28.[154] Both payments were made pursuant to the requirements of Article 15 of the Cherokee Treaty providing for the settlement of tribes choosing to preserve their tribal organization while enjoying all the rights of native Cherokee. [155]

In comparison, the Shawnee Tribe also settled within the Cherokee Nation in 1869 under the Articles of Agreement between the Shawnee and the Cherokee.[156] The Shawnee, however, did not pay for their lands, and the Agreements specifically states that "said Shawnees will abandon their tribal organization."[157] In addition, the Agreement also states that "said Shawnee shall be incorporated into and ever after remain a part of the Cherokee Nation, on equal terms in every respect, and with all the privileges and immunities of native citizens of the Cherokee Nation."[158] The language of the Shawnee agreement, then, directly tracts the provision of Article 15 looking to the abandonment of tribal organization.

Thus, the Delaware agreed to pay $279,484.28 to the Cherokee for a tract of land on which the 985 Delaware might "preserve their tribal organization," and to "enjoy all the rights of native Cherokees". However, during the removal nearly 200 Delaware died due to illness and hardship.[159]

[Emphasis added. Not many know that the the Delaware also their own "Trail of Tears". It just didn't happen at one time. Each move--from the Eastern States to Ohio to Indiana to Missouri, to Kansas, and to Oklahoma--was a "Rail of Tears" that caused significant numbers of deaths, illnesses, and deprivations of homes, and added to the general disillusionment of the Delaware. Editor, Lenape-Delaware History Net]

Nevertheless, in 1869 the U.S. paid the Cherokee the full amount for all 985 Delaware to resettle.[160] The Delaware did not object at this time because they were under the impression that they had purchased the land from the Cherokee, with only the limitation being that the tribe could not otherwise alienate the land without the permission of the Cherokee Nation.[161] (170) The believed and acted accordingly for nearly thirty years that if one of the 985 individual Delaware had passed away before or after reaching Indian Country, then the individual's right to an allotment would pass to the family.[162] Later, the Cherokee would argue, and win, that the Delaware only purchased a life estate for each of the 985 Delaware, and upon their death, the land reverted back to the Cherokee Tribe.[163] Note, that the Delaware understood that they did not purchase the land in fee, however, they believed that as between themselves and the Cherokee, the Delaware owned the land.[164]

By late 1868, the entire Delaware Tribe had removed to the Cherokee Nation. However, by early 1871, the majority of the tribe was preparing to remove from its wretched situation - even if it meant giving up the quarter of a million dollars already paid to the Cherokee Nation.

[The remaining text is quite long and is largely of interest to those wanting to follow in detail the history of the contention between the Delaware Tribe of Indians and the Cherokee Nation following the removal of the former to Indian Country. 36. The removal of the eastern tribes to the west invariably created tensions with the plains tribes who resented the tribes' infringement upon their hunting grounds. During the Indian frontier wars beginning in 1833, the eastern tribes continually sought to confederate with the Delawares for protection. In 1833, the Delawares declined a Cherokee invitation to attend a council to discuss the formation of such a confederacy; the Delaware council was apparently suspicious of the Cherokee, and feared the Cherokee would be hostile to the United States and to the Delaware representatives. In 1847, the Winnebagos also requested an alliance with the Delawares to defend against the Dakota Sioux. Delaware war chief, Anderson Sarcoxey [Sarcoxie], sent word to the Menominee, Potawatomie, Kickapoo, Shawnee, Wyandots, Sac and Fox of the proposed alliance; however, each chief would agree to the alliance only of the grandfather tribe also agreed. The Delaware, as usual, deferred to the U.S. government's request that the tribes not confederate for an all out Indian war. See Ferguson, ″White River Delawares,″ pp. 148-151

75. In 1837, the Chickasaw and Choctaw entered into a Treaty with the U.S. providing for the removal of the Chickasaw to lands within the Choctaw Nation, to be "held on the same terms as the Choctaw[] hold it, except without the right of disposing of it...." (11 Stat. 573). In addition, the Chickasaws would pay for the right to have "all the rights and privileges of the Choctaws," but the Chickasaws reserved to themselves the right to maintain control of their funds. (art. 1, Treaty with the Choctaw and Chickasaw, 17 January 1837, 11 Stat. 573). However, dissensions between the two tribes soon arose as the Chickasaws fund themselves at the mercy of the Choctaw government. To clarify the situation, the U.S. and the two tribes entered another treaty in 1855 specifically setting off a district for the exclusive jurisdiction of the Chickasaw tribe, while leaving the lands held in common by the two tribes. (Treaty with the Choctaw and Chickasaw, June 22, 1855, 11 Stat. 611).

77. This is evidenced by the fact that the U. S. subsequently signed several treaties with the main body to provide the removal of the Delawares from those borrowed lands. In addition, the band of Absentees later left of their own free will and migrated to Oklahoma to eventually settle with the Wichita and Caddo tribes in Anadarko.

It is unclear whether Sarcoxie went in the fall of 1863, or the spring of 1864.

120. Ibid. The Delaware were aware that they were paying $1.00 an acre for only an occupancy right on a quantity of land upon which they might preserve their tribal organization; however, the Delaware believed that as between themselves and the Cherokee these lands belonged to the Delaware without the right alienat*e.* Although the Cherokee Treaty of 1866 and the Articles of Agreement provide that the Delaware would not have aright to alienate the land, Cherokee Chief D. W. Bushyhead gave testimony before the U S. Congress that the Cherokee had absolutely no interest in the lands of the Delaware. The U.S. Supreme Court in Delawares v. Cherokees (1904) reaffirmed that the Cherokee had paid $1.00 per acre for occupancy right. In consideration that the Cherokee lands just a few miles west sold in fee for $.70 an acre, and some of the Chickasaw lands sold in fee for as low as $.30 an acre, there is little doubt that the Delaware understood that they were paying this high price for a perpetual occupancy on lands to be set aside to preserve their tribal organization while residing within the Cherokee Nation.

BAPTIST MISSIONS IN KANSAS

There may be duplication of some of the data in this article with other articles about Kansas Missions that are in this web site. I will try to edit the entire subject matter at a later date. Editor

Some Background of Early Baptist Missions in Kansas, Based on Letters in the Pratt Collection of Manuscripts and Documents by Esther Clark Hill. Kansas Historical Quarterly, (February, 1932 Vol. 1, No. 2), pages 89 to 103. Transcribed by lhn; HTML editing by Tod Roberts, digitized with permission of the Kansas State Historical Society.

A PACKAGE of letters, some of them nearly a century old, that have lain in the vault of the Kansas Historical Society for almost twenty-five years, are an integral part of the foundation of the Baptist church in Kansas, if not its very corner stone. These letters belong to what is known as the Pratt collection, and those of the first decade (1837-1847) are mostly from the families and friends of the two young missionaries, John Gill Pratt and his wife, Olivia Evans Pratt. [1] All are of a deeply religious nature, but there is in the letters of Amos Evans, father of Mrs. Pratt, and Elizabeth Pratt, mother of John Gill Pratt, a keen note of parental solicitude that in places rises to real anguish in their contemplation of the perils and privations of the far-distant new country which seemed to have swallowed up their children.

At the time these letters were written the Indian missions were still in the pioneer stage in the United States. They had only a bare foothold in the Indian country to which the eastern tribes were being removed under the authority of the act of May 26, 1830. This location, selected by Isaac McCoy and two other commissioners for such tribes, lay west of Missouri and Arkansas, and between the Platte and Red rivers. Of emigrant tribes, the Shawnees had been the first to come, settling south of the Kaw river, just over the western Missouri boundary, directly after the treaty with the Kanzas and Osages in 1825. The *Delawares followed them, locating in the fork of the Kaw and Missouri rivers some five years later; and the Sac and Fox tribe, about the same time, took up land

1. John Gill Pratt was born September 9 1814, at Hingham, Mass., and after a period in Wakefield Academy, Reading, he graduated from Andover Seminary 1836, completing the entire course, including the theological. On March 29, 1837, he married Olivia Evans, of South Reading, and they almost immediately started for the Indian Territory, where Pratt was to succeed Jotham Meeker as missionary-printer at Shawanoe Baptist Mission. In 1844 he left that point to take charge of the Stockbridge Baptist Mission, which was abandoned in 1848, Pratt going directly to the Delaware Baptist Mission. He was made United States Indian agent to the Delawares in 1864, serving until 1868, when the tribe removed into the Indian Territory (now Oklahoma). Mrs. Pratt was closely associated with all his missionary work, and after his death, April 23, 1900, she survived him only two years.

north of the Delawares. The Kickapoos came in 1832 and held their ground between the Delawares and the Sac and Fox. And the Pottawatomies, coming in 1837, were the new settlers in what is now Miami and Linn counties (removing in 1846 to the lands northwest that have shrunken to their present holdings in Jackson county). This was the distribution of the more important tribes, up to about 1840, in what is now northeastern Kansas.

It was in 1817 that Isaac McCoy, at his own request, had been appointed the first Baptist missionary to the Indians. [2] His first charge was among the Miamis in Indiana, and later the Carey and Thomas stations among the Pottawatomies in Michigan. During his missionary years he had drawn to himself a group of younger men who, under his direction, were to lay the groundwork of the Baptist missions in the Missouri valley. The Shawanoe Baptist mission, opened July 7, 1831, was in charge of Johnston Lykins. [3] It was a log structure and stood about five miles of the west of the Shawanoe Methodist mission (built about the same time) in Johnson county, and an almost equal distance from the Shawanoe Quaker Mission, established in 1834, a mile southeast of Merriam, Kan.

In 1837 Ira D. Blanchard founded the Delaware Baptist Mission, where the town of Edwardsville (on the interurban line between Kansas City and Lawrence), in Wyandotte county, now stands. [4] (This mission building was swept away in the flood of 1844 and was rebuilt in 1848, by John G. Pratt, on higher ground.)

2. Isaac McCoy, government surveyor, missionary, preacher, was born June 13, 1784, in Fayette county, Pennsylvania. He married Christianna Polke, October 6, 1803, and she was ever after that associated with his missionary life. After his first years as missionary to the Miami's and other tribes in Indiana he entered the service in Michigan at the Carey and Thomas stations leaving them to establish missions in the newly opened Indian Territory in the Missouri valley, after the passage of the act of May 26, 1830. It was McCoy's idea to give the Indians a permanent home in the territory, with a seat of government and eventually ask for admission of the territory as a state. He was known as "the Apostle Paul of the Baptist denomination to the Indians of Kansas Territory"and his work among them continued until the last four years of his life, which were spent in editing a Baptist magazine at Louisville, Ky., where he died, June 21, 1846.

3. Johnston Lykins was born April 15, 1800 in Franklin county, Virginia, and his association with Isaac McCoy began when he was 19 as teacher among the Weas and Kickapoos on the Wabash river. He followed McCoy into Michigan and married Delilah McCoy, February 27, 1827. She lived but a few years. Lykins Founded the Shawanoe Baptist Mission, in the Indian Territory, in 1831, and later did much translating of the Indian language. He was associated with Jotham Meeker in the publication of the first newspaper in Kansas, in the Indian language, the Shawanoe Sun, which lasted from 1836 until 1842. Lykins was one of the founders of Kansas City, Kan., building its first mansion" and being its first full-term mayor. He was a practicing physician at the time of his death in Kansas City, Mo., August 15, 1876.

4. Ira D. Blanchard first entered missionary work as a teacher under Isaac McCoy, in the Indian Territory in 1833. In 1835 he married Mary Walton, a missionary teacher, and they founded the Delaware Baptist Mission, at Grinter's crossing of the Kaw river, in 1837. He did a valuable work on the Indian alphabet and syllabary, and in his translation of the Harmony of the Gospel, the original compilation of Rev. Zeisberger, of the Moravian mission farther south. The Blanchards left the missionary field in January, 1848, and retired to a farm in Iowa.

HILL: EARLY BAPTIST MISSIONS 91

Jotham Meeker, [5] who had been a convert to missions under the preaching of Robert Simerwell [6] in the East, had arrived with him from Michigan at the Shawanoe Mission in 1833. Meeker was leaving that station in 1837 to found a similar one among the Ottawas on the Marais des Cygnes (Osage) river, south, where the town of Ottawa now stands. But he stayed at the Shawanoe Mission, along with another Baptist missionary, David B. Rollin (who seems to have been but a transient there), long enough to welcome the young Pratts and induct. them into the work they had undertaken. [7]

They had decided on this step only after much agonizing heart- searching and prayer, as is evidenced by their mutual letters. A sense of solemnest responsibility to God and man attended them. In a letter from Reading, Mass., dated October 5, 1836, Olivia Evans writes to young John G. Pratt at Andover Seminary (the same state)

"In regard to the state of my own mind, since I concluded to go with you to the far west, I think I can say I have enjoyed great peace."

And on December 21, 1836, from the Charlestown Female Seminary, a letter from her expresses the wish that

"that western valley become indeed the cultivated garden of the Lord. And shall we be the unworthy instruments of bearing these glad tidings to them? I feel it to be a glorious privilege to labour for God. I know that if we would labour among the Indians we must forego the enjoyment of friends and home, and deny ourselves- take up the cross daily."

No responsive letter from the sober young student at Andover Seminary appears in the collection; but her own to him, January 20, 1837, bears witness that he shared her exaltation:

5. Jotham Meeker, missionary-printer, was born November 8, 1804, in Hamilton county, Ohio, and received his training as printer in Cincinnati. In the summer of 1825 he came under the influence of Robert Simerwell, a Baptist missionary to the Indians in Michigan, who was touring the East, and the two were associated at the Carey and Thomas stations in Michigan until 1833, when they both came to the Indian Territory. In September, 1830, Jotham Meeker married Eleanor Richardson, a missionary teacher, in Cincinnati, and the two immediately took up work at the Shawanoe Baptist Mission, leaving it in 1837 in charge of the Pratts. In 1832 he began a daily entry in his remarkable journal, which has survived him, and kept it up until a week before his death at Ottawa, Kan., January 12, 1855. Mrs. Meeker, whose life was devoted with his to the cause of missions, survived him until March 15, 1856. His system of "writing Indian" opened a new world to those in his charge, and he did much patient translating for them.

6. Robert Simerwell's association with missions, under Isaac McCoy, began in 1824, when Simerwell came to the Carey station, in Michigan. On March 17, 1825, he married Fannie Goodridge, a missionary teacher there. Simerwell was a practical blacksmith and farmer, and turned his hand cheerfully to these duties in the missionary field. He spent some time in the early 1830's at the Shawanoe Baptist Mission, but later devoted his time wholly to the Pottawatomies, beginning at the mission five miles west of Topeka, in 1848. This is said to have been the equivalent of a modern training school. It is claimed the youngest daughter of the Simerwells was the first white girl born in Kansas. The family has several descendants in Shawnee county.

7. David B. Rollin and his wife were workers among the Creek Indians in 1834, and following some disturbances in that nation they came to the McCoy home in Westport, November 4, 1836. They spent some time at Shawanoe Mission, being there on the arrival of the Pratts in 1837. Rollin was then in failing health and left missionary work in 1839, dying at the home of his wife's father in Michigan, April 11, the same year.

"I rejoice in those feelings of devotion to [the] cause of God, which you express. I think much of our usefulness as well as happiness depends upon the state of feeling with which we enter upon this great work, and how very important [it is] that we should be entirely consecrated to the service of God. O how unworthy am I to engage in such a glorious work. How weak and insufficient am I in and of myself; but God is my helper."

In the meantime John G. Pratt had received a letter from Jotham Meeker, which he mentions in writing to Olivia Evans, January 31, 1837:

"He speaks of the resolution of the board to release him from his present field of labor on our arrival, with much feeling. `We thanked God and took courage.' . . . We [the Pratts] are . . . confidently expected soon.

With all my courage the work looks big with importance, and full of momentous consequences. I feel sensibly we shall both of us need divine assistance in every step of this great undertaking. Sometimes temptations strong and trying may fall in our way. On account of them shall we abandon the cause? . . . I hope you remember me at the throne of grace, where alone our mutual hope of success is centered."

he letter concludes unemotionally, "Yours in truth."

Before Olivia answers this serious communication she has received a letter dated December 11, 1836, from Mary Walton Blanchard, wife of Ira D. Blanchard, both in charge of the Delaware Baptist Mission, which is particularly illuminative of the missionary situation at that time:

"I have just received an intimation . . . that it is possible that I may have you for a neighbor in the spring. I do not know as more cheering inteligence could be received than that there is a sure prospect of a printer for Shawennoe, not even that of a much-needed laborer at this [the Delaware] station, for it does seem altogether wrong that brother Meeker, after having spent six years of hard labor in acquiring a knowledge of the Ottawa language, should be kept from them [the Ottawa Indians] by work that another could just as well perform while there is probably no man upon earth that can, without spending much time in conquering an unwritten language, fill his place among a people with whom he can converse and over whom he has gained an influence.

"I presume that you are expecting that it is at a distance from the abodes of civilized beings, that you must be deprived of all the conveniences and many of the comforts of life; but it is not so; it is but four miles to West Port, to which place steamboats commenced running last summer. When I came here, it was a dense harsh thicket with only two buildings on the site of the town, one of which was a P. O. I do not know the number of inhabitants it contains but there are at least four dry goods and grocery stores, any of which for a draft on the board are willing to put their goods at 30 per cent advance on their cost, which brings them to about St. Louis retail prices. The rooms that Mr. M[eeker] ocopies are a large one below and a small one (which was fited up for the press but not being large enough for two to work in, it has been moved to the schoolhouse) and a half-story chamber with a small fireplace. I mention these things more to gratify your mother than yourself, for I hope that no such consideration would move you in your purpose, but perhaps you would like to know what things you cannot obtain here. Among these are beds and cabinet furniture, except at an enormous price. We have all procured ours at Cincinnati, but iron and crockery ware are plenty almost al kinds of clothing will be more easily obtained than to take more than a present suply as I know by experience that trunks are a great care in traveling; one thing however is very scarce woolen yarn I know not what I should have done had not our Ohio friends suplied us, but the setlers, most of whom are from the South, are begining to find that our winters are too cold for cotton or silk stockings, and are trying to raise sheep; our Indians talk of trying it, but wolves are too plenty, it will not however be so bad with you as it is here. We are 16 miles from Shawnee and the Kaw is i/4 mile wide between us, and the feriage for a single person 50 cents and for a wagon 2 dollars yet we are far better situated as to obtaining supplies than I had expected to be. I should think this the most healthy place I ever was acquainted with, this is a great thing for without health we cannot do much. There has been no regular school either here or among the Shawwenoes since I have been here but our's is to be commenced very soon. It seems as though little had been done here but what can one family do alone? Yet something has been accomplished; many have learned to read their own language and nearly half of the gospels' is ready for the press and the rest of it in a state of forwardness . . . . I feel anxious to see an English school commenced here; but I hardly see how it is to be kept up; it will be impossible for Sylvia or I to be much in school as you know that my health is not very good and I have a babe, and we shall have to cook dinners for all the children and ought to board at least three orphans children of deceased members of the church, who will otherwise be left without instruction as the relitives live at so great a distance that they cannot come daily; nor would it be satisfactory to the Indians at present for a female to teach as many who design to attend are young men. If Mr. B[lanchard] is confined to a school, who shall finish the translation of the gospel? Who shall visit from family to family as he has done? he will it is true have some time left for to devote to these subjects, but each seem to demand all his time. Oh, that some one of the hundreds of young men who have professed to give themselves to the Lord might feel it duty and be permited to labor for the poor Delawares. If they are needed more in other places how great indeed must be the want of labourers! . . . I have an opportunity to send to the ofice this morning and think of nothing but shoes, which you perhaps would think of, I thought I took a good suply but now have reason to regret I did not take more, there are plenty to be had, but I will not say of what quality."

Under date of February 8, 1837, Olivia comments happily upon the letter:

"It is indeed gratifying to hear from one so near the field of our future labors."

And in a very feminine "P. S." she writes:

"The young ladies of the seminary . . . frequently say `O, I wish I was going with you.'

Yes, say[s] one yesterday, `My soul exults for your happy fate thus to give all to Christ. Go. I would not wrest the privilege from you And though Nature frowns and foes surround, yet it will be sweet to suffer for Christ.'"

From Reading, March 2, 1837, Olivia writes to John Pratt, still at Andover

Seminary. For all its high courage and resolution there is an undercurrent of youthful heartache at the prospect of leaving her familiar surroundings:

"Having bid adieu to the loved ones at Charlestown I have returned to my own dear home. I felt that the dear friends in C. were bound to my heart by the strong ties of affection, but I knew not how strong till the hour of separation arrived. If the ties of nature are stronger than those of friendship, I know not how painful it will be to rend them. I will not however, be overanxious about the parting hour . . . . Since my return, friends and home seem so dear that the wish to always stay with them has sometimes half intruded itself into my mind. But six hundred millions of precious souls are perishing . . . and shall I hesitate to leave friends and home, however dear, if I can in any way be instrumental to leading any to the knowledge of the truth? . . . . The glory of God and the salvation of these poor perishing souls is infinitely more important than my own personal feelings. Christ . . . is entitled to my all, and He shall have it. . . I cannot contemplate this great work upon which we are so soon to enter .without emotions of deep concern and intense anxiety; its responsibilities cause me to tremble . . it is arduous enough to task to the uttermost the noblest energies of man . . . . I have been told that it is indeed impracticable to go among those cruel and revengeful Indians who thirst for the blood of the white man-that it is an insalubrious clime that will surely deprive me of health and prevent my doing any good . . . that a mother's love is too dear to be sold for any other . . `yet none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself . . . For this glorious object would I live, for this labor, and for this die." . .

A scant "P. S." only is devoted to personal matters: "He [father] will attend to the publishment of our intentions, if you desire it." (Probably the publishing of the old-time "banns.")

This is the last of the letters of the collection that passed between Olivia Evans and John G. Pratt. The diary of Jotham Meeker (May 11, 1837) speaks briefly of their advent at the Shawnee Mission: "Mr. and Mrs. Pratt arrive from Massachusetts."

The slip of a girl who, with the young printer-and-theological student had "left all for Christ," was yet to "learn to bear the disappointments and trials of life with patience," as she had written him, December 27, 1836, and to find among "the cruel and revengeful Indians" some of the warmest friends of her after life. She is said to have been a most attractive young woman at the time of her marriage, red-cheeked, black-eyed and with her hair worn in ringlets, as was the fashion for many of the young women of that day.

A picture of her that has come down with the collection shows her as she became in her last years-the black eyes still sparkling, and with glints of the humor in them for which she is said to have been noted, though none of it appears in her letters. The hair that was worn in ringlets on her wedding day is softly white and parted in the middle, above a face that all the sorrows of the lean missionary years could not make less than lovely. For she had borne seven children, at the different missions, and four of them had died-little Ann, the first, and Johnny and Eddie, all in childhood; only Lucius, the second born, had lived to manhood. He married Nannie, the daughter of Charles Journeycake.

It was June 24, 1837, before John G. Pratt made an informal report to the society that had sent him west, as its missionary-printer. Under that date he writes to Dr. Lucius Bolles, corresponding secretary, describing a fairly uneventful journey, and then proceeds to affairs nearer at hand:

"We met with a very kind reception at the mission house from our friends, Messrs. Rollin, Meeker and their families. Though much disappointed at the appearance of things in this wilderness and benighted country, it is agreeably so. The location of the mission buildings is elligible; being a little removed from the immense Prarie, health must be retained much better than in the more marshy and timbered lands. I have found scarcely one object to meet the expectations I had previously formed, except the great moral destitution. We are located where the principles of the Gospel are much wanting; and it is truly painful to us to notice the stupidity of these `sons of the forest,' in the reception of religious instruction. How was my heart pained the first Sabbath after we reached this place, to see so few attend religious exercises; four or five Indians, only, being present. Their inattention and disregard to the word preached was lamentable in the extreme. While in the room, instead of listening, they were diverting themselves with some object, which uniformaly kept them engaged; and when that ceased to engage their curiosity, they would rise and walk out of doors a few minutes and then return; all their actions seemed to say-`We desire not a knowledge of his ways.' And though faithfully informed of the blessedness of religion, and the love of Christ, as manifested on the cross towards others; by actions they replied `we will not have this man to reign over us.' We have previously felt for the condition of those without the Gospel, and destitute of its sanctifying influences, but when we now behold how degraded they are, and how unhappy in time and eternity they must be, we pity their case; we rejoice that God has directed our steps to this land of darkness, and pray that as those who love the blessed Saviour, we may shine as lights amid the Surrounding midnight; that these poor souls wandering they know not where, may be induced to embrace the same Saviour, and become heirs, also, of the kingdom of Heaven. We feel that there is here abundant opportunity to try the effect of example; and excellent situation to live religion and show by works that there is a reality in the doctrines we profess to believe and teach them.

"In many respects we are tried, but not discouraged, though so far from home and earthly friends, we feel to adhere the closer to our friend in heaven, who we find in truth 'sticketh closer than a brother.' Leaving, as we have done, at an early age the land that gave us birth, and the friends and other enjoyments we had ever been accustomed to hold dear, it may not seem strange to you that we often think, and speak of what we have left behind; it is hard to realize how great the distance is which separates us from home, but [we] feel happy in the reflection that we are no farther from heaven and our kind parent above. We never for a moment suffer ourselves to be carried away with reflections on our present condition in comparison with what it was in Massachusetts; though deprived of many enjoyments we then possessed, still Christ is ours, and in him all our wants are supplied, and every needed comfort is granted us from his liberal hand; so that while health and the prospect of usefulness are ours, we remain happy and content.

"Brother Meeker left on the 17th for the Ottawa settlement with his family; the man who moved them has just returned and says they arrived in health and spirits. The missionaries are generally in health except my wife, who has been feeble and billious ever since we arrived. We have had for several weeks past almost daily much rain, accompanied with heavy thunder; everything is so wet and decaying, fevers are much feared. Whenever the sun appears, it is so scorching as to be almost unendurable in the open air. My health has uniformly been good thus far.

"I have been so much engaged since my arrival in preparing to fill Bro. Meeker's place, it has kept me out of the printing office more than was disirable. There has for some time past, been much work in the office, so that a man employed by Mr. Meeker before my arrival, is still with me, assisting in printing Mr. McCoy's Register, which is nearly finished.

Yrs. JOHN G. PRATT."

This seems to be the letter proper; but. there is some additional matter on the last page:

"We have found much difficulty in preparing to keep house since Mr. Meeker's departure, every article is exorbitantly high, both of furniture and food. So that of the money left after paying for our journey we have spent 50 dollars for the house. We have purchased but few articles with the above sum, as few as we could get along with, and have nearly exhausted our first half year's salary, still our want of necessary articles in the house is very great. Much is needed to be done both in the house and printing office, before the winter months set in, to make them comfortable. Mr. Meeker feeling unsettled as to his stay at Shawanoe, has neglected repairs; the buildings all being made of log and the space in between each log filled with nothing but mud, the mud has fallen out, leaving large cracks for the admission even of rabbits. We have already been thoroughly drenched while in bed at night several times, and it cannot be conducive to health, especially as slender as is that of my wife. It should be fixed with lime mortar, and in regard to it I hope you will remark, before winter sets in. The following is the state of my money affairs with the Board

Received for myself and wife before leaving Boston.....$115
Do. to defray expenses to this place 185
Do. of Mr. Smith in Cincinnati an addition of.....50

Expense of the journey was $166
Paid for feathers at Louisville, Ky 29
For furniture and so forth at his place.....50

In an unsigned, undated letter, evidently written about the same time, and to Dr. Bones, the young missionary speaks of the new field darkly, as "a land shaddowing with death."

"We are frequently compelled to lament that so little is or can be done for the religious advancement of these Indians. We sometimes think our usefulness might have been greater had we remained among friends at home, but we do not cherish such feelings; if God has sent us to thin part. of his vineyard and bid us occupy it, here we desire to remain until he in his wise providence shall make it plainly our duty to remove. We do not feel ourselves alone; Bro. Rollin and family are the kindest of friends; in their society and council we enjoy much. We look to them as our earthly guides in all matters of doubt, as those who have been over that part of the path of life which remains for us yet to travel.

"On the Sabbath, we as families, have resolved ourselves into a Bible class which we attend to after the public services are over. We feel happy in our situation, notwithstanding [we are] away from home and friends. The health of Mrs. Pratt has not been as good as formerly since our arrival; and so many persons frequently being with us considerably increases her labor. Many friends in Mass. have predicted we shall soon become unreconciled to our condition, because we were young, this has often been mentioned; but while Christ remains our hope; while we love him and his cause; while a field of usefulness remains open at this place we apprehand no disinclination to remain will be manifested by us."

There is an appealingly boyish anxiety in the "P. S.": "Will the magazine be sent to us?" Possibly this was some Baptist periodical.

A letter from the mother of John G. Pratt is a chronicle of the village happenings since the departure of the young missionaries, and voices a concern for their welfare:

"WOBURN, [Mass.] July 31, 1837.

"My Dear With deep feelings of emotion I now sit down to address an absent Child although Huge Mountains and deep valies separate us in person yet we have the privilege of communeicating our thoughts on paper and convey them to each other but their is another and still greater-we can meet at a Throne of Grace and there ask those blessings with will stand in dayly need, in wich you share largely among your friends here. I cannot but rejoice that you have been permited to arive to your destined station without any accident after you left we heard of a great many Steamboat disasters wich caused me some anxiety but learning that most of them started on the Sabbath I was confident that you were not among them . . . . I will endeavor to give you an acount of the afaires here as for myself I have a verry pleasant situation and find Woburn people friendly and inteligent Louisa is with me yet [a daughter] Harrison [possibly a son] is still in North Reading has had but little Business . . . they have a son wich was born the 27 of May Olivia [Harrison's wife] got along verry comfortable for 2 weeks . . . Harrison at her solicitation and without the consent of her Nurs prepared and gave her some Bacon wich distressed her verry much she went into fits and continued to have them for 24 hours and did not sleep all that time continually talking upon every subject except religion she would repeatedly say John [G. Pratt] is Married is he not well I did not go to his wedding at other times she would say I did not have any of his Cake. she has since been to W [oburn] and appears very much herself they have a fine little boy they think of nameing John Gill or John Harrison I supose you will have no objection . . . . Wee attended meeting yesterday Saw George Evans [brother of Olivia Evans Pratt and a strong Abolitionist] he came to W [oburn] to attend an Antislaverry Lecture by W [endell] Philps he said he had not received a letter from Olivia he said he suposed you had not got your lugage yet was one reason . . . as neare as I can learn Olivia's mother did not break her heart about her [Olivia] leaving Brother Silas Richardson he called to see me the other day says that the Printing Business is verry dull. Mr. Gould has dismissed most of his printers . . . Mr. Clough has no painting . . . he has ben to Boston to seek imployment but could find none . . . Capn. West has failed and Esq. Funnall [?] Posted down to Martha's Vinyard to atach his property but it was all out of his power to find anything . . . W. O. Johnson your late teacher and principal of the Lattin Academy is no more . . . . Caleb Shute has resigned the office in the Sabbath School Depository and ben out of Business for 3 months . . . I do not know any one that does not Complain of the times Business of all kinds is stagnated Many that were rich have become poor and those that were poor have become distressed it verryly [is] serious times here in a Pecuniary point you are better of [f] where you are . . . I have ben thus particular because you wanted to know all the particulars now I want you in return to tell me all the particulars and wheather you have got cured of the dispepsia and how Olivia's health is I feel sometimes that you were to young to go so far to labour among the Indians wich are so savage and a climate so uncongenial? I then ask myself the question was it an uncalled for Sacrifice . . . I have lived nearly 60 years in the pleasantest part of our Country, but have found it thus far but a vaste howling wilderness and a desart to the aspiring mind wich believes nothin true but Heaven.

"Yesterday we attended the ordination of Mr. Hoper and there I saw your Father and Mother Evans from them I received a letter to read from Olivia to Emily Mr. E [vans] said . . . he was verry anxious about you on account of your leakey house he said he should see the board and have Something done

"I will now give you some information concerning our ministering brethren. Mr. Sayer of South Reading has ben found guilty of kissing his maidservant it took place some time since but of late the Editor of the Trumpit was applied to to publish it he desirous to know the fact aplyed to Sayer to know the truth of the story he acknowledged it but remarked that it was more disgraceful than wicked it was not published but the story is going the rounds amongh the Universalists the Church However has settled it with him and forgiven . . . Another case is that of Mr. Harris of Malden he has come out a Universalist and publickly acknowledged it before his Congregation and the consequence was that his people dismised him he has got up quite a flowerishing high Scool in M[alden] has contracted for a valuable Apperatus for the use of it he has also applied to several young ladies to become his Wife but has hitherto ben unsuccessful . . . Amasa [Brown, her son-in-law] is here he thinks much of you and prays fervantly for you. Louisa [Brown's wife] says she often imagines herself where you are and looks in to see what you are doing your Aunt Otterman wishes to be remembered to you with her best wishes and kind regards she thinks much of you Aunt Shute and family visited me this summer they tender the same love give my best love to Olivia and tell her to rite me verry soon I hope you will be suported under your various hardships and tryals to this end you must look to God he a lone is able to give you strength eaqual to your day to him I commend you ELIZABETH PRATT to John G. Pratt."

The faint warning of the struggle to come a quarter of a century later, in the reference to Wendell Phillips' antislavery lecture, deepens in tone in the letters from George Evans himself, several years later. But on the whole the New England correspondents were more concerned with the Indian perils to which their young family in the new territory were subjected. Elizabeth Pratt's letters, in their fidelity to homely detail, must have somewhat appeased the human hunger for home news; and for all their rather bleakly maternal note the "deep feelings of emotion" are there.

A calamitous strain runs through much of the eastern news, reflecting an economic depression similar to that of our own times. An undated letter with those of 1837, from Catherine Wellington, contains the intelligence that

"L. Wyman of Woburn has faild and commenced bisness again at Hudson faild again and tryed to hang himself B. Brooks in company with Darius has taken the bankruptcy law and now they are looking him up, so you see we all have a share."

Another letter of this period, undated and signed only "M. L. L.," swings away from the religious line a bit in confessing:

"I suppose that some time hence I may leave the home of my youth and cast my lot with another, but do you keep this hint & not let any one know that ever I gave it to you. that person is a relative although a distant one, a person that you never saw, my friends like him. there may be something to prevent on further acquaintance, but I hope my heavenly father will direct me." There is a marginal note: "Burn this." O faithless Olivia!

Another letter from young Pratt to Dr. Bolles, September 22, 1837, complains of receiving no word from the Society to which he was responsible, and contains the news that Mrs. Pratt "has been very sick for some weeks past."

"The disease appears to have been brought on" he writes "by the change of climate and working beyond her strength . . . . The labor is too severe for her feeble constitution and help is not easily obtained `in these ends of the earth.'"

Again the appealing postscript: "Can we have the magazine?"

Before Dr. Bolles has answered this, the third of John G. Pratt's letters to him, in the collection, comes one to his "Beloved Children" from Amos Evans, under date, Reading, October 23, 1837:

"We have heard some thing respecting the hostile appearance of the Osage Indians" the anxious father says. "We hope & pray that the Lord will preserve you from all harm & restore your health that you may labor for him. But we ask, if the Indians appear quarrelsome & have lost confidence in the whites & are not disposed to receive the truth from you or hear your words, does not prudence & duty require you to leave them? We know God can preserve us amid the greatest dangers, but can there be any confidence placed in the specious appearance of friendship of the Indians, when their jealousies are aroused against our people? . . . Dr. Bolles read your letter sent to us, said that he did not believe it was required that you do so much for other missionaries, to labour excessively & destroy your health, or to continue there for any considerable time if it is evident you cannot enjoy health in that climate . . . We hope your house will be made comfortable should you be directed in the providence of God, & spared to labour there Mr. Pratt's mother & brother have recently called on us . . . We all exchange letters which are sent from you anticipate a harder winter than we have been wont to see. We live in an extravagant world, & at an extravagant age; and we must now learn by experience that we do not really need (as you have expressed it in your letter) so much as we have been in the habit of thinking. And now as to the little church, you requested me to write all about it. As to our outward sircumstances the state of business is such that I think we shall not be able at present to pay the Debt on the Meeting] house, the notes on those pews which were just sold are now due, & altho 20 per cent was paid at the sale yet some say they had rather give up their pews than to be compelled to pay the remainder at this time; for notwithstanding the scarcity of money & the want of employment every article of food bears a high price. Yet we are waiting for brighter prospects, & would not repine under these adverse providences, but pray that. they may all work for our good.

HILL: EARLY BAPTIST MISSIONS 101

"I feel I am not half awake, & that I do not feel a hundredth part as I ought upon the subject [of religion.] I sometimes think I wish to feel so as to prevent my usual repose, that I may offer up my supplications with strong crying & tears to him who is able & willing to answer the prayer of faith. But Alas, it is too often otherwise with me."

On the same sheet, George Evans, Olivia's brother, wrote:

"In one of Olivia's letters she mentioned about Amos [another brother] and me thinking of the West . . . This emigrating is not what it is cracked up to be. I have seen a great many from there who do not give very favorable accounts of the country and the people."

It is in his short letter, too, that "little Rosetta," a younger sister, makes her first appearance:

"She says she should like to slip her hand into a large pan of red plums and I don't doubt it."

On November 20, 1837, Dr. Bolles, of Boston, writes the long- looked-for letter:

"My DEAR BROTHER-We are concerned to hear of the sickness of your amiable companion & hope you will take measures without delay to afford her some relief. If no faithful assistant can be obtained for her for a time, she must decline serving others than her own family, as I perceive from her letters to the friends in Reading, she has accustomed herself to do. Strangers have no claim to crowd themselves on your hospitality, when your wife is actually too feeble to serve them, nor shd. you hesitate under such circumstances to excuse her, & request them to seek accommodations elsewhere. The house which you occupy must be made tight & comfortable, & we wish, if it has not been done, that you will take immediate measures to make it so, when this reaches you. You will exercise a sound discretion as to the amount of repairs, & see that they are obtained on the best terms & report the same to us. For the expense so incurred, presuming it will not be large, you will be at liberty to draw on our Treasurer."

It must have warmed the hearts and cheered the failing spirits of the youthful missionaries, so recently transplanted from New England soil, to know that the Society in Boston was really concerned for their earthly as well as their spiritual welfare. Anxiety over the health of Olivia Pratt spread through both families in the East, as well as to their friends, and occasioned much perplexity as to what Divine Providence expected of its young emissaries under the trying circumstances. That they were both homesick to the genuine impairment of their health, is apparent. The eastern contingent of the blood might advise and caution, as they assuredly did in their letters, but seldom was anything that might be construed as a command to return ever given. The New England Baptist did not trifle with the Higher Will, nor question it too rigidly. In spite of the very natural forebodings of Olivia's mother and father, and the mother of John G. Pratt, there seems to have been a feeling among them all that the very finger of God was pointing to the west, and that His hand was overshadowing His bewildered children in "that Western Valley" where young, untried Olivia Evans (while still in the shelter of Charlestown Seminary) had expressed herself as willing to "labor" and if necessary, "to die."

But she lived to see much of it "the cultivated garden of the Lord" under the ministrations of John G. Pratt and herself, though not until they had both found in a welter of hardships and disappointments-and in times of stress when the Society in Boston seemingly had failed them that "there is no discharge in that war."

"Our prayer is," Elizabeth Pratt once wrote to her much-tried son (Nov. 22, 1837), "that you may come out of the furness as gold tryed in the fire."

They could hardly have done that had it not been for the wholesome cheer of the home letters, burdened though they are, for the most part, with deep religious solemnity in contemplating the ultimate salvation, not only of the western savages but of themselves. The quaint expression, "indulging a hope," occurs in almost every letter, even in an undated and unsigned one: "Sarah Williams has lately spoke of a hope."

The friendly, heart-warming gossip of Elizabeth Pratt's letters is conscientiously toned down before their close. On November 22, 1837, she writes:

"Joseph Shute has returned and appears . . . much improved in his manners at least. I should think he had returned from an Acadimy instead of a man of Wars vessel. he bids fair to make a stidey man Ebens wife has become pios and James wife also I hope their Husbands will soon follow their example . . . I need tryals and the Lord knows how to try me."

There are but two letters from Catherine Evans, the mother of Olivia, one a scant half page to "Ever Remembered Olivia," under date April 16, 1838, after the arrival at Shawanoe Baptist Mission of little Ann Eliza Pratt, to whom brief reference is made: "Rosett says you must kiss Ann for she and Jonas."

But some years later, from the pen of the same young Rosett (February 13, 1841), we have an appealing picture of the mother:

"She says . . . I must write for her . . . She cannot tell you how much she wants to see you all. when she thinks of you for awhile the great big tears would roll down her cheeks . . . she hopes she shall see Ann before she grows so large she shall not know her she has got the little chair all painted up green ready for her when she comes."

HILL: EARLY BAPTIST MISSIONS 103

From Catherine Evans herself, in the second letter (September 14, 1843)

"Do write very soon. I feel as if I could not wait one day longer. How I long to see them little children [Ann and Lucius] do kiss them for me. Tell Ann she cant tell how much I do want to see her and ask her if she thinks she shall ever see me again."

The sweet and shadowy figures of the two children, especially little Ann, run in and out of the letters; but sometime before 1848 she fades from the picture; but not until she had made one or two visits to the East with her parents, since on March 4, 1844, from Reading, Mary Evans, the sister of Olivia, writes:

"It seems but yesterday that I saw Ann in grandma's garden picking posies to carry to meeting."

There is nothing in the letters more poignant than the picture that simple sentence draws, unless it is of a contented little Ann sitting by the loving-hearted Catherine Evans, in the little green-painted chair.

It is to be regretted that there are so few letters in the collection from John G. Pratt himself, and none from Olivia Pratt after her marriage. There are scores of letters from the East; human, wholesome, intelligent, for all the depressing character of their somberly religious content. They are valuable as well for the faithful delineation of the sturdy life of New England in that period, from which so much of the actual life of Kansas was drawn; and which, in its hard idealism, was no doubt the mainspring of the fanatical Puritanism of which Kansas stands accused at times. There is prima facie evidence that the letters did much to keep alive two valiant young souls who had chosen the Indian service as their portion until the hardy faith of the early Baptists, somewhat modified of its primitive sternness, had taken unmistakable root in the Missouri valley. The Baptist church in Kansas was founded on a rock, no less that of Israel because human hands in New England helped in the laying of it.

There are varying views of the positive and negative roles of the missionaries in Kansas (and elsewhere). The fact remains that they played a large part in the lives of the individuals their "oversaw" in their charges. Some more than others, as in any other part of life. That they intruded themselves into Indian "politics" is apparent in many cases. Whether to the good or bad, they were following the dictates of their respective consciences and responsibilities. The following letter, transcribed by Michael Caron mcaron@sunflower.com , indicates Reverend Pratt's involvement in the inner workings of the Delaware; his niceness in staying out of one part of it; and, obviously, a source of intelligence for the Federal Government, as the job obviously called for. Then, as now, it is difficult when you mix religious obligations with public ones:

> Delaware, K. T. Jan. 9, 1859
> Dr. C.[harles] Robinson.-
> Dear sir. No doubt you have been looking for us at Washington for some time. It has been our expectation for the past two weeks, to be on the way, but the Chiefs disagree considerably, and numerous councils have been held. They are not now able to set a time to leave. This delay results from a suspicion, on the part of some of the old men, that the delegation may be induced to sell hem out, and the request of the Commissioner that delegation be supplied with "full power" to act, has only increased this feeling.
> An effort has been made to cripple the influence of old Sarcoxy, as it was known that he would favor a treaty. A few others of the delegation were suspected of entertaining a desire to sell. I was, myself, invited to go with them, but as Sarcoxy injudiciously told the council he already had a man in Washington to attend to his business, at the same time intimating that you were the person referred to, suspicion then fell on myself and Charles Journeycake. I now think that it is wiser for both of us to remain at home. My reason for this conclusion is this - it has become the plan of those opposing a [new] treaty. [That is]To send an extra delegation specifically charged to prevent any changes. Now if Charles, and myself, remain at home this can be prevented, as we are about the only ones known to be intimate with you. Sarcoxy's party, as the delegation now stands, is fully represented. With the other delegates, is Isaac Journeycake, and Charles Ketcham, both favorable to a change. John Conner, also, has a large tract of land in Texas, and privately expresses a desire to sell out and go to it. His brother Jim is the only one likely to be obstinate. He will, no doubt, go with John, after a slight hesitation. On the whole the arrangement is better than it would be for Charles and myself to go - and then be followed by an opposing party.

It will be the policy of all these delegates to shake their heads at any suggestion for a purchase, but I know with the one exception mentioned above, all are anxious to sell. The approach to them should be careful - but will be, in the end, gladly acceded to.

I hope you will not let there be an arrangement to treat will [with] them here - there are a dozen parties seeking to purchase these lands - and if [to be continued. I seem to be missing the remainder of this letter. Editor]

THE BIG HOUSE

Delaware Big House Photograph and Sketch from Conner Prairie http://www.connerprairie.org/HistoryOnline/images

The "Big House" was the main religious building of the Delaware Indians. It was used for an annual religious ceremony to thank the Great Manitou and the lesser Manitou for the good fortune of the last year and to pray for protection from future calamity and destructive natural forces (manitou was their word for spirit or deity).1

The purpose of this paper is to examine the complex ways in which the Delaware Big House can be read semiotically as a cultural text that demarcates the social, religious and political reflexivity of the culture.2 The array of signs and symbols that are imbedded within the architecture will be described through an analysis of its conception, construction, and use. Within these three larger processes, I will look at how the Delawares formed, informed, and transformed themselves through their use of symbols.

CONCEPTION

The conception, or plan, of the Delaware Indian Big House was based on an origin myth in which the building's purpose was explained, its decorative images prescribed, and its appropriate uses dictated.3

Through the myth of the Big House, the Delawares addressed their fears of nature's destructive forces. The myth explained that "long ago the very foundation of life itself, the earth, was split open by a devastating quake." From this opening in the earth, "The forces of evil and chaos erupted from the underworld in the form of dust, smoke, and a black liquid."

The humans then met in council and concluded that the disruptions had occurred because they had neglected their proper relationship with the Great Manitou. They prayed for power and guidance. The manitou spoke to them in dreams, telling them to build a house that would re-create the cosmos and how to conduct a ceremony that would evoke the power to sustain it.

This segment of the myth subtlety informed the Delawares about how they formed. This can be seen in the first line of this section where it says "The humans then met in council," or came together in order to jointly explore and define the actions of the natural (and supernatural) world and to address the reordering, or in reality, coming to terms with the cosmos. In this indirect way, those with religious and/or political power set the stage upon which they would dictate, through symbolic representations, the rules by which the members of the society would be expected to abide by.

By "telling them to build a house that would re-create the cosmos," the myth transformed the house into a symbol. For the Delaware the universe consisted of twelve houses stacked one upon the other. The Great Manitou resided in the twelfth and highest house. When entering the Big House, the people envisioned themselves as passing through these twelve stacked houses. In the form of the Big House, the concept of "house" acquired meaning beyond that of its individual existence in and of itself.4

In the myth, the buildings interior decorative motifs were set out in rough form. The myth goes on to explain that the Big House Ceremony, "would establish their moral relationship with the Manitou." Inside the building, the myth told thein to carve faces of their gods on wooden posts. In their ceremonial dance, they would stop at each mask and speech to it as if it were alive. The building , then, facilitated a " face to face" encounter with their gods. These recitations were believed to "renew and revivify the individual's relationship with his or her personal manitou."

Symbolically, by building the Big House, the Delawares could right what they had made wrong, to balance what they had made unbalanced, and thus protect themselves from total destruction. The myth informed the people as to what kinds of associations belonged with the Big House. From this, it was determined what symbolic forms these should take, what symbolic action should occur in conjunction with these objects, and how these would interact with the individual and, ultimately, with the group.

According to this myth, the Delaware also had to follow certain guidelines using the Big House to maintain this fragile sense of order. These primarily had to do with cleanliness and purity.

The old time was one of impurity, symbolized by dirt and smoke. To make the transition into sacred time everyone and everything had to be purified including attendants, reciters of dreams, and the Big House itself. Purifying fires burned on either side of the center post. Persons or objects in a state of impurity, such as menstruating women were always excluded from the Big House.

This piece further informed the actions of the Delaware, as well as substantiating that the Big House and all the dictates that went along with it did, and will, transform the world and the Delawares from a lesser, more dangerous position or situation to one of greater stability. The myth made this transformation appear as if it were reached and maintained by consensus of the whole of the Delaware people, guided by a supernatural being, instead of by only those Delaware in positions of religious and/or political authority.

With the rough form and proper use of the Big House "supernaturally preordained," the Delaware Indians were then given the task of transforming the mythical conception into a concrete, visible, and functional form. The myth told them to recreate the cosmos in the form of a house. They had two types of house forms to choose from, the rectangular floor plan of their permanent dwellings, the longhouse or the circular plan of their temporary winter structures, the wigwam .

The longhouse was relatively narrow in width and could range in length from twenty to four hundred feet, depending on the number of families living inside. Its interior was divided off into sections about every twenty feet interval with each section representing one family's living space. As additional room was needed for new families, new sections could easily be added on to the end of the longhouse. The long walls bore two rows of shelving, about five to six feet wide. The top shelf was for food storage while the lower was for sleeping. Each family area had its own fire pit and smoke hole.

The longhouse form was selected for the Big House over the wigwam even though the wigwam was much easier to build. From the Delaware's reverence for the circle in their symbolism, and its ease of construction, it would seem more logical for them to have chosen the wigwam. So it seems that the selection of the longhouse form for the Big House was based on some other criteria than its ease of construction or the natural symbolism in its form.

There are four aspects of the longhouse that probably led to it being chosen.

The first reason was the capability of the longhouse for horizontal expansion. In Delaware religious belief, the universe was conceived of as twelve houses stacked one upon on another with the Great Manitou residing in the upper most house. In a sense, the longhouse, was composed of separate family units that were "stacked" end to end. The longhouse depicted horizontally the vertical conception of the mythic cosmos.

Therefore, the longhouse was better equipped for communal living. As a result, the longhouse form was more easily transformed into a symbol of unity and communal relations with the gods and the entire cosmos.

Unlike, the wigwam, the longhouse embodied permanence and stability. The wigwam, being a temporary structure, would not seem suitable to represent a cosmos or universe that is permanent and timeless.

The final aspect of the longhouse that led to its transformation into the Big House was the importance the Delawares placed on an orientation with the four cardinal points.5 Being rectangular, the longhouse could be easily oriented. Directional markers served important functions within the Big House ceremony.

As a result of its inherent, latent symbolism, the longhouse form was commandeered and transformed into the Big House, creating a new form packed with systems of symbolism, based on their powerful referential to other symbolism systems.

The siting and orientation of the Big House symbolized religious beliefs and were of major importance in the "framing" of the Big House structure and ceremonial actions within the larger community.6 Adopted from the established longhouse form, the Big House had to undergo a transformative process from secular to sacred. The Big House had to be physically and cognitively differentiated from its parent domestic form. This was accomplished, in part, by stripping the interior of all bedding and shelving structures, familial section divisions and secular decorations and objects. This action removed all the symbolic structures that had framed the longhouse form into a place of domesticity- a home.

New symbols were conceived to correspond with the origin myth and the social, religious, and political aims of those with authority. The more a ruler could control their people's thoughts, beliefs, and actions, the more power they could have. Power is invested onto the ruler by society's willingness to be controlled, manipulated, or governed. The specific form this successful manipulation took was of little import. It was only important to the elite that manipulation had been allowed.

The Big House was a long, narrow, rectangular building, placed on an east-west axis. It had only two doors, placed at each of its narrow ends. The doors accommodated the symbolic entering and exiting of the celestial bodies, the sun and moon. As the sun and moon enter the sky world in the east and exit it in the west, so shall the people enter the re-created cosmos of the Big House.

The combination of physical architecture, mythical movement, and human action assist in the framing of the Big House as a sacred site. This east-west line also reflected the Delaware's concept of the "Good White Path," the path man travels through his/her journey from birth to death.7

CONSTRUCTION

At certain times of the year, as prescribed by the origin myth, the elders taught the young how to gather materials, use the tools, and employ the proper methods for constructing the Big House. The act of teaching, although seemingly innocent and devoid of ulterior motives, could also have been motivated by power politics. Limiting what was taught, when, and to whom, served to empowered the possessor of this special knowledge. If a person gave away all they knew, all at once, they would no longer be of much value to their students or the larger society. So by doling out knowledge in spoonfuls, a person confirmed and strengthen their membership in society.

Rebuilding took place every time a clan relocated. Therefore, every time they moved they symbolically recreated the universe at the new location. The building and periodic rebuilding of the Big House represented the renewal of the cosmos.8 Repetition is an extremely strong tool for indoctrination. By repeating a symbolic, ritual action, the ideology behind the symbol becomes absorbed into the unconscious thought patterns of the participants. By this method, what were once consciously abstract ideas are transformed into concrete "facts."

In its earliest known form, the Big House had an arched roof supported by saplings which were fixed in the ground, bent over and the other end planted in the ground (fig.3). Each arched sapling, conveniently, created the Good White Path in miniature. In the second half of the 19th century, the Big House took on a gabled roof. The poles which formed the Big House's skeleton were tied with strips of inner bark or root fibers in a cross pattern that represented the "cosmic cross" and referred to the four cardinal points. These construction elements, bent or tied wood, served the interests of several symbolic systems simultaneously: the "Good White Path, the cosmic cross, and the four cardinal points. Together, this set of symbols, corresponded with the ideas of "joining or binding together," one of the major purposes of the Big House ceremony.9

The ribs and poles were then covered with wide strips of bark, usually from elm trees, that had been carefully removed in one piece. The removal of the bark required concentration and great care in action. Here, even in a small way, manipulation is further witnessed. By dictating that bark be used for covering the Big House skeleton, the authorities created a set of prescribed, focused symbolic actions that had to be repeated over and over again by the builders. The bark pieces were held into place by external poles pressing the bark against the interior poles. The bark is, was a sense, sandwiched between two sets of poles. In its early barrel-roofed form, the Big House and its bark covering may have symbolized the "cosmic tree."10 By about the year eighteen hundred, the Delaware began to extensively use log construction and the best descriptions of the Big House we have from the early twentieth century show a sophisticated use of log joinery, in which the cosmic tree may have been symbolized through the elements rather than the overall form.11

As stated in its origin myth, the Big House, and all that entered into it, had to be pure. For this reason, no metal objects of any kind were allowed in the construction or use of the Big House. No metal nails could be used in the joining of structural members, but if nails were needed, bone pieces were used in their place.

This also could have been an attempt to put forth or further a wish to maintain the use of only materials found natural in nature or to keep a form that could be constructed independent of manufactured goods. In this way, the Delawares could remain independent of whites and could take apart, move, and reconstruct the Big House with relative ease. Worn out members could be replaced at any time by the surrounding trees and other natural resources.

It can also be speculated that this was another way to control the crowd. By requiring that all participants remain clean and pure during the course of the ceremony, coupled with the other symbolism in operation, a general attitude of reverence could be obtained. This would be desirous to maintain conformity, consensus, control, and peace. If participants were unbathed, and participating in secular and/or lewd activities during the period set apart for the ceremony, the power of the ceremony would be lessened. The Big House, its decorative symbols and the ceremony would have difficulty in retaining meaning and, ultimately, power over the members of the community.

The walls, like the cross ties, represented the four cardinal points. The walls created a closed, bounded space for the enactment of re-creating and sustaining the cosmos. The Delaware indicated that, by the very nature of the world, all humans were bound together by the four cardinal points. Dictating that the walls of the Big House represent these four cardinal points, fell in line with the notion of the Big House as a model of the recreated universe.

One of the main purposes for the Big House and its ceremony, in addition to its intensive religious role, was to unite or bind the various clans and their members together in a close spiritual, social, and political association. This was accomplished not only by making use of the symbolism of the four cardinal points, but also by creating a structure that forced participants to face one another in a close narrow space that was shut off from any outside distraction.

The structure served to create harmony with the natural as well as the supernatural world. The floor was made of well tamped dirt and represented the lesser deity, or Manitou, of Mother Earth. The purpose of keeping the floor well tamped was to prohibit the raising of dust. As mentioned in the origin myth of the Big House, dirt and dust symbolized the impurity of the old evil time.

The ceiling represented the sky, the domain of the "Elder Brothers" the sun and moon. Only two holes pierced the ceiling, one above each of the two sacred fires. Some scholars believe that the two fires and the two holes in the ceiling indicated worship of the sun and moon. In his Semiotics, Preziosi demonstrates how common many of the symbolic associations mentioned above are.

The ceiling of a structure is simultaneously meaningful systemically, as a component in the formal definition of a space cell, and may also be significant in a given corpus sematectonically, as in the case where the ceiling of a house or temple is intended to symbolize the heavens (in contrast to the walls, which may symbolize four cardinal directions of the horizon, and in contrast to the floor - paved or not paved which may symbolize the earth, the underworld, and so forth)12

In order to physically and cognitively separate the Big House from other house forms, no internal decorations were allowed inside, except for twelve faces carved on eleven poles, three on each side of the long walls, two on each door way, and two faces carved on the center pole . These were the faces of the lesser manitou as prescribed by the origin myth and were ritually painted during the Big House Ceremony. These faces represented the Seven Thunders, the Four Cardinal points and Mother Earth (The Seven Thunders had features of both man and bird and provided rain for the crops and protected man from water monsters. They were also in control of lightning).

Faces also represented an individual's personal manitou or spiritual guardian. As part of tribal puberty rights, initiates go on a guest in which they fasted and isolated themselves until they had a vision. In this vision, a spirit, feeling pity for them in their hunger and isolation, would offer to become their guardian. From that day forward, that spirit would be ever present with the person. Thanks for guidance and protection was given to these personal manitou at least once a year, usually at the Big House Ceremony.

The center pole could have represented either the Great Manitou himself or else the cosmic tree which reached up through the multilayered universe to the Great Manitou. The cosmic tree was regarded by the Delaware much like many other culture's "tree of life." This central pole was also referred to as the "navel of the world." This "navel" belief was also common among the ancient Greeks 13

USE

Conceived of mythic origin, and constructed according to symbolic rules, The Big House was now ready to negotiate human action in order to illicit reflexive, symbolic associations. Delaware society consisted of three clans or phratries: Wolf, Tortoise, and Turkey. The Big House Ceremony was hosted by one clan or phratry who invited other neighboring phratries to participate. This was a way of uniting the people for socialization. The Big House physically became the center of all activity within the encampment. Visiting phratries set up camp around the Big House and arranged themselves first by gender then by phratry. This was reflexive of the real social structure in which men and women participated in distinctly different work, were often physically separated due to this differentiated work, and were symbolically endowed with different types of spirituality. Women camped to the north and men to the south.14

This separation also symbolized the dictated celibacy of the participants.15 According to the myth, the past evil world was impure. In contrast, the re-created cosmos, as represented by the Big House, was to be absent of all impurities. Therefore anything that would taint a person was to be controlled. Any uncontrollable impurities, such as menstruation, eliminated a person's eligibility for participating in the ceremony. For this reason, sexual abstinence was required and menstruating women were kept separate. The segregation of men and women within the encampment symbolically guarded against corruption.

Within the Big House, fires were prepared and tended by the men. No women were allowed inside until the fires were lit. Outside, women prepared the ceremonial foods: corn mush, dried meats, and berries. They placed them in wooden bowls accompanied by shell spoons.16 In preparation for the ceremony, women swept the Big House twelve times. The number twelve played a major role in Delaware Indian belief. For them, the universe consisted of twelve houses stacked one upon the other with the Great Manitou residing in the twelfth and highest house. When entering the Big House, the people envisioned themselves as passing through these twelve stacked houses. Within the Big House structure, there were twelve faces carved on the eleven poles. During the ceremony, dancers paused at each face and recited verses to them. Between each dance, the Good White Path was swept twelve times with a turkey feather. Prayers to the Manitou were always said twelve times. The Big House Ceremony usually lasted twelve days.

To purify the Big House and its inhabitants cedar leaves were burned. Between dances, tobacco was smoked to maintain purity and to please the manitou. The sensual burning of these organic materials and the fragrant scents they created, symbolized the spiritual purification of the participants and the building.

The physical separation of gender and phratries in the encampment surrounding the Big House was further maintained inside. Each phratry sat on the floor in a special reserved area, within which women and men sat separately. Hierarchical separation was also seen in that the hosting phratry's sachem (chief), the Bringer-In, the caretakers, and drums (this is the term for both the instrument and those who play them) occupied separate places of distinction. In a single, largely undecorated room, without clear architectural divisions, the Delawares framed themselves within their phratries and, within their phratries, within the sexes. By this framing, they informed all others of their social affiliations.

The animals that represented the phratries (Wolf, Turkey and Tortoise), were not totemic in nature, rather they were seen as emblems or mascots. The Delawares did not believe them to be their ancestors. They were chosen for specific characteristics the Delawares revered. When different phratries came together for the Big House Ceremony, they retained their separate identities by sitting in different areas and displaying their phratry emblems.

Delaware society was matriarchal. The eldest mother was called chief maker, because, although she herself, nor any woman, would ever rule, she appointed chiefs and had the power to remove them. A male could not marry a female of his same phratry.

Although each phratry retained their individual identities at the Big House

Ceremony, one of the ceremony's main functions was to unite the Delaware people. They came together in spiritual oneness, for the purpose of thanking and appeasing the manitou. Within the enclosed, bounded, unbroken space of the Big House, they formed a single narrative of praise, and raised one voice in prayer to deter future destructive forces.

The ceremony commenced after the host gave a thanksgiving address. He then started the first song and dance. The snapping turtle shell rattle stuffed with corn was an important symbolic object within the Big House and the corresponding ceremony. In later times, these rattles were hung from the rafters over the Good White Path. These rattles were used by the leader of the dance as he recited his puberty dream quest or vision.

Following the Good White Path, the dancers preceded counterclockwise to replicate the movement of the sun from east to west. This left orientation was also seen in everyday ritualized action. The left hand was holy while the right was unholy. This movement to the left was also believed to represent the Indian belief in life after death.

As the ceremony proceeded, the lead dancer stopped at each of the carved posts and recited their vision while mimicking the actions of their personal guardian-spirit or Manitou. This is an interesting element of the ceremony and Delaware belief, for the dancer came face to face with their gods and gave testimony to spiritual transformation. The dance and song were individual creations. No one there, but the gods, knew whether what the dancers said in his/her song actually occurred. The songs were invented by the dancer. There may have been a set range of styles that were considered appropriate for this recitation, but the final construction was solely up to the individual.

As the dancers made their way around the "Path", all in the Big House remained standing, and many joined the dancer. While the dancer exposed the intimate details of his/her puberty rites, he/she was visibly and symbolically supported by the standing audience, the dancers who had joined his/her side in the dance, and the receptive eyes of the manitou he/she faced at each verse's recitation.

Segregation of gender was maintained in one of two ways. Either the women danced in a cluster as they made their way around or they danced in a separate circle from the men.

In between dances, the Good White Path was swept, by both men and women, twelve times with turkey feathers. During these intermissions, tobacco was smoked to please the manitou, the fires were tended by male caretakers and cedar leaves were burned. Also at this time, the bowls of corn mush, dried meat and berries were passed counterclockwise about the Big House. Each person took but one spoonful of the food, so that all could, and would, share the ritual ceremonial feast.17

During the course of the ceremony, the rattle was passed around and any male who wished to recite his vision and dance could take up the rattle. The dances continued way into the night until no one else wished to take up the rattle. The participants then filed out the west door, raised their arms towards the heavens and prayed twelve times in unison to the Great Manitou. After this prayer, a great feast was held back inside the Big House.

On the final night of the ceremony, women could dance and recite their visions. This segment began when the women entered the house from the east carrying wooden bowls of grease paint. They painted the men's cheeks red and black. The men then rose and painted the carved faces on the poles half red and half black.18 This part of the ceremony was a later addition and represented the "False Being." It was said that in a dream, a certain man of visions saw a powerful manitou whose face was half red and half black and whose mouth was bizarrely fashioned. This false being represented a powerful evil force. The man traveled to the east and saw the creature, returned home, and cut a mask from a tree in the image of the spirit he had seen. It was felt that something terrible would occur if they did not let the "False Being" into the Big House and if they did not pay him respect. This "False Being" was believed to represent the white settlers. The red half of the face represented the Indians while the black represented the evil, impure white man. Many believed that letting the "False Being" into the Big House led to the decline and decay of Indian spirituality and culture.

During the ceremony, one of the hosting participants acted out the part of the False Being. He was the only person in the Big House who wore a costume that masked his identity. His costume consisted of a floor length fur coat, bear skin stockings, a great wooden face that was painted half red and half black and carved with exaggerated mouth. He carried a tortoise rattle and at no time let any part of his real body be seen. Ironically enough, the role of the "False Being" was to rid the ceremony of those who were impure.

At the end of the ceremony, the chief gave an arms length of strung wampum (beads that functioned as money and were considered to be the heart of the Delaware) to those who assisted in the ceremony. A bowl of loose wampum was passed around and each participant took two wampum beads. When they exited the Big House for the final time, they placed the two wampum beads in their mouth as they chanted their final prayer. This was believed to represent the Delaware putting their hearts in their mouth and praying from their hearts. The distribution of wampum also represented a distribution of wealth. It also indicated that there was a need for such a distribution. There must have been varying levels of wealth and power within the tribe.

The final acts of the Big House Ceremony entailed closing or sealing the cosmos as represented in the Big House. The fires were extinguished, first the eastern fire and then the western fire. The ashes from the fires were thrown out the west door.

The Big House Ceremony was usually performed once a year, unless calamity occurred or seemed eminent, and then it would be performed as often as needed. In later years, the role of the Big House was expanded to include other religious ceremonies such as male puberty endurance tests. These consisted of bringing another symbolically highly packed structure, the sweat lodge, into the Big House. On these occasions, a symbolic structure was used to house another symbolic structure. But as time passed, the sacred use of the Big House was expanded further to include political activities. When it became a common meeting place for the tribal council, it was then that the previously subtle representation of political authority seen during the Big House Ceremonies became blatantly obvious.

CONCLUSION

The Delaware Big House functioned semiotically and symbolically on three levels: conception, construction, and use. The Delaware Big House existed first in myth. There are many examples of mythic architecture that remained bound within language. Streets of gold, castles in the air, and emerald cities can serve symbolic functions without ever having to be built. The Delaware Big House, acted out an entire level of encoded messages before a branch was cut.

When the Big House was transformed from myth into reality, it could have been framed solely by its symbolic imagery and viewed passively as a work of sculpture, such as in the case of the shrine or memorial. But it was more than a shrine or three dimensional piece of sculpture, it was a machine that stimulated and accommodated symbolic interaction. As such, it became reinterpreted, along with the sights, sounds, smells, jesters, costumes, and narratives of the ceremony back into imagination through experience.

The Big House naturally fit into the symbolic concepts within the Delawares' world view. The Big House brought the Delawares' symbolically created social, political, and religious worlds together, to function in unison. This concert of symbolism, made visible the world and life of the Delawares.

Delaware Street Rag by Michael Caron

First Song: XENGWIKÁON [A Story]

Verse VII: Big House

The most controversial element of Mary's [Mary Zeigler's] unorthodox historical geography was her contention that the Lenape Big House, the Xengwikáon, came into existence at the time of contact with Finns. The Xengwikáon was the most important ceremonial structure of the Lenape people. It was, as the English translation implies, a very large ceremonial house. It was made of notched logs. The Big House was a double log cabin with two openings in the roof. Few Lenape have ever claimed the log version of the Big House existed before European contact. Yet Mary discovered there was virtually nothing in the academic literature or in Lenape oral traditions concerning the origins of the Big House itself. Lenape mythology did, however, have a lot to say about the origins of many ceremonial practices, elements of which clearly dated back into the depths of their cultural memory. This large log cabin adopted as a religious site was simply dismissed as mere copying of pioneer log churches. That was about as ludicrous, and as easy to disprove, as the notion that Vikings had brought the sweat lodge to America.

Mary found documentation that strongly indicated at least some of the Finns and Lenape found common ground in their ways of worship. Old colonial records in Swedish archives, and other evidence in the folklife studies of Finland, convinced her that the Big House phenomenon represented a significant transformation of the traditional Lenape belief system to accomodate the ways their world was being impacted by the coming of the Euros. The Big House had remained the central focus of most Lenape spiritual life until well after they moved to Kansas. She argued, much to the chagrin of many scholars and more than a few Lenape, that many of the Big House ceremonies had originated in the period when the influence of the Finns was at its peak. The Big House was the place where Fenno-Lenape cultural beliefs had blissfully cohabited.

Mary knew that the meeting of these two peoples had occasioned a major upheaval in both their lives. That should be obvious to anyone. Yet in most instances these contacts had resulted in what was undoubtedly one of the most compatible and mutually beneficial encounters in the history of Indian White relations. That circumstance alone would have provided ample reason to rethink and reshape the spiritual content of their lives. The Big House ceremony, in Mary's eyes at least, was intimately associated with the adoption of log cabins as the primary Lenape house type. But the log house was only the symbolic center of a much wider and more profound shift in both Lenape and Finnish cultural meaning and values. Both cultures were in a fluid state of profound changes. The new habits and habitations were intimately linked to modifications in traditional gardening and hunting habits. Life changed dramatically for the Finns after they settled among the Lenape. It was only natural that these two peoples would create a ceremonial center that reflected elements of this cultural union. It was equally certain that the Finns who had been under constant pressure to abandon their shamanistic beliefs and practices would keep this out of view of the Swedish colonial authorities. Mary says that the firestorm her theory generated was not what she was expecting. But knowing Mary I suspect she anticipated the outrage and felt compelled to present her work anyway.

THE COSMIC SYMBOLISM OF THE DELAWARE (LENAPE) CULTIC HOUSE

(Frank G. Speck, A Study of the Delaware Indians Big House Ceremony, Publications of the Pennsylvania Historical Commission, vol. 2 (Harrisburg, 1931).)

The Big House stands for the Universe; its floor, the earth; its four walls, the four quarters; its vault, the sky dome, atop which resides the Creator in his indefinable supremacy. To use Delaware expressions, the Big House being the universe, the centre post is the staff of the Great Spirit with its foot upon the earth, its pinnacle reaching to the hand of the Supreme Deity. The floor of the Big House is the flatness of the earth upon which sit the three grouped divisions of mankind, the human social groupings in their appropriate places; the eastern door is the point of sunrise where the. day begins and at the same time the symbol of termination; the north and south walls assume the meaning of respective horizons; the roof of the temple is the visible sky vault. The ground beneath the Big House is the realm of the underworld while above the roof lie the extended planes or levels, twelve in number, stretched upward to the abode of the 'Great Spirit, even the Creator,' as Delaware form puts it. Here we might speak of the carved face images. . . . the representations on the centre pole being the visible symbols of the Supreme Power, those on the upright posts, three on the north wall and three on the south wall, the manitu of these respective zones; those on the eastern and western door posts, those of the east and west. . . . But the most engrossing allegory of all stands forth in the concept of the White Path, the symbol of the transit of life, which is met in the oval, hard-trodden dancing path outlined on the floor of the Big House, from the east door passing to the right down the north side past the second fire to the west door and doubling back on the south side of the edifice around the eastern fire to its beginning. This is the path of life down which man winds his way to the western door where all ends. Its correspondent exists, I assume, in the Milky Way, where the passage of the soul after death continues in the spirit realm. As the dancers in the Big House ceremony wend their stately passage following the course of the White Path they 'push something along,' meaning existence, with their rhythmic tread. Not only the passage of life, but the journey of the soul after death is symbolically figured in the ceremony.

The Creator, the Big House, and Lenape Spirituality

(By Toni L. Nuosce, Student, Kent State University Stark Campus November 1998)

Imagine if you can a world sanctified and respected on a daily basis, in fact imagine that we all believed that the Earth is our true Mother. To go even a step further, imagine believing that there is no separation between people and the land upon which they lived. Wouldn't we try like mad to keep "her" safe and away from harm? Wouldn't we praise our Mother Earth and her creator by believing every little thing that has been created should be loved and handled as if it were a newborn child? The Lenape tribes believe this and their religion is based on the Creator, the giver of all land. Because the Lenape's are a very gracious people, they built their temple, the Big House, to express their gratitudes and spiritual visions.

The Lenape's, or "True Men", believe they are created from the earth and pay their respects and deep loyalties to it's Creator. An established American Indian author Hitakonanulaxk, of the book The Grandfathers Speak, describes his people best by expressing a popular saying they recite, "We do not own the land, we are of the land, we belong to it" (Hitakonanulaxk 2). With this extraordinary attitude comes the building of the Big House. The Big House for the Lenapes would be like a church for the Christians, or for the Jews a synagogue, yet by any means it is a place to worship and give thanks for all they possess, materially and spiritually.

The Big House's structure is extremely and thoughtfully symbolic. This is not simply four walls, a dirt floor, and a roof where people come to worship, everything has meaning. Only materials from Mother Nature are used in the construction of this highly symbolic place of worship. Robert S. Grumet's, The Lenapes, detailed description of the Big House makes it's symbolism visual, "The floor was the earth. The roof represented the heavens. The central post, decorated with carvings of Mesingw, is a vertical shaft connecting the earth with the upper and lower worlds (Grumet 77 & 78). Mesingw is a series of twelve carvings believed to be the deliverers of prayer to the Creator.

The number twelve is also symbolic, because of the belief that the Creator dwells in the twelfth heaven, the highest heaven above the Earth. Due to the significance of the number twelve, the ceremonies in The Big House last twelve days. During these twelve days the Lenapes give thanks and praise to the Creator. Frank G. Speck, author of, Oklahoma Delaware Ceremonies, Feasts, and Dances, enlightens us with a clear description of the Lenape's need for creating the Big House, "The infallible Father and Creator seated in the twelfth heaven above, in his beneficence toward man is believed to yearn for the voiced recognition of his creatures as they pay their devoirs to him - his human children gathered to celebrate the twelve day ceremony of the Big House" (Speck 154). They believe that the Creator desires to hear their praises and they, being devoted to the Creator and the ceremonies in the Big House, without hesitation offer "him" a special place where they pay homage to the Creator for everything he provides them.

The need for the Big House as a sanctuary to praise the Creator is of extreme importance to the Lenapes because they feel one with the earth and believe it necessary to respect all inhabitants and creations. They believe that paying their respects to the Creator in this holy place will bring them the essentials they need for daily living. The Creator provides them with the bare necessities in life, such as animals for food, rivers for drink, and air to breathe in order to maintain life. Due to the these facts comes the symbolic structure of the Big House, by virtue of design, the Big House is not looked upon as a physical structure but a representation of the universe.

The Lenapes are a strong people connected to the earth, seas, heavens, and winds. For all of their spiritual guidance they receive from Mother Earth and the Creator, they believe in praising them for all that they offer. I would like to close with a beautiful quote from a true Native American Indian, Hitakonanulaxk.

Hitakonanulaxk speaks a final thought that will hopefully create a lasting impression on Lenape spirituality, "Our Creator, he made no mistakes. It is not much different than if one considers the heart being where it is in the body and not in the head where the brain is. The heart is where it is for a reason, and this can also be said of a people. The function of the heart in the body is analogous to the religion and ceremonies of a people. Our spirituality, our religion, is our heartbeat, and our culture and traditions, our life's blood" (3).

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE LENAPE-DELAWARE, AN ALGONQUIAN PEOPLE

Algonquian, the most populous and widely distributed of the North American linguistic stocks, originally comprised several hundred tribes who spoke nearly 50 related languages. The Algonquian people occupied most of the Canadian region south of Hudson Bay between the Rocky Mountains and the Atlantic Ocean and, excluding certain territory held by the Siouan and Iroquoian tribes, that section of land of what is now the United States extending northward from North Carolina and Tennessee. Algonquian tribes inhabited various isolated areas to the south and west, including parts of what are now South Carolina, Iowa, Wyoming, and Montana. The best known Algonquian groups include the Algonquin, from which the stock takes its name, Amalecite, Blackfoot, Cheyenne, Conoy [Piscataway], Cree, Delaware [Lenape], Fox, Gros Ventre, Kickapoo, Massachusett, Miami, Mi'kmaq Micmac], Mohegan, Mahican, Montagnais, Munsi [Munsee], Narragansett, Naskapi, Nipmuc, Ojibwa, Ottawa, Pequot, Potawatomie, Sac, Sauk), Shawnee, Tete de Boule, and Wampanoag. Some of the principal Algonquian confederacies were the Abenaki, Pennacook, and Illinois. (From Encarta Online Encyclopedia 2000)

The Delaware are a Native North American tribe (or nation) of the Algonquian linguistic family and of the Eastern Woodlands culture area, originally residing in what are now the states of New Jersey, New York (Staten Island, Manhattan, and western Long Island), Delaware, and eastern Pennsylvania. The term "Delaware" is not an Algonquian word. It comes from the name of Thomas West, Lord de la Warr, who was an early governor of Virginia. The State of Delaware and the Delaware River are named for him. Because the Lenape were located along that river and its tributaries, the Europeans gave them the name "Delaware." The name we have for ourselves is Lenape or Lenni Lenape (Len-ni Len-ah'-pay). It means simply, "The (Original) People." The Lenape belong to the Algonquian-speaking Indians of the Mid- and Northern-Atlantic Seaboard. According to their origin legend, they migrated from Siberia across the Bering Strait. The Lenape probably migrated from the West Coast of the present-day United States to the East Coast early in the American existence. perhaps around 1400. In historical times, the Lenape lived in present-day southeastern Pennsylvania, southeastern New York, Delaware, and New Jersey. They were among the first Native Americans to come in contact with the Dutch, English, and Swedish settlers. The first treaty of the Delaware was with William Penn 1682. The Delaware were venerated as "grandfathers" by other Native American people because we were the original occupants to come eastward to the land nearest the rising sun. As the "Grandfather" tribe they had the power to settle disputes among rival tribes. Though they were known for their fierceness in battle, they also chose to make settlements and peace where possible. The Lenape signed the first Indian treaty with the United States on 17 September 1778 at Fort Pitt (present-day Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania). The sixth article of the treaty shows the intention of the United States to create an Indian state, with the Delaware at its head. "To form a State, whereof the Delaware nation shall be the head and have a representative in Congress..."

In the 1600s the Delaware were forced to move West as European settlers usurped the land on which they lived. At this time the Delaware population was greatly reduced by contagious diseases and death by white settlers. Their westward migration took them first to the Susquehanna River in Pennsylvania and then to the Allegheny and Ohio Rivers. Pressure from white settlers after the American Revolution forced the Delaware to Indiana Territory. Splinter groups in 1790 moved north to Canada. They still occupy two small reserves in Moraviatown and Munsee in the Province of Ontario. By the Treaty of 18 August 1804, made at Vincennes by William Henry Harrison, the Governor of Indiana Territory, the Government forced the Delaware gave up their Ohio land. In return they were "given" land in Indiana Territory. This included all of the country bounded by the White River on the north and the Ohio River on the south. That treaty was made between the United States and several Indian tribes, including the Delaware Nation. By the Treaty made at St. Mary's, Ohio on 3 October 1818, the Delaware Nation gave up all its land in Indiana. In exchange, The United States gave the Delaware a reservation on the James Fork of the White River in Missouri Territory. They first stayed in Missouri a while on the Mississippi River before moving to Southwestern Missouri. The Delaware remained there until the signing of the Treaty of 24 September 1829. On that date, they gave up their land in Missouri and the Government granted land in Northeastern Kansas, where they lived for several decades. On 14 December 1843, the Delaware sold to the Wyandot 23,040 acres of land of the eastern part of their reserve. On 6 May 1854, the Delaware gave up to the United States the Western Outlet of their land, keeping a tract ten miles wide and 40 miles up the Kansas River. Under the Treaty of 30 May 1860, each member of the Delaware Nation was assigned eighty acres of land. The remainder of the land was sold to the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Company--later the Union Pacific Railroad)--which sold much of the land to white settlers. At this time there were about 900 Delaware in this area of Kansas (present-day Wyandotte County).

By the Treaty of 4 July 1866, the United States sold the remaining land--known as the "Delaware Diminished Reserve"--to the Union Pacific Railroad. The land was transferred on 7 January 1868. Under the Treaty of 1866, the Federal Government moved the main body of Delaware to Cherokee Land in Indian Territory (Oklahoma) in 1867. The heads of 26 families and their 56 children remained in Kansas and became United State's citizens. Their descendants are the present-day "Kansas Delaware" or "Citizen Delaware."

Under an 1867 agreement with the Cherokee, the Delaware in Indian Territory in Oklahoma purchased land from the Cherokee Nation. That Delaware tribe is now the Delaware Tribe of Eastern Oklahoma) numbering about 10,000 persons, but the courtsunfortunately have decreed that they are now Cherokee.

A smaller group of Delaware, the Western Delaware or "Absentee Delaware," took a different route from Missouri to Arkansas and Texas and also ended up in Oklahoma. That tribe is located in Anadarko, Oklahoma. They jointly control land with the Wichita and Caddo. These two tribes met jointly earlier this year, the first such meeting since they went separate ways in 1821. In 1997 and 1999, former Kansas Delaware Chief Thomas Swiftwater Hahn met with the Council of the Eastern Oklahoma Delaware Tribe of Indians, the first meeting of the two groups since their division in 1866-1867. [Though the term Native American is often the preferred term for those were first came to the United States, the term "Indian" is used in historical texts and is still used by many "Native Americans." This web site makes no intentional distinction as we believe that the usage is a matter of personal preference.- Editor]

THE KANSAS DELAWARE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Lenape-Delaware people are a Native North American nation of the Algonquian linguistic family of the Eastern Woodlands culture area. In historical times, we resided in what are now the states of New Jersey, southeastern New York, Delaware, and southeastern Pennsylvania. The term "Delaware" is not an Alngonquian word. It comes from the name of Thomas West, Lord de la Warr, who was an early governor of Virginia. The State of Delaware and the Delaware River are named for him. Because the Lenape were located along that river and its tributaries, the Europeans gave us the name "Delaware." The name we have for ourselves is Lenape or Lenni Lenape (Len-ni Len-ah'-pay), meaning simply, "The (Original) People." According to our origin legend, we migrated from Siberia across the Bering Strait. The Lenape probably migrated from the West Coast of the present-day United States to the East Coast early in the American existence, perhaps around 1400. We were among the first Native Americans to come in contact with the Dutch, English, and Swedish settlers. The first treaty of the Delaware was with William Penn in 1682. Other Native American people venerated the Delaware as "Grandfather People" because we were the original occupants to come eastward to the land nearest the rising sun. As the "Grandfather Tribe" we had the power to settle disputes among rival tribes. Though we were known for our fierceness in battle, we also chose to make settlements and to make peace where possible. The Lenape signed the first Indian treaty with the United States on 17 September 1778 at Fort Pitt (present Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania). The regard for the Delaware is evident in the sixth article of that treaty, which states the intent of the United States to create an Indian state, with the Delaware at its head, and giving the Delaware a representation in Congress.

In the 1600s, the Delaware were forced to move west as European settlers usurped the land on which they lived. Beginning at that time, the Delaware population was greatly reduced by contagious diseases contracted from whites and by being killed by white settlers. Their westward migration took us to the Susquehanna River and Allegheny Rivers in Pennsylvania and then to the Ohio River and its tributaries in Ohio. Splinter groups in 1790 moved north to Canada. They still occupy two small reserves in Moraviatown and Munsee in the Province of Ontario. By the Treaty of 18 August 1804, made at Vincennes by William Henry Harrison, the Governor of Indiana Territory, the Delaware gave up our Ohio land. In return, they were given land in Indiana Territory. That land included all of the country bounded by the White River on the north and the Ohio River on the south. That treaty was made between the United States and several Indian tribes, including the Delaware Nation. By the Treaty made at St. Mary's, Ohio on 3 October 1818, the Delaware Nation gave up all its land in Indiana. In exchange, the United States gave the Delaware a reservation on the James Fork of the White River in Missouri Territory. They first stayed for a while on the Mississippi River in Missouri before moving to Southwestern Missouri. The Delaware remained there until the signing of the Treaty of 24 September 1829. On that date, they gave up our land in Missouri and were granted land in Northeastern Kansas, where we were among the first Native American emigrants to go to Kansas. Unfortunately, other Native American tribes were moved to accommodate the Delaware. Every move had its hardships for all the Native Americans involved.

Kansas and the Delaware

(This article paragraph is from The History of Wyandotte County, Kansas..., pp. 147-149)

In the early part of the nineteenth century, when the United States became possessed of the extensive Territory of Louisiana, the Pawnee Indians claimed possession and ownership of a large tract of country including what is now Wyandotte County. The Pawnees were a powerful and warlike tribe, and for a century they maintained sway over the country embraced by the branches of the Kansas River, and over the whole region watered by the Platte, from near the Rocky Mountains to its mouth [of the Missouri River]. They were divided into several villages or bands, one of which, the Pawnee Republic, gave its name to the Republican River. The Otoes, Omahas and other tribes acknowledged the superiority of the Pawnees, and lived under their protection. In 1832, however, all these tribes were ravaged by the small-pox, and it is said that the Pawnees then lost half their population. The following year, by treaty, they disposed of, to the United States, all their claims to the land lying south of the Platte River, and agreed to locate themselves north of that river and west of the Missouri. This they did. But large bodies of Sioux came down on their new settlements, and drove them back with great slaughter. Some returned to their old villages; others joined their allies, the Otoes and the Omahas. They continued to be unfortunate, and by the ravages of wars and disease rapidly dwindled in numbers. [T. G. Adam's Homestead Guide.]

But later the Kansas or Kaw Indians claimed to have, 8in a great measure, supplanted the Pawnees in their right to the occupancy of their country, supplanted the Pawnees in their right to the occupancy of their country, and by treaty dated June 3, 1825, they (the Kaws) ceded to the United States a tract of territory including what is now embraced in Wyandotte County. Subsequently, early in the thirties, the United States granted to the Delaware Indians a large reservation in the purchased from the Kaw Indians, which included all of what is now Wyandotte County lying north of the Kansas River. An then, or soon thereafter, the Shawnee Indians, by treaty or otherwise, claimed a large tract of country lying immediately south of the Kansas River."

Long before the United States possessed the vat territory west of the Mississippi, the French and the Spaniards had explored the Missouri and Kansas Rivers to points above their junction, but made no permanent settlements. Of these explorations but little was known [in 1890]. In 1800 a trading post was established at Randolph Bluffs, three miles below present Kansas City, but it did not lead to a settlement. The first Americans who saw this part of country under dominion of the United States were Messrs. Lewis and Clarke, who traveled in 1804, on their famous expedition up the Missouri, passing the mouth of the Kansas River early in May of that year, or perhaps late in April, where they made a temporary camp and procured plenty of game. In 1811 the western limit of white settlement was at Fort Osage in Missouri, thirty-four miles below the mouth of the Kansas River. In 1819 Maj. Stephen H. Long, in the employ of the Government, with a corps of topographical engineers on his way to the Yellowstone country, passed the site of the present Wyandotte County. In 1825 Cyprian Choteau, a Frenchman, established a trading post on the south side of the Kansas River about opposite the present site of Muncie. A few years later he was joined by his brother, Frederick, and later still they moved their trading post about eighty miles farther up the river. In 1827 a part of the Third Regiment of United States troops passed the mouth of the Kansas River on their way to Leavenworth, where they erected barracks and a fort.

The Delaware lived on the Kansas Reserve for several decades, but the Federal Government gradually reduced it in size during that period of time. Information regarding this period can be found in the Treaty and Chronology pages. On 14 December 1843, the Delaware sold 23,040 acres of land to the Wyandot Nation on the eastern part of their reserve. On 6 May 1854, they gave up to the United States the Western Outlet of our land, keeping a tract ten miles wide and 40 miles up the Kansas River. Under the Treaty of 30 May 1860, each member of the Delaware Nation was assigned eighty acres of land. The Government sold the remainder of the land to the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Company--later the Union Pacific Railroad)--which in turn sold much of the land to white settlers. At this time there were about 900 Delaware in this area of Kansas (present-day Wyandotte County).

Under the terms of the Treaty of 4 July 1866, the United States sold the remaining land--known as the "Delaware Diminished Reserve"--to the Union Pacific Railroad. The land was transferred on 7 January 1868. Under the Treaty of 1866, the Federal Government moved the main body of Delaware to Cherokee Land in Indian Territory (Oklahoma) in 1867. That tribe, known as the Delaware Tribe of Indians, is presently centered in Bartlesville, Oklahoma. Another tribe, the Western Delaware Tribe of Indians (or Absentee Delaware), was in 1867--and remains today--at Anadarko, Oklahoma. These three groups comprise most of the Delaware Nation, but many groups and and individuals were left along the way in several states.

Before the removal of the main tribe of Lenape-Delaware from Kansas, the heads of families were given the choice to remove to Indian Territory and occupy Cherokee lands, or to remain in Kansas and become citizens of the United States. The heads of twenty-six families made the decision to remain in Kansas with their 56 children where they became United States citizens and Kansas citizens. The descendants of those early Kansas pioneers comprise the present-day "Kansas Delaware" or "Citizen Delaware"--the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians.

Since 1867, when the Delaware who remained in Kansas became citizens of Kansas, they entered into the mainstream of life in Kansas. In general, depending on their individual generations and circumstances, their great-great-grandparents, great-grandparents, grandparents, and parents were born and raised, went to school, worked, paid taxes and went to church in Kansas, and did the things that most Kansans do. Many of their families have lived in Kansas since the early 1830s. Others, as happened to other Kansans, especially during and after World War II, moved to other states where their military service or work took them. However, they remained Native American Kansas Lenape-Delaware, and Kansans, in their hearts. They have maintained close family and tribal ties and have maintained our interest in our Delaware heritage throughout our history.

Several Kansas Delaware and their families moved into the Cherokee Nation in Indian Territory, that is present Oklahoma, to be near their family members, who had moved to the Cherokee Nation pursuant to the 1866 Treaty. They remained Kansas Delaware and saw no reason to buy citizenship in the Cherokee Nation. The members of this group of Kansas Delaware participated in tribal affairs, attended its meetings, voted in its elections, and were actively involved until 1972. There was never any "giving up of tribal ways" by the Kansas Delaware, and the ones who stayed in the Kansas City area stayed in close contact with their tribe and family members. The Kansas Delaware retained their history as a tribe and even provided leadership in the mainstream of Lenape-Delaware that removed to Indian Territory in Oklahoma. Joe Bartles, the grandson of Nannie Pratt Bartles who elected to remain in Kansas pursuant to the 1866 Treaty, was the chairman of the Delaware Tribe from about 1920 to the 1950s. During his tenure as chairman, he led the tribe's successful pursuit of claims before the Indian Claims Commission. Solomon Ketchum, another Kansas Delaware, also served as a member of the Delaware Tribal Committee in the 1930s.

In the 1960s, there was a fund distribution under Docket No. 337. The law required proof of Indian Ancestry, which the Kansas Delaware could easily establish. The Kansas Delaware received payment under this docket. The claims under Dockets 72 and 298 were claims for inadequate compensation for lands taken from the Delaware Reserve in Kansas in the 1850's. When the Kansas Delaware learned that they were to be excluded from compensation under Dockets 72 and 298, they formed as an organization to pursue their right in the funds. A lawsuit was filed that eventually went to the U.S. Supreme Court. The Supreme Court decided in Delaware Tribal Committee v. Weeks, that it was up to Congress to provide a remedy if the Kansas Delaware had been wrongfully excluded from the fund distribution. In legislature that followed, Congress provided this remedy by amending the law to include the Kansas Delaware in the distribution. Like all Indian tribes, our members have disbursed throughout the country and the world over the past 130 years. Naturally, the Kansas Delaware have participated in and contributed to the modernization of the world, as all Native American people have. As an Indian tribe native to the eastern woodlands, the Delaware had interacted with whites since the 1600s. By the late 1800s, all the Delaware had "adapted" to the white civilization. A significant portion our our group still remains in Kansas in the area that composed the former Delaware Reserve.

The Kansas Delaware were incorporated in the State of Oklahoma in 1974 as the Kansas Delaware Tribe of Indians, Incorporated. The incorporation was done there as a convenience for legal purposes when the responsible Bureau of Indians Affairs Office was in Muskogee, Oklahoma, as were the attorneys that we hired in the legal actions we took in the 1970s to recover some of the losses incurred by the illegal sale of our lands in the 1850s and 1860s. The governing body of the Kansas Delaware today is an eleven-person General Council, the members of which are elected for a one-year term during the annual meeting. The newly-elected Council Members meet after the annual meeting to elect the Tribal Officers. For the past several years we have met in Kansas City or Kansas City in Wyandotte County as that was the center of activity on the old Kansas Delaware Reserve.

The Kansas Delaware are proud that our ancestors were among the earliest Pioneer of Kansas. We are grateful for our heritage as Kansas Citizens and of the United States citizens as well as being proud of being Kansas Lenape-Delaware. Members of our tribe fought for the U.S. Government in the Civil War and all subsequent U.S. wars, and early Delaware fought on the side of the United States in every war since the American Revolution. Our desire is that we remain responsible citizens and that the past accomplishments of our ancestors be acknowledged.

It is not known where and when an annual meeting will be held in 2006.

LENAPE CHIEFS AND SACHEMS

There is more than one list of the Lenape-Delaware Chiefs and Sachems. Not all agree. At this point we are entering all entries without authenticating any particular listing. Editor

EARLY LENAPE-DELAWARE CHIEFS AND SACHEMS (As provided by http://www.lenapenation.org)

At one time there were both War Chiefs and Peace Chiefs. The peace chief, ruling when there was no war, was hereditary. The title of war chief could be bestowed on any brave warrior. After the white man came they helped to instigate the idea of having only one principal chief over all. They usually were chosen from the chiefs of the Turtle totem group, the Lenape believing the turtle to be the receptacle for the creation of man. In the 1800's, chiefs were chosen from local communities or family groups. This continued till the early 1920's when chiefs were elected by the general membership of the Nation.

SOME EARLY LENAPE CHIEFS AND SACHEMS

1629 Quesqakons/Quesquackous & Easanques, chiefs of Manhattan Island Indians

1638 Mattahorn, Singnos, Pemenetta sold parcels of land to the Dutch.

1661 Pinna, Chief of Passyunk Lenape, made treaty of peace with Phillip Calvert, Governor. of Maryland.

1674 Chief Mehocksett of New Jersey and his brother Chief Pete Qquoque and Chief Socoroccett sold parcels of land.

1681 Chief Parritt of Sickneysinck, Delaware sold land.

July 1682 William Penn's emissary treatied with- Idquayhon, Janottowe, Sahopre, Merkekowen, Oreckton, Nannacussey, and Shaurwaughon, Swanpisse, Nahoosey, Tomackhickon, Westkekitt, and Towawsiz, all Lenape Chiefs who owned lands in Eastern Pennsylvania.

August 1, 1862 Pytechay, Essepamachatte, & Kekerappamand also came in and signed treaty for lands sold.

1862 Head Chief 1682 Tamanend (the Affable) Head Chief of the Lenape 1683. He signed treaty with William Penn. Legend tells of the Great Treaty under the Shackamaxon Elm at Philadelphia-the treaty that was "never sworn to and never broken". He was held in the highest veneration among the Lenape. The fame of this great man extended even among the whites and his memory is still preserved in the name of a town Tamanend. In 1772 a secret society the Sons of King Tammany was named for him, also the Society of St. Tammany and Tammany Hall. His brother was Weheeland. His sons were Yaqueekhon/ Nicholas and Quenameckquid/Charles. He died in 1750 at age 97.

Tammany (from Tamanend, 'the affable.' Heckewelder). The common form of the name of a noted ancient Delaware chief, written also Tamanee, Tamanen, Tamanend, Tamany, Tamened, Taming, Teinane. In the form of Tamanen his name appears as one of the signers of a deed to William Penn in 1683 for lands not far north from Philadelphia, within the present Bucks county, Pennsylvania. The missionary Heckewelder, writing, in 1817, describes him as the greatest and best chief known to Delaware tribal tradition. "The name of Tamanend is held in the highest veneration among the Indians of all the chiefs and great men which the Lenape nation ever had, he stands foremost on the list. But although many fabulous stories are circulated about him among the whites, but little of his real history is known. All we know, therefore, of Tamanend is that he was an ancient Delaware chief, who never had his equal. He was in the highest degree endowed with wisdom, virtue, prudence, charity, affability, meekness, hospitality, in short with every good and noble qualification that a human being may possess. He was supposed to have had an intercourse with the great and good Spirit, for he was a stranger to everything that was bad. The fame of this great man extended even among the whites, who fabricated numerous legends respecting him, which I never heard, however, from the mouth of an Indian, and therefore believe to be fabulous. In the Revolutionary war his enthusiastic admirers dubbed him a saint, and he was established under the name of St. Tammany, the Patron Saint of America. His name was inserted in some calendars, and his festival celebrated on the first day of May in every year." Heckewelder goes on to describe the celebration, which was conducted on Indian lines, including the smoking of the calumet, and Indian dances in the open air, and says that similar "Tammany societies" were afterward organized in other cities. He states also that when Col. George Morgan, of Princeton, New Jersey, was sent by Congress about the year 1776 upon a special mission to the western tribes, the Delawares conferred upon him the name of Tamanend in remembrance of the ancient chief and as the greatest mark of respect that they could pay to Morgan. Haines, however (American Indians, 658,1888), in his chapter on the Order of Red Men, quotes a contemporary document from which it appears that the Philadelphia society, which was probably the first bearing the name, and is claimed as the original of the Red Men secret order, was organized May 1, 1772, under the title of "Sons of King Tammany," with strongly Loyalist tendency. It is probable that the "Saint Tammany" society was a later organization of Revolutionary sympathizers opposed to the kingly idea. Saint Tammany parish, Louisiana., preserves the memory. DELAWARE LIFE

This page contains, for the moment, comments on the daily life between Delaware men and woman or about kindred tribes whose lifestyle was similar to the Delaware.

The following are comments by various witnesses during the probate of the estate of William Gillis about 1869-1873. Some witnesses are Delaware or other Native American--mainly Kickapoo, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea--who lived with or near the the Delaware, while other witnesses were whites trading and living with them.

> (A. G. Boone, Merchant and Indian trader), [Indian marriages are usually done in this way] A man concludes to take a girl. If she has never been married he goes to a friend of hers and makes it known and asks him to intercede and he generally goes to her relations and tells them his friend wants the girl for a wife and how much he will give and they the relatives talk to her parents. Different tribes have different customs. If they think favorably about it, he goes and buys what to wants to pay in the amount. After the goods are obtained, the day is set when he is to take the goods and her friends gather together and the goods are shown and he tells what he is willing to give and if they accept, a feast follows, and that is the marriage. No priest or minister officiates. I have known them to live together a long time. When they separate - which they can do at any time -they divide the property. She takes what she had and he has given her and the children. They can marry at any time. I have known them to come together again...They [the traders] often would take a woman and keep her as long as he stayed with that tribe...The traders often gave presents to the presents and took their daughter and kept her awhile and [then] sent her away. When a trader would take a woman for a wife he would buy her wit property, such as horses, calico and would live with her as long as he stayed in the country and when he left he would leave her of course. The traders did not generally considered these marriages husband and wife as we do. (Rising, Gillis Probate, p. 69-70)
> (Chief Baptiste Peoria) The Indian custom of marriage - When old folks got good girl want to get married, they hold a little council among themselves and when all agree, they give things - sometimes a horse - sometimes more. They have no priest, preacher or officer. When they have agreed they just go together as man & wife. When man gets tired of wife he can part or separate and the man can take another wife. (Rising, Gillis Probate

(Trader Peter Menard) I know all about their customs - are very different from ours. They did not go to see a girl and hug and kiss [.] when a man wanted a wife among the indians and she was a virgin - the matter was generally understood the mother had general control of the girl. Sometimes a guardian. Well, the man the applicant to obtain her hand would make a present to the mother or guardian - it was done in this wise. The young man sent one, two or more horses or other goods and left them in front of the wigwam. If those horses were taken and hobbled or goods received, it was a contract. It was understood it was a marriage. Then the girl was either by her mother or guardian taken to the young man's wigwam by night. The day before the girl was taken her father or mother would make a feast. The young man would go and eat with them but would not say a word...Separations seldom took place - it was mostly on account of infidelity. There was no formality about it - they just separated and divided the blankets. (Rising, Gillis Probate)

(Joseph Philbert, a trading company clerk at the James Fork Trading Post) If their customs were like the Delawares I was [acquainted] and my understanding is that they were the same. There were two sorts of people - one rich and the other the poor. The Rich were called "big folks". If you wanted one of their daughters - a virgin - you had to make a friend - generally a woman - for a friend. Tell you wanted such [and such] daughter. Then your friend would tell you that it would take such and such articles and goods naming the artricles it would take that she believed that you could get her for these articles. Then you made up the bundle of goods and gave it to your friend. The friend would tell you that tomorrow or the day after tomorrow she would go and if she returned with the bundle of goods you could not get her without adding such and such articles. After adding the required articles and the bundle was taken back if they were accepted, your friend returned and tells you, you can get her and she will be here such and such a night. She never comes alone, but when she comes about dusk [she is] accompanied by her mother or aunt or elder sister if she has one. Then the one that brings her soon after leaves and goes home and then you invite the bride to come & shows the blanket - this consummates marriage. Some require more than others and sometimes a horse or a gun or saddle are given (Rising, Gillis Probate)

(Charles Journeycake, Delaware) I know all about the customs of the Delaware Indians are regards courtships, marriages re - when a man likes a girl; or woman he generally gives to the mother of the girl (if she is young and has never been married and takes with him - sometimes a blanket and sometimes some calico and sometimes all - he tells generally the mother that he likes the girl and wants her - then the mother tells the father and relatives - such as brothers and sisters - and if it is sat5isfactory, then the mother takes the girl to the house of the man who has asked for her and sometimes the mother stays there several days in order to see if the girl is contented. It is customary among the Delaware Indians - even to this day, for a man to have one or more wives as he may desire...the family usually eat together not at a table but off a deer skin . When asked if it was the custom for a white trader who married a Delaware woman, he said that it was and also affirmed that it was the custom for him to sit with her at the head of the table while taking their meals. DELAWARE MISSIONS IN KANSAS

[We are working on building this entry by combining Delaware Missions and Kansas Missions into the instant folder. Perhaps some day someone will consolidate the subject of mission schools in the area of the old Delaware Reserve, but as yet it has not been done. In the interim, we will keep stuffing data on missions on mission into the web site so that the material will be there for some ardent scholar to consolidate one day. Editor.]

The following is from the article "Methodist Missions Among the Indians in Kansas," The Kansas Historical Collections, Vol. IX, 1905-1906, pp. 203-207:

> The history of the Delawares is intimately connected with that of the Shawnees. Their reservation originally extended from the mouth of Kansas river westward to the Kaw reservation, and embraced 2,208,000 acres. (From the Report United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1836, p. 397.) It was on the north side of the Kansas river, a very fertile section, and embraced Wyandotte, practically all of Leavenworth and Jefferson and portions of Shawnee and Jackson counties. Their reservation fronted on the Missouri river, from the south of the Kansas river to Fort Leavenworth. (From Indian Affairs, Laws and Treaties, Washington, 1904, vol. 2, p. 304.) In numbers they did not differ greatly from the Shawnees. The Delaware lands were mostly fine prairie interspersed with good timber. Their lands were considered the most valuable of all the territory occupied by Indian tribes. Though the Delawares were considerably advanced in agriculture, they had but little literary culture. They were an energetic and enterprising people.
> [The source for the following is being sought. Editor] Though the Delawares were advancing in agriculture and their fine prairie lands interspersed with timber were improved, they had but little culture. [Oh? Editor] Many of the elder members of the tribe retained their ancient prejudices against Christianity, and in consequence, the membership of the Methodist church was never large.
> [Continuing from "Methodist Missions Among the Indians in Kansas,"

published by the Kansas State Historical Society] The mission among the Delawares was opened in 1832, Rev. Wm. Johnson and Rev. Thomas B. Markham having been appointed by the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church] to take charge of the mission and school. The first report of membership was made the following year--five whites and twenty-seven Indians. The fifteenth annual report of the missionary society, for 1834, contains the following:

> The school has twenty-four native children, who are learning well. In the Sabbath-school are fourteen male and ten female scholars, conducted by three teachers and one superintendent. The children are catechized in the duties and doctrines of Christianity."

Reverend. Nathan Scarrett, in an unpublished manuscript, says:

> Though many of the best members of the tribe embraced Christianity, the membership was never very large, owing, as we suppose, to the strong prejudice exhibited by the great majority against all Christian effort among them; but a better little body of professing Christians would be hard to find among any people than was gathered together by our faithful missionaries. Moses Grinter and family, the Ketchums, and others were of the salt of the earth.
> Footnote: Moses R. Grinter came from Bardstown, Ky., and settled in what is now Wyandotte county, Kansas, in January, 1831. His place was about nine miles out from Kansas City, and for a while was known as a station on the Union Pacific named Secondine. He died June 12, 1878. His wife, Mrs. Anna Grinter, was born in Miami County, Ohio, January 8, 1820, and died in Wyandotte county, Kansas, June 28, 1905. Her father was a white man. and her mother a Delaware Indian. She came to Wyandotte with her parents in 1832. She was married to Moses R. Grinter, the first white man to locate in Wyandotte county. To this union there were born ten children, four of who survive her. There were twenty-one grandchildren, thirty-six great-grandchildren, and five great-great-grandchildren. She was very proud of the fact that she was an Indian. Her last audible prayer was in the musical Delaware-Indian language. She was converted and united with the Methodist church in childhood, and for more than seventy years lived a consistent Christian life. When the church separated, she adhered to the Southern church, in which she spent the remainder of her life. Her body rests in the cemetery at Grinter's chapel, where she held her membership for many years.

The highest membership , reported for many years, was 108, for 1844. In educational matters the Delawares did not make commendable progress as some of the other tribes. [Good for our independence. Editor] In February, 1844, an agreement was made with the superintendent, J. C. Berryman, by which the Delawares devoted all their school fund for the education of their children at the Shawnee manual-labor school for a term of ten years. The indifferences of the Delawares in the matter of their sending their children to the school was later a great disappointment to the superintendent, Rev. Thomas Johnson. [To encourage them the Methodist Missionary Board erected a grist mill as a means of industrial education, but they allowed it to become a complete wreck. (Transcribed from History of Wyandotte County Kansas and its People.)]

Footnote: "We, the undersigned chiefs of the Delaware nation, being invested with full authority to act in the premises for our nation whom we represent, do agree and bind ourselves as follows, viz:

"That we will encourage and patronize the Indian manual-labor school now in operation on the Shawnees' land, near the Fort Leavenworth agency site: First, by using our influence to send and keep a suitable number of the children of our tribe in said institution; and, secondly, by applying our school funds to its support; and our great father, the president of the United States, s hereby instructed and respectfully requested to cause to be paid over to the Rev. J. C. Berryman, now superintendent of said institution, or to his successor in office, the entire proceeds or interesting arising on all our school funds annually, for the ensuing ten years, together with all the arrears due us at this time on said funds. And the said, J. C Berryman, in behalf of said institution, agrees to receive and educate any number of Delaware children - not exceeding fifty at any one time, without the consent of said superintendent of said institution. It is herein understood that the Delaware children from time to time sent to the above-named institution are to be comfortably clad and boarded at its expense. "And we, the undersigned chiefs, wish it to be understood that the instructions herein given to our great father, the president, respecting out school funds, are intended to supersede all instructions previously given contrary to the spirit and intention of this agreement, and our agent, Maj. R. W. Cummins, is hereby requested to forward this agreement to the department at Washington city, with such explanations as he might think proper to give."

[There follows, affirmations of a legal nature, of no great interest, except for the following: "The interest they are entitled to receive annually is $2844, and the arrears of unpaid interest are upwards of $2000. The terms I would impose are:

"1st. That there shall be always at least thirty Delaware children in a course of education at said school; and if at any time or for any period there shall be fewer than thirty under instruction, the sum to be paid the superintendent shall abate $100 for every scholar short of the required number of thirty.

"2d. That one-half of the scholars shall be female, as near as may be practicable.

"3d. That in addition to the comfortable board and clothing stipulated for, there shall be be furnished to every scholar, she he or she unfortunately require it, proper medical aid and advice; and still further, books, stationery and whatever else shall be necessary to the success for prosecution of their studies and to their comfort and health...
"Respectfully submitted, April 22, 1844. T. HARTLEY CRAWFORD." (Report United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1844, pp. 368-370.)

The first church erected was in 1832 near a spring, in a beautiful grove, some of the trees of which are still standing. The church was about forty by sixty feet and the frame was black walnut, and it stood on the high divide on the site of the present town of White Church, facing east. The church was frame painted white, the structure thus giving name to the town,. It was about the center of Wyandotte county, and some eight miles west of Kansas City, Kan. It was destroyed by a tornado in May [on 11 May], 1886. A stone memorial church was erected on the site of the one destroyed [in which are memorial windows for those pioneer missionaries who gave their lives to this great work, and the list includes the names of many of these workers. After the inauguration of the mission and school by the William Johnson and Reverend Thomas B. Markham, E. T. Peery was in charge from 1833 to 1836 inclusive and afterwards at different times served five years. The Reverend Leamer B. Stateler, who came in 1837, served five consecutive years. M. J. Talbot, D. D. Doffelmeyer, B. H. Russell, the Reverend Nathan Scarrett for whom the Scarrett Bible Training School is named, and the Reverend Paschal Fish.]

[The source of the following is not known at present. Editor] On the early years a log parsonage was erected and a camp ground was laid out in which great camp meetings for the Indians were held. These camp meetings were often visited by the bishop and presiding elders of the church. The present bishop, E. R. Hendrix, who was at the head of the academic department of the Shawnee manual Labor School, was one of the visiting preachers at the Delaware camp meetings. They were attended by Indians of various tribes, many coming in their blankets. Each tribe had its interpreters to follow the words of the preacher, or exhorter, and translate them into English. The two Ketchums, James and Charles, full-blood Delawares, were interpreters.

Joab Spencer, one of the most powerful preachers of the period, once wrote" "Charles and James Ketchum have both interpreted for me. Charles interpreted a sermon at a Delaware camp meeting that resulted in fifteen to twenty conversions. He was a notable Christian character, such as Blue Jacket.

Prominent among the Delawares was Charles Ketchum, for many years a preacher in the Methodist church. He was large and portly and of manly appearance. He was illiterate, but a man of good intellect and a fluent talker. In the separation troubles, in 1845, the Delawares went with their church to the southern branch. But Charles Ketchum adhered to the northern branch, built a church himself and kept the little remnant of the church together. He had a good farm, yet he accepted appointment regularly from the Kansas conference.

James Ketchum, a brother of Charles, remained with the southern branch. He was born in 1819 and early became a Christian. He began preaching in the Indian language at White Church. He also preached at Wyandotte, on occasion, to a portion of the Delawares after their removal t the Indian Territory. He was considered one of the most eloquent orators of the tribe. Lewis Ketchum, a brother of Charles and James, was still living in 1903, ten miles south of Vinita, Indian Territory, nearly ninety years old and the oldest member of the tribe. The interpreters for the northern branch were Charles Ketchum, Paschal Fish, and Isaac Johnnycake. Those for the southern branch were James Ketchum, Jacob Ketchum and Ben Love. Henry Tiblow was the United States interpreter.

[Continuing from "Methodist Missions Among the Indians in Kansas," published by the Kansas Historical Society] In the separation troubles of 1845, the Delawares went with their church into the southern branch. The Methodist Episcopal Church South has a society of White Church at the present time [1905-1906] ... The following is an abstract from the report of Thos. Mosely, jr., Indian agent, for the year 1851:

> In this tribe (Delawares], I find only one school; the report of the Rev. Mr. Pratt is herewith sent, marked 'D.' This indefatigable missionary deserves great praise for the management and > conducting of this school, whose benefits are so valuable to the Delaware tribe, being the only school within the limits of the tribe.

>
> From my experience among the Indians, which has been for years, I am of the opinion that, with the less-civilized Indians, schools should be scattered about in all the strong bands of a tribe. This would afford the parents an opportunity to often visit them. The Indians are remarkably fond of their children, and it is a difficult matter to get them to send the far from home.
>
> The Delawares have disposed of their education fund for several years yet to come; it being vested in the Shawnee Mission manual-labor school. They have (for some cause not correctly known to me) refused to send their children to the Shawnee Mission school, which their fund sustains, for the space of a year. I feel in great hope that, with my aid, the Shawnee Mission superintendent will be able to get back to his school some twenty or thirty of the Delaware children.
> The Delaware Mill, which was built by the Methodist missionary board as a boon for their education for a term of years, is now a complete wreck. I have visited it, and recommended the chiefs to retain $3000 out of the money they received from the Wyandot, which they did, for the purpose of rebuilding the mill; but whether they will expend it for that purpose is, I am fearful, uncertain. The tribe is anxious it should be rebuilt, as there is not a mill in the Indian country near, but the chiefs seem to feel indifferent.. (Report United States Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1851, p. 80)

The quarterly meetings for the Delaware and Wyandot missions were held alternately between the two nations. Rev. W. H. Goode describes one held among the Delawares in 1855, which was largely attended, quite a number being present from the neighboring tribes 0f Delawares. Wyandots, Shawnees, Kickapoos and Stockbridges all participating in the exercises and each speaking in his own tongue.

Prominent among the missionaries among the Delawares were the brothers E. T. and J. Thompson Peery, Learner B. Statler, and N. M. Talbot. The name of Rev. W. C. Ellefrit occurs in the list of missionaries for 1837. He was no doubt a teacher, as his name does not appear in the list of missionaries.

> Footnote: Rev. Learner Blackman Statler was born near Hartford, Ohio county, Kentucky, July 7, 1811. He was of German parentage. He was licensed to preach in 1830, and the next year made his way from Kentucky to Missouri on horseback. In 1833 he was sent as missionary to the Creek Indians. In 1837 he was appointed to the Delaware Indian mission, where he remained till 1840, when he was transferred to the Shawnee Mission, where he remained till 1844 ....

THE DELAWARE MISSION

The mission among the Delawares was opened in 1832, Rev. Wm. Johnson and Rev. Thomas B. Markham having been appointed to take charge of the mission and school. The first report of membership was made the following year--five whites and twenty-seven Indians. The fifteenth annual report of the missionary society, for 1834, contains the following: Delaware, a gracious work of religion-forty church members, several of whom officiate as exhorters, regular in attendance at preaching and other means of grace. The school has twenty-four native children, who are learning well. In the Sabbath-school are fourteen male and ten female scholars, conducted by three teachers and one superintendent. The children are catechized in the duties and doctrines of Christianity." Rev. Nathan Scarrett, in an unpublished manuscript, says: Though many of the best members of the tribe embraced Christianity, the membership was never very large, owing, as we suppose, to the strong prejudice exhibited by the great majority against all Christian effort among them; but a better little body of professing Christians would be hard to find among any people than was gathered together by our faithful missionaries. Moses Grinter and family, the Ketchums, and others were of the salt of the earth. Moses R. Grinter came from Bardstown, Ky., and settled in what is now Wyandotte county, Kansas, in January, 1831. His place was about nine miles out from Kansas City, and for a while was known as a station on the Union Pacific named Secondine. He died June 12, 1878. His wife, Mrs. Anna Grinter, was born in Miami County, Ohio, January 8, 1820, and died in Wyandotte county, Kansas, June 28, 1905. Her father was a white man. and her mother a Delaware Indian. She came to Wyandotte with her parents in 1832. She was married to Moses R. Grinter, the first white man to locate in Wyandotte county. To this union there were born ten children, four of who survive her. There were twenty-one grandchildren, thirty-six great-grandchildren, and five great-great-grandchildren. She was very proud of the fact that she was an Indian. Her last audible prayer was in the musical Delaware-Indian language. She was converted and united with the Methodist church in childhood, and for more than seventy years lived a consistent Christian life. When the church separated, she adhered to the Southern church, in which she spent the remainder of her life. Her body rests in the cemetery at Grinter's chapel, where she held her membership for many years.

THE DELAWARE METHODIST MISSION

The Mission among the Delaware Indians was opened in 1832 by the Reverend William Johnson and the Reverend Thomas Markham, appointed by the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church to take charge. Though the Delawares were advancing in agriculture and their fine prairie lands interspersed with timber were improved, they had but little culture. [Oh? Editor] Many of the elder members of the tribe retained their ancient prejudices against Christianity, and in consequence, the membership of the Methodist church was never large. But among them were some notable exceptions, such as Moses Grinter and family and the Ketchums who were as "the salt of the earth."

The Mission was erected in 1832 near a spring in a beautiful grove, some of the trees of which are still standing. The church was about forty by sixty feet and the frame was black walnut. It stood on the high divide on the site of the present town of White Church, facing east. The church was painted white, thus giving the name to the old town, which is about in the center of Wyandotte County. It was destroyed by a tornado on May 11, 1886. A stone memorial church was erected on the site of the one destroyed, in which are memorial windows for those pioneer missionaries who gave their lives to this great work, and the list includes the names of many of these workers. After the inauguration of the mission and school by the William Johnson and Reverend Thomas B. Markham, E. T. Peery was in charge from 1833 to 1836 inclusive and afterwards at different times served five years. The Reverend Leamer B. Stateler, who came in 1837, served five consecutive years. M. J. Talbot, D. D. Doffelmeyer, B. H. Russell, the Reverend Nathan Scarrett for whom the Scarrett Bible Training School is named, and the Reverend Paschal Fish.

On the early years a log parsonage was erected and a camp ground was laid out in which great camp meetings for the Indians were held. These camp meetings were often visited by the bishop and presiding elders of the church. The present bishop, E. R. Hendrix, who was at the head of the academic department of the Shawnee manual Labor School, was one of the visiting preachers at the Delaware camp meetings. They were attended by Indians of various tribes, many coming in their blankets. Each tribe had its interpreters to follow the words of the preacher, or exhorter, and translate them into English. The two Ketchums, James and Charles, full-blood Delawares, were interpreters. Joab Spencer, one of the most powerful preachers of the period, once wrote" "Charles and James Ketchum have both interpreted for me. Charles interpreted a sermon at a Delaware camp meeting that resulted in fifteen to twenty conversions. He was a notable Christian character, such as Blue Jacket.

Prominent among the Delawares was Charles Ketchum, for many years a preacher in the Methodist church. He was large and portly and of manly appearance. He was illiterate, but a man of good intellect and a fluent talker. In the separation troubles, in 1845, the Delawares went with their church to the southern branch. But Charles Ketchum adhered to the northern branch, built a church himself and kept the little remnant of the church together. he had a good farm, yet he accepted appointment regularly from the Kansas conference.

James Ketchum, a brother of Charles, remained with the southern branch. He was born in 1919 and early became a Christian. He began preaching in the Indian language at White Church. He also preached at Wyandotte, on occasion, to a portion of the Delawares after their removal t the Indian Territory. He was considered one of the most eloquent orators of the tribe. Lewis Ketchum, a brother of Charles and James, was still living in 1903, ten miles south of Vinita, Indian Territory, nearly ninety years old and the oldest member of the tribe. The interpreters for the northern branch were Charles Ketchum, Paschal Fish, and Isaac Johnnycake. Those for the southern branch were James Ketchum, Jacob Ketchum and Ben Love. Henry Tiblow was the United States interpreter.

IN 1844 the Delaware Indians made an agreement with J. C. Berryman the superintendent, by which they devoted all their school fund for the education of their children to the Shawnee Manual Labor School for a term of ten years. The indifference of the Delawares in the matter of sending their children to the school was later a great disappointment to the founder of that school, the Rev. Thomas Johnson. The Delawares were indifferent also about manual education education. To encourage them the Methodist Missionary Board erected a grist mill as a means of industrial education, but they allowed it to become a complete wreck. I. INTRODUCTION

IF the church records here reproduced have no other significance they prove that keeping the red man in the straight and narrow path was a most arduous task in Kansas a hundred years ago. In the continuous effort of the mission fathers to fit an almost puritanical shoe to those restless feet there is something of pathos; and in the naiveté of their accounts of the attempt there is, let it be said respectfully, also something of unintentional humor.

When, for example, a solemn entry reads, "Enquiry was then made as to the general appearance of religion in Mr. Towsey and a general expression was that he was a disgrace to the church," there certainly can be no irreverence in a smile. Or when a committee is "appointed to labor with Jonas Littleman, and Sally Konkapot, it being understood that their conduct had been unbecoming a profession of godliness"; or when "Bro T Hendric and H Skeekett refuse to be reconsiled with the church unless the missionaries cease to visit it," the decorum of religion surely may unbend for the moment in the presence of a more human emotion.

Although there are lighter moments for the readers of these minutes, the workers who penned them were painstakingly serious. The first set was recorded in one of the lined blank books of the period, 71/2 by 12 inches, bound in heavy paper, now brown and brittle with age; the second consists of eight leaves which have been torn from a ruled account book of approximately the same size. Both were written carefully in ink. It will at once be apparent that these church clerks were sometimes stronger in faith than orthography, for the originals, now preserved in the archives of the Kansas State Historical Society, have been copied exactly and are here presented without correction in either spelling or punctuation.

The date of the first entry in the earlier book is April 5, 1841. This is ten years after the establishment of the first Baptist mission to the Shawanoe Indians in Kansas, which the records of the American Baptist Board of Foreign Missions show was in 1831.1 The mission was located "three miles west of Missouri and about eight south of the Missouri river" in a tract of land granted to the Shawanoes, or Shawnees, by the terms of a treaty made at St. Louis, November 7, 1825. To this remote outpost came a small band of workers under the leadership of Johnston Lykins and his wife. In 1833 activities were extended, and a mission station was established for the Delawares2 "north of the Kansas river near its junction with the Missouri."3 Ira D. Blanchard, who had some knowledge of the Delaware language, was employed as a teacher, and in 1835 was appointed a missionary to the tribe.

In January, 1840, Blanchard reported to the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, "Our mission affairs were never so prosperous before. Our meetings are full. Last Sabbath all could not find seats . . . . Our school is full, so that we have been obliged to refuse many applications the last four weeks. Our present number is 16."4 In March of 1841 he writes that the Delaware chiefs oppose the gospel so that few or none attend religious worship, except those who are pious. "There is, nevertheless," he says, "the fullest evidence that the Lord is owning our unworthy efforts. Four are now waiting an opportunity of publicly avowing their faith in Christ. and we have reason to hope that several more are not far from the kingdom of God."5

Records indicate that until this time, 1841, religious work among the Delawares had been carried on under the direction of the mission at Shawanoe. It is somewhat difficult, after nearly a hundred years, to follow the lines of demarcation between group activities, especially in view of the rather loose application of terms. Study of the records leads to the conclusion that a group numbering twenty-six, including Blanchard and his wife and Sylvia Case, a teacher, originally organized as the Delaware branch of the Shawanoe mission, desired to form a separate church. A letter from F. Barker, preacher at Shawanoe, to the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, dated at

2. The Annual Register of Indian Affairs Within the Indian (or Western) Territory, published by Isaac McCoy, January 1, 1835, states that the Baptist mission for the Delawares was commenced in 1832. A Baptist missionary, Charles E. Wilson, spent a few weeks among them in the autumn of that year. However, entries in McCoy's private journal, owned by the Kansas State Historical Society, indicate that work among the Delawares was not instituted until 1833. McCoy writes, on February 12, 1833 : "I have recently conferred with K Lykins, and we have agreed, the Lord willing, to institute preaching and a school among the Delawares. A Mr. Blanchard has spent nearly a year and a half among them on his own resources, in the study of their language. . Mr. Lykins and he expect to visit those Indians in the course of a few days in order to a commencement of operations." On Feb. 26, 1833, he writes: "On Saturday, Sunday and Monday last Mr. Lykins and Mr. French made a visit to the Delawares, some 13 miles from the Shawanoe mission House, with a view of instituting preaching among them and the establishing of a school among them. They report the prospect as favorable, and Mr. Lykins has written the Board, proposing to hire a school teacher.

Shawanoe, Indian territory, July 9, 1841, contains the following item "April 5. I have just returned from the Delaware station, (br. Blanchard's,) where I assisted in organizing a church, according to previous arrangement. It was a solemn service; in one sense painful, to have our brethren separated from us; in another sense pleasing, as we hope it will be for the advancement of the cause, and for our mutual good; and we know that in every important sense we yet are one. After service we proceeded to the water side. Three were baptized; two of them members of br. Blanchard's school."6

In the journal of Jotham Meeker7 appear entries for June 3 and 4 as follows: "3. The church met for business. Two of Br. Blanchard's scholars, Stockbridges, related their christian experiences, and were received by the church for baptism. Br. Pratt8 was appointed ch. Clerk, who wrote a letter of dismission for the members residing north of the Kanzas. One brother made a good deal of difficulty. May the Lord forgive him. 4. Lord's day. The brethren and Sisters who were yesterday dismissed were organized into a separate church. Br. Barker preached the sermon, and I gave the charge and prayer. A Delaware man then related his christian experience. I preached from `The Lord's portion is his people.' Br. Barker then baptized the three candidates in the Kanzas river. I gave the right hand of fellowship; after which Br. B. and I administered the Lord's supper."

Thus the new church got under way. The following records of the organization show that faith was weak at times, and temptation strong, but zeal burned like a bright white flame.

6. Ibid., v. XXI, p. 283.
7. Jotham Meeker, missionary-printer, came to the Shawanoe Mission in 1833, bringing a printing press on which were printed, subsequently, many small books containing hymns, selections from the Scriptures and religious works, translated into Indian languages by Meeker and other missionaries. He removed to the country of the Ottawas in 1837 and founded a mission on the Marais des Cygnes river where the town of Ottawa now stands. His journal, owned by the Historical Society, covers a period of twenty-three years, 1832-1855.
8. John Gill Pratt was employed by the Baptist Missionary Society for work in the Indian territory immediately upon his graduation from Andover in 1836. In March, 1837, he married Olivia Evans, and two weeks later the couple left Boston for the territory, where they were to labor among the Shawanoes at the Shawanoe Baptist mission. They arrived may 11. Pratt had learned the trade of printing at the University Press, Cambridge, Mass., and on his arrival at Shawanoe took charge of the printing office. Pratt went to the Stockbridge Indians in 1844 and in 1848 took charge of the Delaware Baptist mission. He later acted as United States Indian agent to the Delawares.

Church Book or Book of records for the Baptist Church Constituted at the Delaware Bap. Mission April 5th 1841

Breathren being presant from abroad on Saturday the third of April 1841 the subject of our separate organization was brought before us unitedly After much consultation it seemed that. no reasonable objection could be presented against our proceeding in the matter without further delay The following letter of dismission being received was laid before the whole for further consideration

MINUTE BOOKS OF KANSAS MISSIONS 233

At our first Church and Covenant meeting after our organization as a separate body of believers in Christ from the Potawatomie Baptist Mission Church, held on the 24th of April 1841, at the house of Brother Thomas T. Hendrick in the Mohekunnuk Settlement Ind. Ter. Brother Blanchard opened the meeting by prayer, and other usual exercises that are generally required under such circumstances.

Proposition was brought forward, and laid before the brethren and sisters, for their consideration, which was that this Church ought to bear some certain name, under which it might be known and distinguished, the brethren unanimously voted that it should ever hereafter be called Deleware and Mohegan Baptist Mission Church.

The next thing that was done at the said meeting, the said Church nominated and appointed Brothers Jonas Konkapot and brother Charles Jonycake to wait upon brother Towsey, to exhort and admonish him, for disorderly walk as a christian; and for neglecting his duty generally, in not attending to the ordinances of the Church of Christ, particularly in the branch to which he professes to belong, and that they shall be called upon to report at our next Church meeting.

The Brethren of this Church further agreed that they would patiently wait a little longer upon brother Pah-pa-ta-tauk-thy, before they would conclude to excommunicate him from this Church.

Resolution was taken by the brethren and sisters of this Church, that for the future, their church meetings should be held on Saturday previous to the last Sunday of each month.

Another resolution was taken by this Church, that no members of other denominations, should be received without giving a previous notice to the Church, to which they belong. J. M. Newcom. (Church Clerk)

At a Church and Covenant meeting held at Brother Blanchard's house this 29th of May 1841, by the brethren &

mously by the brethren of this church, that Pau-pa-ta-tauk-tha be excommunicated from the Fellowship of this Church, and that he shall be notified of this dismission and that it is for his disorderly behaviour as a christian and member of this church The Committee brother Jonas Konkapot and brother Charles Joney Cake, having heretofore been duly appointed by this Church to go and labour with brother Timothy Towsey, brought report to the Church at this meeting and stated that the said Timothy Towsey complained and found fault which was that a certain brother who had brought complaint before the Church against him had not taken the legal step agreeable to the gospel, and that in consequence of this failure, he declared to the said Committee that all their labour should be in vain and that his standing in the Church as a member should still remain as good and permanent as ever and that all their labour should be in vain further resolution was taken by this Church, that the said Committee shall continue to stand as Committee in this case till the next Church meeting, and brother Blanchard was appointed additionaly to be one of the said Committee and to perform the duty that was required of them by the said Church and to make a report to the Church at the next Church meeting.

The constitution having been approved and adopted Bro Barker on Lord's day morning delivered an appropriate address to us from Ex The Lord said unto Moses why cryest thou unto me say unto the children of Israel that they go forward after which Bro Meeker gave to us the charge and right hand of fellowship.

Bro John W Newcom was then unanomosly chosen to make record of the for going and to act as Clk of the Church while we shall sit in church capacity.

Bro J Meeker was invited to sit as moderator- Oportunity being given James Jack came before us requesting baptism and membership. We heard from him the reason of the hope that was in him and voted that he be received by us.

Bro Blanchard moved & Bro Skeekett seconed that the church meet at Bro Thomas Hendricks on Saturday before the last Lords day in the presant Month.

The congregation having again collected bro Meeker addressed us upon the care of God over his people.

We then repaired to the Kanzas and waited upon the candidates for baptism viz James Jack George W Hendrick Nancy Anthony the two latter having been received by us before organization while siting in capacity of P. B. M. Church right hand of fellowship was given them in behalf of the church by Bro. Meeker.

This being done we came round the table of our crusified but risen Lord. By candle light held a special church prayer meeting in which we trust the Lord was truly with us.

At a Church meeting held at the House of Brother Charles Joney Cake by the brethren and sisters of the Deleware and Mohegan Baptist Mission this 27th day of June 1841, enquiries were made, concerning the labour of the sd. Committee, and they reported that the said Towsey had reconciled his brother, and had settled the difficulty which had heretofore existed [between] them. The report was accepted by the Church as a satisfactory report.

Church Meeting June 27 1841

Meeting opened with prayer by br Barker The committee appointed to labor with br Towsey reported that br Newcom & br Towsey had come to an understandin betwean themselves-and the committee were discharged

Church Meeting Dec 25 1841 at Mohegan

Meeting as usual opened by singing and prayer, bro Jonas Konkaputs case again came before us after again hearing from him It was unanimously agreed that he be restored to church privalages. The church being informed that br When-ge-skon-lose had been guilty of intoxication he was suspended from church privaleges and brothers Charles Journey Cake and Newcom were apointed to wait on him previous to our next meeting Communion again dispensed with because no administrator was present

Church Meeting May 28 1842 at Mohegan

Meeting as usual opened with singing and prayer Breathren and Sister from abroad were invited to a full participation in the privaleges and duties of the meeting.

The case of brother Cornelius Charles who was suspended at the August meeting for intoxication was again brought before us. After again hearing from him on the subject and his deep repentance being manifest uppon the motion of bro Newcom seconed by bro Konkaput it was unanimously agreed that he be restored to his former standing in the church

Br Newcom asked leave to call the attention of the church to an affair that was settled at the church meeting June 27 1841 and gave briefly his reason for so doing which were satisfactory. Br Blanchard requested that before the church proceede to examine the case br Pratt be requested to fill his place as moderator which was granted, Br Pratt in the chair the case proceeded Br Blanchard stated that he had been with three others of the breathren to see br Towsey and that he had refused to hear anything from them and that he had cited him to appear at the meeting to answer to charges that would there be brought against him to which he returned nothing but rating. Br Newcom was then asked for proof of the statements he had made br Cornelius Hendrick stated that Mr Towsey had told him previous to the settlement that br Newcom had made conffession and that was the way the difficulty was now being disposed His wife Sister Mary H. stated that she was present and heard Mr Towsey make the fore going statements Sister Betsey Zeeglear stated that Mr Towsey said in her presence that Mr Newcom had written to br Blanchard and had carryed his own communication to him and got the matter hushed because he was affraid to have it go any farther. All this was at utter variance with the facts known to the committee Enquiry was then made as to the general appearance of religion in Mr Towsey, a general expression was that he was a disgrace [to the] church, that he was in constant habbit of lying and that he is and has been a sower of discord-Br Henry Skeekett motioned that the matter be postponed, got no second, br Jonas Konkakaput motioned that he be excluded without delay aleging as his reason that the church had already tolerated the case to its disgrace Br Cornelius Hendrick seconded the motion br H. Skeekett stated that the matter had got to a high pitch and that he should now be compled to come to the point said that things were charged upon Mr Towsey that were false that he had sought out one certain thing and it was not true Not saying what it was he was asked if the thing to which he alluded had been spoken of in the trial, He replied, "it has not The vote was then taken shall Timothy Towsey be excluded Afirmative eleven Negative five three of the five afterwards expressed approbation of this decision

III. INTRODUCTION

First mention of the Stockbridge Indians in the territory west of the Mississippi appears in reports of the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions in the Baptist Missionary Magazine for the item is as follows:

"On the 6th of December [18391 a party of Stockbridge Indians from Winnebago Lake (Wisconsin territory,) arrived, with the design of making the Delaware country their future home. The Delawares have acceeded to the proposition, and have located them below Fort Leavenworth. From eight to ten of these, including the principal chief, are expected to join the Delaware church, two of whom have not before made a profession of faith in Christ. The native assistant is to labor among this tribe:"

In the report for 1843 appears the statement that Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Pratt have been authorized to remove to Stockbridge, at the earnest and repeated solicitation of the Indians of that place. "He [Pratt] has," reads the report, "for some time, regularly ministered to them every alternate Sabbath. He will take the press with him; the Stockbridges gladly engaging to aid in the erection of a printing-office, school-house, etc., to the utmost of their ability." Some difficulties for the Stockbridges arose over the "singular alienation of the Delaware chiefs" and Mr. Pratt was prevented from locating among them for a time, but troubles were adjusted and mission buildings were commenced in the autumn of 1844. The following records, copied verbatim, show activities of the Stockbridge Baptist Mission Church constituted April 13th, 1845:

IV. CHURCH BOOK RECORDS

The Stockbridge Baptist Mission Church, was organized, April 13th 1845. Present at the time, Brethren Jotham Meeker, Francis Barker, & Ira D. Blanchard.

At a meeting of members for organization previous to organization it was voted to adopt as ours the "Declaration of Faith," and "Covenant," as prepared by the Committee of the New Hampshire Baptist Convention.

At a meeting of the Church June 8, it was voted that the Church meet for Conference and Business on the 2d Saturday of each month.

Voted also to adopt the following Resolutions-Resolved-That we consider the habit of using intoxicating liquors, as a drink, to be sinful; and leads to fearful consequences, as the scriptures declare, no "drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of Heaven." We will abstain from the use of any, & all intoxicating drinks; and consider those under censure of the Church, who use, or become intoxicated in the use of them.

Resolved-That we consider Marriage am ordinance of Heaven, and require all persons (members of the Church,) expecting to enter that relation, to be publicly united, according to the usual manner of performing that ceremony among professed Christians.

In consequence of sickness, and the absence of most of the members, no meeting of the Church occurred after the above date until

January 25th, 46 when a meeting was held at the House of Bro Jonas Konkapot-at which time Bro. Cornelius Charles from the Delaware Baptist Church, John G. Pratt, and Mrs. Olivia E. Pratt from the Putawatomie Baptist Church, presented Letters, and were received as members of this Church. J. G. Pratt Pastor

February 7th Church met at the House of Sister Hannah Konkapot, at which time Levi Konkapot and Jacob Littleman related their religious exercises, and requested admission to the Church. Voted to meet Feb 14th to decide on their Reception.- Adjourned

February 14th Church met according to adjournment at the house of Pastor. After further hearing the above named individuals, and also listening to Mrs Josephine Littleman-It was voted, unanimously-that they be received as candidates for Baptis[m] and membership. After prayer Adjournment

Sabbath Afternoon Feb 15th these persons were all baptized, in presence of a solemn and interested congregation.

March 7, 1846 Church met at the House of J. G. Pratt Door being opened for the reception of member[s] Mr. Joseph Henry Killbuck, and his wife; Eli Hendrick and his wife; and the widow Lydia Konkapot, related their religious exercises and were received as Candidates for Baptism and Membership. Mr. Thomas T.

Hendrick, made formal confession of error, asked the privilege of a union with us. Church requested him to wait until another meeting to which he consented-Adjourned

Sabbath morning March 8 the individuals received above were all Baptized; and in the evening, received the right hand of fellowship After which Church Commemorated the Suffering of our Savior, enjoying much of his presence, and much rejoicing in his favor.

April Church met at the House of Bro. Jonas Konkapot. After religious exercises voted to appoint second Sabbath in May as a season of religious worship, and to invite the Christian friends from Shawanoe and Delaware to be present

Also voted that at our meeting for business next week we will elect a brother to act for us as our Deacon.

Adjourned by prayer J. G. Pratt Pastor

250 THE KANSAS HISTORICAL QUARTERLY

This church having met with a severe visitation,9 and parted with its former Pastor, was re-organized on the 12th of Aug. 1848. In doing this it was found necessary to enroll such names only as were known to be in good standing in this and the disbanded Church at Stockbridge. This step became the more important as the book containing record of the Delaware Church, appeared either to have been mutilated or intentionally neglected, as no entries appeared to have been made for several years. The list of members immediately following contains only such names of persons as are known to be in good standing in both Churches at time of reorganization

KANSAS IMMIGRANT TRIBES

SHAWNEE

The Shawnee and the Delaware had a close relationship beginning with the days that they occupied lands in the present state of Ohio. A brief history of the Shawnee will be entered here. In the article on Anna (Marshall) Grinter we show an 1897 photograph in which the Shawnee Blue Jacket is seated with Anne. The brief caption said that they were about to seek the grave of the Shawnee Prophet, Tenskwatawa.

From the Encyclopedia of North American Indians we learn that he was one of a set of triplets born at Old Piqua, on the Mad Rive4 in western Ohio.

> His mother was Methoataske (Turtle Laying Its Eggs), a Creek woman. His father, Puckeshinewa, a Shawnee war chief, was killed at the Battle of Point Pleasant prior to the triplets' birth. The triplets were the youngest siblings in a large family (they had at least six older brothers and sisters), and one of the triplets died in infancy. The other triplet, Kumskaukau, lived at least until 1807.
> In 1779 Methoataske left Ohio. The two remaining triplets and Tecumseh, a brother born in 1768, were left in the care of Tecumapease, an older, married sister. Their upbringing also was supervised by Chiksika, a brother in his late teens. Both Tecumapease and Chiksika favored Tecumseh, an athletic youth who excelled at the contests and games popular among Shawnee boys. In contrast, the boy who would become the Prophet was an awkward, corpulent youth who accidentally gouged out his own right eye while fumbling with an arrow. Because he often boasted and complained, he was called Lalawethika (the Noisemaker), a name he disliked. He married in his teens, but was unskilled as a hunter and became an alcoholic. He did not participate in the Indian victories over Josiah Harmar (1790) or Arthur St. Clair (1791), but he did join a war party of Shawnees led by Tecumseh who fought at the Battle of Fallen Timbers. Following the Treaty of Greenville (1795) he lived with a band of Shawnees led by Tecumseh who resided at several locations in western Ohio and eastern Indiana. In 1798 they moved to the White River near Anderson, Indiana, where Lalawethika, still an alcoholic, unsuccessfully attempted to assume a role as a healer and shaman.
> In the decade following the Treaty of Greenville socioeconomic conditions among the Shawnees and neighboring tribes deteriorated. Game and fur-bearing animals declined, while frontiersmen encroached upon Indian land, poaching the few remaining animals and establishing new settlements. White juries protected Americans accused of crimes against tribes people while systematically convicting Indians. Meanwhile, many Indian people contracted new diseases for which they had no immunity. Under considerable stress, tribal communities were plagued with apathy and dysfunction, and alcoholism increased. Considerably alarmed, many Shawnees believed that their troubles were caused by witches spreading chaos in the Shawnee world.

During April 1805, in the midst of this crisis, Lalawethika underwent a religious experience in which he appeared to fall into a trance so deep that his family at first believed him to be dead. After a few hours he recovered and informed his neighbors that he had died, had been taken to a location overlooking heaven and hell, and had been shown how the Shawnees could improve their situation. He stated that although Indians had been fashioned by the Creator, Americans were the children of the the Great Serpent, the source of evil in the world. Aided by witches (Indians who accepted American cultural values), the Americans had spread chaos and disorder. In consequence, he championed a new religious revitalization, urging the Shawnees and other Indians to minimize their contact with the Americans. He admonished tribespeople to relinquish American food and clothing, most manufactured goods, and alcohol. Firearms could be used for defense, but game should be hunted with bows and arrows. If Indians followed such doctrines, their dead relatives would return to life and game would reappear in the forests; if they refused, they would be condemned to a fiery hell reminiscent of Christian doctrines. He also announced that thenceforward he should be known as Tenskwatawa (the Open Door), a name befitting his new role as a prophet.

Tenskwatawa's teachings found many adherents among the Shawnees and neighboring tribes, particularly after he successfully predicted an eclipse of the sun in June 1806. By 1807 so many Indians had traveled to his village near Greenville, in western Ohio, that they exhausted food supplies in the region. White officials became alarmed at this influx, and in 1808 the Prophet led his followers to Prophetstown, a new village near the juncture of the Tippecanoe and Wabash Rivers, near modern Lafayette, Indiana.

In 1809, after the Treaty of Fort Wayne, Tecumseh attempted to transform the religious movement into a centralized political alliance designed to retain the remaining Indian lands in the West. From Prophetstown Tecumseh traveled throughout the Midwest. In November 1811, while Tecumseh was recruiting allies in the South, William Henry Harrison, the governor of Indiana

Territory, led an expedition against Prophetstown. Forced to protect his village, Tenskwatawa promised his followers that they would be immune from American firearms and instructed them to attack Harrison's camp. In the resulting conflict, the Battle of the Tippecanoe, the Indian attack was repulsed. Although both sides suffered losses, the Prophet's influence was broken. When Tecumseh returned from the South in January 1812 he assumed sole command of the Indian alliance

Never a warrior, the Prophet took little part in the War of 1812. In December 1812 he fled to Canada, then accompanied Tecumseh back to northern Indiana. In the following spring they led a large party of western warriors to the Detroit region. The Prophet accompanied the British and Indian forces that unsuccessfully besieged Fort Meigs during May 1813, but he took no part in the fighting. On October 5, 1813, he was present at the Battle of the Thames, but he fled with the British when the battle started. Tecumseh was killed in the battle.

Following the War of 1812, the Prophet remained in Canada for ten years, unsuccessfully attempting to regain a position of leadership. In 1825, at the invitation of Lewis Cass, the governor of Michigan Territory, he returned to the United States and used his limited influence to promote Indian removal. One year later he accompanied a party of Shawnees from Ohio who were traveling via St. Louis to Kansas. The Prophet settled at the site of modern-day Kansas City, Kansas, where he posed for the artist George Catlin in the autumn of 1832. He died there four years later, in November 1836.

LIFE AMONG THE DELAWARE INDIANS IN THE KANSAS RESERVE

This section contains articles on the life of the Lenape-Delaware on their reserve in present Kansas. The editor reflects the writings of the missionaries as a part of the historical record of the Lenape-Delaware. He does not endorse their views nor does he agree with many of them. Perhaps the reading of their experiences will help us understand why they did what they felt that they had to do. For the time being, there will also be other items on the Lenape-Delaware such as their relationship with other Native Americans and their relationship with African-Americans until we can set up a better place for them. This page also contains for the time being a small section on Delaware-African American Relations and an article regarding Miami-Delaware relations. THE DELAWARE MIGRATION TO INDIAN TERRITORY

(From Chapter III, "Delaware Come to This Area," page 10, from an untitled book. [I am looking for it. I can't remember who sent this item to me, so if anyone finds this as their contribution, please let me know and I will give you the proper credit. Editor: swiftwater@lenapedelawarehistory.net

The United States Government, after the Civil War, forced the Cherokee Nation to allow other friendly Indian tribes to settle on Cherokee lands. This was imposed because the Government claimed the Cherokees were sympathetic with the cause of the Confederates.

The Delaware Indians, living in Kansas, took advantage of this provision and agreed to purchase land, and tribal rights, from the Cherokee Nation. (Kappler, Indian Affairs--Laws and Treaties, p. 937. BHR) The purchased comprised what is now the greater part of Washington County [of Oklahoma]. The Delawares began their final move during the winter of 1866, although the final agreement was not signed by President Andrew Johnson until the 11th of April. 1867. (Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. Compilation of All Treaties between the United States and the Indian Nations, p. 362) An excerpt taken from an interview with Katy (Whiteturkey) Day, a full blood Delaware, in 1837 by Allene D. McDowell, a field worker with the State Historical Society of Oklahoma, and on file in the State Historical Library at Oklahoma City, gives some idea of their move.

> My parents first settled at Baxter Spring, Kansas, when they were brought here from the east, then moved to Wyandotte County, near Lawrence, Kansas, then moved to Indian Territory. There were about twenty-five or thirty families brought to Indian Territory at the time we made the trip. We came in a hack, or light weight carriages, and some of the other families drove buggies, wagons, and ox drawn wagons., and some were horseback. Our food supplies were transported in a large covered wagon drawn by six yoke of oxen. We would camp about noon and the supplies would not arrive until sundown. The oxen traveled very slow.

A Delaware family named Mahooney [Mahoney] was with us, who had one child, a boy, nineteen years old. (A search of the 1862 Delaware Roll by Pratt, reveals that the family name Mahooney, is also know as WAH HO NEY. Number 724m, a male age 38 with a son NAH POO WHA, age 13) After we had eaten our noon meal this boy rode away on a horse to look for some horses that had strayed away. It was snowing hard and when he was not back to camp early they thought he might have gotten lost. He was gone all afternoon and about sundown they heard a shot and his mother became worried. He did not return that night and early the next morning the men started to look for him. They found him not far from the camp. He had been robbed, scalped, and stripped of his clothes by the Osage Indians. He was laying face down in the snow with a soldier's blue overcoat thrown over him. This was a gruesome sight and put a great fear in our little band for the safety of our lives. This boy was buried near the camp we were stationed at the forks of the Caney [River]. He was the first person buried in this cemetery and it is the oldest cemetery in Washington County. It is located northwest of Bartlesville. This cemetery is know as the Delaware Cemetery. It is located in section 7, township 27N, range 13E. and is two miles north and one and a half miles west of Dewey. (Katy Whiteturkey Day Interview. History Room, Bartlesville Public Library)

ACCOUNT BY REVEREND JOHN G. PRATT

(From The History of Wyandotte County, Kansas..., p. 149: "The following account pertaining to the last occupancy by the Indians of the territory now embraced in Wyandotte County, given by Rev. John G. Pratt, now [1890] the oldest citizen in the county, and published in the Andreas' State History, is here presented for the benefit of the reader.")

"That part of the country on the north side of the Kansas River was first settled by the Delawares in 1829. They came from Ohio, and brought with them a knowledge of agriculture, and many of them habits of industry. They opened farms, built houses and cut roads along the ridges and divides; also erected a frame church at what is now the vil[l]age of White Church. The south side of the Kansas River was settled by the Shawnee Indians in 1823. They also afterward came from Ohio and were about as much advanced in civilization as the Delaware They had a Methodist Mission some three miles from Westport a long time, it being presided over by Rev. Mr. Johnson; also a Quaker Mission about two miles west of that. The population of the Delaware tribe when it first settled in Kansas was 1,000. It was afterward reduced to 800. This was in consequence of contact with wilder tribes. who were as hostile to the short-haired Indians as they were to the whites. Still the Delawares would venture out hunting buffalo and beaver. to be inevitably overcome and destroyed. Government finally forbade their leaving the reservation. The effect of this order was soon apparent in the steady increase of the tribe, so that when they removed in 1867 [to Indian Territory--now Oklahoma] they numbered 1,160. The ruling chiefs from 1829 to 1867 were Ne-con-he-con, Qui-sha-to-wha (Sar-cox-ie), Charles Johnnycake, Qua-con-now-ha (James Secondine or Secundine), Ah-ca-chick (James Conner), and Captain John Conner."

INDIAN MISSIONS IN KANSAS

This item is from the Kansas Historical Society's Kansas Historical Collections, vol. 16, "Indian Missions in Kansas," [From Western Christian Advocate, June 16, 1848, vol. 10, p. 34] pp. 257-258:

Rev. C. Elliott: Dear Brother-- On Monday, the 8th inst.[1848], we left the [Kickapoo] mission and returned to brother Peery's the same evening. Tuesday, the 9th, we met with the Delaware Indians, in company with their devoted minister, Rev. E. T. Peery, at the mission church. The day was pleasant, and the members of the Church came out generally, and a few of the heathen party, notwithstanding it was a busy season of the year. We all preached to them. I preached first, and found it somewhat embarrassing to preach through an interpreter, yet it was not so bad as I had anticipated. Brother T. Johnson followed immediately; and after a sort of intermission, Brother W. Browning gave them a discourse. The meeting throughout was spiritual and lively, and there is no doubt with me, but that it was profitable to many precious souls. At the close of the services, brother Peery gave an opportunity to all who wished to "forsake their mold wicked way, and to come and walk in the good and Christian way," to do so, when several came forward and joined the Church, among whom was a tall, athletic man, very savage in appearance, and who, it is said, has been a very ferocious, cruel, and blood-thirsty Indian; but he has grounded the weapons of his warfare at the feet of Jesus, determined to fight against his God no more. This produced great joy among the Christian Indians: they had witness another glorious triumph of Gospel truth over fallen, depraved human nature.

This nation numbers about 1,000; about 100 of this number are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. When the missionaries first came among [p. 258] these Indians, they were perhaps the most drunken, sottish, and miserable people in all these lands of darkness of death. Now they are enjoying the blessings of civilization and Christianity, and many of them are redeemed from their drunkenness and misery, and are rejoicing in a Savior's love. They have, by their own efforts, built a good log meeting-house, with good floors, and glazed windows; it is warmed in the winter with two good stoves, procured at their own expense. The Christian party have pretty much thrown off the Indian costume and dress like civilized people. A number of their children are receiving education at the Indian Manual Labor School. This exerts a very happy influence in the nation. When the children visit their friends during the school vacation, they come home well clad, everything about them being clean and neat. The missionary has a Sunday School established at the mission, which is destine to exert a very happy influence over the old and especially the young who attend it. This missions is at present. beyond all doubt, in a prosperous condition, and worthy of the confidence, prayers, and support of the Church.

The Delawares, it is said, at one time believed their were two deities, on a male and the other a female. The male god had his habitation in the north, and when he ruled, and blew out his breath, then we had cold winds, and frost and snow. The female, or goddess, had her residence in the south, and when she swayed the sceptre, we had warm wind and pleasant weather. The god rule ruled in winter and the goddess in summer. They believed that this god and goddess were often waging war with each other. When the male deity prevailed, we had weather corresponding with his reign, and when the female deity ruled, we had weather agreeing with her benign administration. The "green corn dance," it is said, originated from these views of heathen mythology. In the fall of the year, the Indians would gather of the first ripe corn and offer it to the goddess of the south, who presided over the seasons with so much dignity; and under whose gracious reign the new crop of corn was brought into a state of maturity, offering seed to the sower, and bread to the eater. This opinion, however, is entertained but by a few at the present time.

The lands owned by this tribe of Indians are exceedingly rich and fertile, unsurpassed by any I have ever seen, and calculated to yield to the hand of industry every product, in the richest profusion, which the latitude and altitude of the country will allow. Yours affectionately, W. Patton, Ch'n. May 10, 1843

To the Rev. E. R. Ames, Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the Western Conference:

DEAR BROTHER--The condition of the Indian mission district, Missouri conference, is still prosperous...[p. 254] The present missionary, Rev. G. W. Love, has been able to spend but little time with them this year, owing in part to his affliction, and in part to their absence from their homes. He has been employed through the summer at the Delaware station, supplying the place of the missionary there in his absence on the district [p. 254]....

With the Delawares we have about one hundred Church members, and perhaps over one-third of that number have died happy in the bosom of the Church since the commencement of our operations amongst them, besides fifteen who have passed through our society to the Baptists. We have at this place a good meeting-house which is finished, and furnished with two good stoves by the Indians themselves. Here we have our meetings regularly three times a week. The Sabbath is occupied, first by Sabbath school in the morning, in which we teach all, old and young, who wish to learn to read the translations of Scripture. and hymns in their own language. At the end of these instructions follows a sermon by the missionary through an interpreter, then an intermission of half an hour, which is followed by a sermon. or exhortation, or both by natives; and prayer and praises conclude the services of the day; when we return to our respective homes refreshed as with new wine. The other two meetings are held on Wednesdays and Saturdays; the former for prayer and the latter a class meeting. We have also been trying the circuit plan among the Delawares which promises to succeed well. Here it is proper to observe that we have the hearty cooperation of the Moravian friends or United Brethren, situated one mile and a half from our station. We feel ourselves under many obligations to these truly Christian brethren, and think we are highly favored that we have such neighbors... We have children in the Indian Manual Labor School from all the tribes with whom we have missions except the Kickapoos. This backwardness is doubtless owing to the influence of the "Prophet," [Shawnee] which is exerted against us...Yours respectfully, E. T. Peery. DELAWARE MISSION, July 24, 1843 [p. 254]

The following is another of the "Letters of Rev. Edward Perry" contained in the Kansas Historical Society's, Kansas Historical Collections, "Indian Missions," [From Western Christian Advocate, Dec. 23, 1842, vol. 9, p. 144], pp. 251-252. This letter, written at the time of the death of Chief _____, is condescending and insulting, and I have not included it in the Biography of that person, nor included the name here. The letter is typical of some of the missionary letters in which the state of individual Native Americans or Native Americans in general deprecate the Indian in order to "prove" the importance of the missions and the missionaries. Many of the missionaries did good works, of course, and I intend generally to show both sides, letting the "record" tell the ultimate tale. Editor.

Died, Nov. 11th, after a lingering illness of neat three months, _____, a chief of the Delaware tribe if Indians. He was among many others yet living in who was exhibited the popular excellence and saving power of the Gospel. Previous to his conversion, about eight years ago, he was abandoned to most of the vices practiced among Indians; a degraded drunkard, a noted juggler

[that is, a type of shaman], a furious blood-thirsty [perhaps in defending his homeland?] heathen, in a word most, if not all the marks of depravity found in the third chapter of the epistle to the Romans, were conspicuous in his character. But to the honor of our Christianity be it known, that from the time he was first arrested by the word of God, from the time the Holy Spirit first glimmered upon his darkened soul, he arose from the depths of degredation, shook off his accumulated vices, and stood forth the decided Christian; and until the day of his death was never known to taste the accursed "fire water," or otherwise disgrace his profession. But, in common with other Christians, he had to bear many reproaches and persecutions from his own people. Some two years hence he was summoned to trial before a heathen council; and so urgent was the call that a company of men were sent after him, who put him on a horse and forced him away in much haste. When he arrived at the place he met a large, clamorous assembly, some half drunk, all painted up in the true heathen style, and presenting rather a fearful appearance. They were seated in a ring of some twenty-five or thirty feet in diameter, in the centre of which was a vacant seat upon which he was placed. The speakers then arose and presented the accusation, which was, killing many of their people by the power of witch-craft--that they had long delayed inflicting the merited punishment but so many lately had fallen victim to his malice, that they could bear with him no longer--that the tomahawk used for only that purpose (witch-killing) had long lain under the bed in rust, but that they had rubbed it bright, and that his life should then atone for his crimes. The executioners were then ordered up. Our friend asked if he might be permitted to answer for himself, which was granted, he did, in a speech of some length, avow his innocence of the charges preferred against time--that he knew nothing of the art attributed to him, but if there was such an art and he possessed it, the religion he professed, forbid the hurting of any man--that he had nothing in his heart against any of them, but that was in their hands, and if they chose to kill him, he was ready to die. After counseling on the matter, they concluded to let him live a little longer, upon the condition that he would cease killing the people. Three of the chief men were then pointed out to him, and he was told that when any one of them died, sooner or later in life, which they in their mercy gave him for the present, should be taken without pity. Through most of his religious life he served as one of our class leaders. During his last painful sickness he drank deeper into the spirit of the Gospel, and had nearer and more striking views of the Savior of sinners than at any former period. He talked and seemed to think about little else than the prospect that opened before him, and it was difficult to satisfy him with the amount of singing and prayer at his house. Just before the last struggle, he called his family and those present to his bed, and taking each one by the hand bade them a last adieu, then closed his eyes in death, leaving on his features a placid smile, such as would indicate in health, deep inward pleasure. E. T. Peery. DELAWARE MISS., MO., Nov. 20, 1842.

LIFE AMONG THE DELAWARE INDIANS"

The following article, by Clara Gowing is from the Kansas State Historical Society's Kansas Historical Collections, vol. XII (1911-1912), pp. 183-193. Clara Gowing, of Massachusetts, wrote it as the result of a visit to the Delaware Baptist Mission on the Delaware Reserve in 1859. She was accompanied by Elizabeth S. Morse, also of Massachusetts. Ms. Morse was a teacher there from about 1848 until 1867 when the majority of the tribe was removed to Indian Territory (Oklahoma). She died in Kansas in November 1899 at age 85. The Delaware Mission School was started in 1837 by Ira D. Blanchard. It was situated where the Edwardsville station was later located. On 10 July 1895, John G. Pratt said, "In 1848 I moved the building of the mission school up to where I now live. It was a log building. I moved the logs and put the building up in the same form as it stood at the river...It forms the middle portion of my house and is clap-boarded over the logs like the other portion of the frame building. (John Gill Pratt was born in Hingham, Mass., 9 Sept. 1814 and died at his home near Piper, Wyandotte Co., Kans. 23 April 1900.) The mission buildings consisted of five houses and the stables. A large, square house with an "L" was occupied by Mr. Pratt and his family, the lower part being the family dining room; over it was a chamber, and beyond the dining room was the kitchen. Part of this house was originally a log church at the Shawnee mission, and was the first building used for worship in the country. Another large, square house was used as a dormitory for the school." "Life Among the Delaware Indians"
(by Miss Clara Gowing) (1), of Reading Massachusetts, from the Kansas Historical Society's Kansas Historical Collections, vol. XII,(1911-1912), pp.183-193)

Moved by a sermon which I heard preached in Concord, Mass., my home at that time, from the text, "Lord, what will thou have me do?" I decided to engage in mission work if an opportunity offered; and in October, 1859, accompanied by Miss E. S. Morse (2) being a teacher with whom I was to be associated.

The mission buildings consisted of five houses and the stables. with an "L" was occupied by Mr. Pratt and family, the lower part being the family dining room' over it was a chamber, and beyond the dining room was the kitchen. Part of this house was originally a log church at the Shawnee mission, and was the first building used for worship in the country. Another large, square house was used as a dormitory for the school. There was also a long schoolhouse divided by folding doors. All these were frame buildings, facing south; a small house, formerly used for the school but then in use as a wash house or laundry, the usual smoke house of that part of the country, and stables built of logs, completed the group that was known through the territory as the Baptist, or Pratt's mission. The location was on rising ground on the border of timber land and rolling prairie. About a quarter of a mile away, on a hill, was the chapel -- a frame building. but not strong enough to bear the bell which had been given to the mission, and so it was hung in a framework in Mr. Pratt's back yard, and rung to call to meals, school, and daily worship. Its tones were gladly heard miles away, and served the purpose of a town clock to all within its sound.

We arrived at the mission, by stage from Leavenworth, at noon October 14, and after dinner went about preparing the beds for the children. School was to open Monday; so the children usually came to church with their parents to take them home. But the next day the clouds poured forth their treasure and there was no service at the chapel. I occupied myself much of the day scratching my body, wondering what could cause the irritation. I thought at first I had gathered something in my journey that occasioned it, but found that this soon the process of acclimation had begun what was known as the Kansas itch, the breaking out of which. frequently prevented a fever or other sickness. [Could this be a part of the histoplasmosis that afflicted your author in the 1930s in Kansas?] It continued until cold weather and returned with renewed vigor the next summer, blotches and scabs all over my body.

As the rain ceased toward night, George Washington came, bringing three boys. They backed up against the outside of the house where he left them, with anything but a cheery expression, till called in by Miss Morse. When they first came she made a fire in the stove and put our a wash boiler, brought out a tub, and to my surprised question, "What are you going to do?" replied, "Wash the bots. We never put them into our clean beds without bathing." That those boys, the eldest ten or twelve, should quietly answer the question plied by Miss Morse, "Did your mother wash you before you came?" and then passively submit to her examining their ears to see if they were clean, filled me with amazement, as I sat in silence taking in the situation. I found that clean ears was the test of a thorough bath.

It was arranged that Miss Morse should have care of the boys out of school, and I of the girls, each looking after the work and the clothes of her charge; also caring for them in sickness. A few of them came from civilized, Christian homes, were neatly dressed and tidy. Others required an entire outfit of clothes and attention to their heads; and for that a daily examination was necessary. This process was called by the boys "hunting buffaloes"; and that none might escape, and to make their capture easy, their hair was kept short, though boys as well as girls plumed themselves in long braids with gay ribbons plaited in the hair.

A woman brought her own and a neighbor's child one day. Both needed to be barbered. Usually we kept that until the parent was gone, but this time I wanted to attend to it before changing my dress, and through an interpreter told them to unbraid their hair ready for cutting. When the mother understood what was to be done she took her girl home. When witnessing for the first time the rather unique process of combing heads, I said to Miss Morse, "Did you ever get lice in your hair?" "Certainly," she replied' "we never pass a term without them." The I thought, "Can ever come to this?"

One day a party of young people from Wyandotte came out to the mission to have a little picnic by themselves, and camped on a bluff opposite the schoolhouse. The children wondered what it meant. We said, "They are having a picnic." Immediately the word went round, "picknits, picknits."

Evidently they thought it was the same process that they went through every morning except Sunday. One day I noticed two boys very busy over each other's heads, as if they were picking lice and putting them on the cover of their reading books. Watching over them a while, I saw that they did not kill them. So I asked, "What are you doing with the lice?" "Making them fight." one replied.

But few of the children spoke English, and in doing their work an interpreter must be used. A child from one of the Christian families usually acted for us in that way. The girls especially were no ambitious to learn English. They said iof they spoke it people would call them "old white folks." The girls were taught to sew besides doing the chamber and dining room work. The boys brought water from the spring for laundry and family use, split and sawed the wood and kept the wood boxes supplied. In summer the older ones were sometimes taken to the field to work. Evenings and stormy days when they could not be out of doors they were taught to knit and thus made themselves many stockings. Both boys and girls wore earrings when they came to school, but the boys soon left them off when they learned they were not considered the right things for the educated male.

The dinners were usually soup ands warm corn bread; for supper, white bread and molasses; breakfast, warmed-up soup, white breads and coffee. Sunday morning they had cookies and a piece of apple pie, and for supper warm biscuits and butter. They were taught to say, "I thank you" for this or that.

I had twin girls named Adeline and Emeline, six-year old children of Charles Journeycake (5), who looked so nearly alike it was difficult to tell one from the other. When I wanted one I frequently took both their names or sometimes said "twin." One night when one was sick I went to give her some medicine, and thought I had wakened the right child when, to my surprise, she said, "I am not sick; it is Adeline." And, sure enough, I had almost made the well one take the powder.

Unused to restraint (6) at home, the discipline of school life was very irksome to the children , and not very6 easy for us, especially out of school and in winter when they could not exercise out of doors. A room full of lively children, jabbering [how about simply say "talking"!] an unknown tongue [If they were you are going to teach Lenape children, why not learn Lenape?], was very trying on one's nerves. Wishing to avoid corporal punishment as much as possible, we resorted to rather original methods to preserve necessary order. To keep little one from mischievously annoying one another we often pinned their aprons over their heads or tied hands behind them, even blindfolded them on occasion. If the tongue became unruly, a chip was put between the teeth. [I am having a hard time trying to maintain an impartiality toward missionaries! Editor] Around the yard were enormous stumps, two or three feet high, where the quarrelsome boys were sent to stand, living statues among the grounds for a while. One Saturday afternoon after a severe storm came up at the time to wash the floors, making it useless to have it done. As it cleared just at night, I reggretted that through Sunday I must see muddy floors; but after the girls were in bed they were disorderly, so for punishment I had them get up and wash the stairs and floors.

When I went to the mission Mr. Pratt was receiving a salary of $300, and nothing extra for educating his children. He used to set aside a pony or a cow for each one, from which to raise money for their schooling, but quite often the creature died or was stolen. He received not quite $1 per week, or $50 a year, for each Indian child at school--that to cover clothing, food, books, medicine and all. The children were hard on shoes, and required much medicine. The Delawares numbered about 800, did not increase, and were a rich people. (7) Their reservation, forty miles long by ten miles wide, was the best land in the United States. But the Indians did not enjoy tilling the ground; he preferred hunting and riding over the prairie, hiring some white men to do his work.

All kinds of wild animals were abundant--owls, wolves, wildcats, turkey buzzards, etc.; vermin of all kinds and reptiles of all description were to be seen. One day, coming from the schoolhouse, as I was about to step to the piazza at the back of the house I saw a snake in my path. I ran around to the front door, and there lay a lizard at the doorstep. As I must go in, I gave a bound and landed in the hall.

Wild game also was plenty; prairie chicken, wild turkeys and rabbits were often on our table. Lucius [Pratt's oldest son] shot 120 pigeons in one morning, and one turkey he shot weighed twenty-three pounds. Once when out calling on the Indians with Mr. Pratt, we had a fine view of an eagle. He was resting on the top of a tall, barren tree, quite near us, giving a grand chance to view his white head. Mr. Pratt said he never saw one quite so near. We stopped and looked at him closely, and the eagle seemed to understand there was no gun aboard and he was therefore perfectly safe. When we had looked long enough Mr. Pratt [this great man of God] frightened him away, so I had an opportunity to see his wings spread. We though they must measure six feet from tip to tip.

Mr. Thomas B. Sykes, the agent who came from Beaufort, N. C., came to the mission to board in December, 1859. When he left the agency he entered the Confederate army. It was through his courtesy that we attended the Indian payment at Stranger Creek next summer. Nr. Johnson followed Mr. Sykes as agent, and Rev. J. G. Pratt succeeded him and continued agent u til the Delawares removed to the country.

During the spring vacation of 1860, Mr. Pratt's oldest son, Lucius, married Nannie, the daughter of Charles Journeycake. There was quite a wedding in the afternoon. The bride was dressed in white muslin. with veil and orange blossoms, and looked very pretty. The ceremony was followed by an elaborate supper being a prominent feature of of white, or "strong," marriage, as the Indians termed it. Opposite me at `the table sat George Washington with his two wives, one on each side of him, and each with a babe in her arms. Polygamy was allowed but not generally practiced in the tribe. Washington was a large man, with broad face, greasy skin, and long, black hair. His hunting shirt lay open at the neck, in his belt hung the tomahawk worn on all occasions, and in his ears were silver ear-loops. The two women wore the usual head covering--a bright-colored silk handkerchief, which had slipped back and was lying loosely on the neck. These handkerchiefs are worn summer and winter. They had rings on their fingers and in their ears, and wore many bracelets. Some of these ornaments were of silver and some of brass.

Lucius took his wife to his father's to board while a new house was being built for them. A few weeks after the wedding I accompanied them to the old mission site, where Mr. Blanchard labored before Mr. Pratt took charge. The distance was four miles, most of the way through timber land, the wilderness all around. Large trees lay where they had fallen, sometimes lodging against other trees, and sometime lying full length on the ground, moss covered and going to decay. The old mission site was not as pleasant nor as healthy as the present mission.

From a house near by Lucius procured a tin cup; and we drank from a spring where a stump had been burned out and placed over it to hold the water. It was a fine draught. From a creek beyond we watered our horses, then went on to Kansas river, half a mile further, and looked over into the Shawnee country. Our way home was through what is called "the bottoms." The path led through little creeks and clumps of bushes, over stumps, down steep declivities, then up again like the letter V. Dodging here and bowing our heads there, to avoid being caught, Absalom-like, in a tree, or brushed from our horses by the bushes, was all a new and exciting experience to me. starting up wild turkeys and other game. Urged by my companions, I made my first attempt at leaping "Pacer" over a large tree fallen to the ground, and to my surprise found myself in the saddle when Pacer" struck the ground on the other side. I enjoyed the wilderness and no very very much, and arrived home for dinner with good appetite and found the mercury registering 78 degrees (March 31). I had gathered five varieties of flowers, but the flora of this part of the country was not fragrant--for "why waster sweetness on the desert air."

April 2 I went with Mr. P Pratt in the buggy about six miles to see chief Ketchum, who was sick. The firs few miles were on the open prairie; then we drove through the woods. The house, of one story, with the roof coming down over the piazza, was situated in a clearing, and around the door were ponies and cattle, pigs and fowls. The door opened into a small room , in which was a bed, a cooking stove, table and chairs. On the bed was a hen lying her egg. The next room was small also, with a large fireplace a bed and lounge and two bureaus. On the lounge lay the chief. While we were there two Indians came in. One had been to the mountains among a wild tribe. He was dressed in buckskin, the coat trimmed with beads with a fringe of buckskin around the bottom, the same kind of fringe ornamenting the seams of his pants.

At another chief's we found the children playing out of doors (it was vacation time), and looking as well dressed as many white children [Praise be to God!] Although the children from this family came to school, the children were very heathenish in their views. We were shown a hat worn by women in their dances. It was as tall as a bearskin military cap and covered with feathers of all colors, some of great beauty. Around the bottom was a band of silver two inches wide, from which hung all kinds of gold and silver jewelry, earrings and finger rings. The chief had two wives, and in one room there was a sofa and upholstered chairs arranged after their own taste.

Another time Miss Morse and I were visiting the Hunneywell house. He was a white man with an Indian wife. As we rode up to the fence she came out on the porch, saying "Will you alight?" She then took away the rails to assist us over, the horses being left tied to the fence. The usual square room which we entered had been partitioned, so there was no bed in it. On the floor was a tidy rag carpet, and there was a nice spring-seated sofa and other comfortable furniture, all looking neat. Being near noon, Mrs. Hunneywell went about dinner, and laid the table, with white cloth and white ware of ponderous weight. From the kitchen savory odors stole in when ever the door opened, and in due tim e we were informed that dinner was ready and we were invited to be seated at the table, and as the men had not come in from the field, we obeyed the invitation to help ourselves. Our keen appetites, sharpened by our ride, were not necessary to tempt us to try the smoking ham and eggs, nice light biscuits, stewed beans, apple sauce, etc., with excellent coffee for drink.

In April, 1861, the war news became alarming and frightfully near, keeping us in constant excitement. The people in Missouri threatened to take Fort Leavenworth and tear up the St. Joseph & Hannibal railroad within ten days. The school was to commence after the spring vacation, and there was much apprehension, some thinking it better not to begin; but we did, and were not disturbed.

One day, when Mr. Pratt was in Leavenworth, a boat bearing a secession flag came p the river and stopped there. The people immediately stormed the boat, tearing down the flag and stripping it to bits, thus showing their sentiments. (8) Soon after that secessionists were ordered to leave the city forthwith. Anxiety was felt that the mails might br intercepted, and caution was given to our friends east not to write anything that might be turned to our injury should the letters fall into "secesh" hands.

In July, 1861, the commissioners from Washington boarded at the mission while they assigned to the [Delaware] Indians their several lots--eighty acres of land for every person, old or young. The rest of the reservation was sold to the Pacific Railroad. (9) The Indians were in quite an excited state, many preferred to move entirely. (10) There was some talk of the treaty being so changed as to allow those to go who wished, leaving their land in a body, to be sold or exchanged for land elsewhere; but it was not done, and from this all the rest, we took the children into the woods, taking along some bread and butter and supper in a bushel basket. time on the talk over the treaty and the war news kept us in a state of excitement.

On the Fourth of July, to make the day a little different from. The boys carried the drums (a present from Agent Johnson), the girls bore the flags, and, arriving at the creek, the girls and myself remained on one side while the boys and Miss Morse passed over. One boy threatened to go hunting birds; nests, but was taken prisoner and tied to a tree till he promised obedience. We ate our supper, drank from a steam, picked a few blackberries, sang songs, cheered, shouted, laughed, and marched home single file, forming quite aprocession, and cheering now and then. If making a great noise is patriotic and comprises a good time, surely the Delaware Indian children were both patriotic and happy on this their first picnic. The accidents and incidents were many, but not serious. A boy cheering threw his hat into a tree and had to pelt it down; Miss Morse slipped down, but was uninjured; Miss Vaughan, the seamstress, almost had a fall' a girl lost a shoe; while poor I almost my my throat sore trying at one time to keep the girls quiet and at another helping to make a noise.

In passing the schoolhouse one day a part of a company of cavalry from Quindaro drew up in front of the building, giving three cheers for the stars and stripes, which they carried; then three for the mission. Some of the men had worked on the reservation, and came in to say good-by to the children they knew. Then they passed on to the spring for water, and as they returned the children sang "The Sabbath School Army." The soldiers halted, and at the close of the song again gave us three cheers.

In September, 1861, Mr. Hunneywell, the white man who had the Indian wife, went into Missouri to see about some horses for Mr. Pratt. While talking with a man he was arrested on suspicion of treasonable views, but through the influence of a friend was released the next day. A reign of terror existed through the entire region' all ill-disposed persons took advantage of the disturbed times to plunder and commit whatever depredations their evil hearts suggested, either through malice or gain. The Quindaro ferry boat was sunk by Missourians, they said, to prevent slaves from escaping.

Parkville was raided, and what could not be taken away, belonging toi Union men, was destroyed. A family from Missouri passed the mission one day. They had gathered what they could of their possessions into a wagon and left their home, intending to return when peace was restored. They sold Mr. Pratt a cow to help them on their way. One of a company of soldiers who passed told the following: Four rebels rode up top a man working in a field and asked his views. On telling them he was for the Union they shot him. Going on to the house the murdered man's wife came to the door, and she, too, was shot, and for the same reason. The soldier who told this, coming along with some others, found the little daughter of these people crying. She told them what direction the men had taken, they pursued, overtook, and shot them; on the body of the man who had killed the father they found $25 which they gave to the girl.

The annual meeting of the Baptists was given up that fall (1861), as all the ministers had gone into the army as chaplains. In October Charles Journeycake was chosen chief, thus making two Christian chiefs, as his brother Isaac had been chief for some years. [?]

One chilly morning, about nine o'clock, eight men rode up and wished breakfast. They were on their way to Wyandotte and had taken bread and cheese to last them, but, stopping in a barn the night before, the pigs breakfasted on their lunch; so we gave them their breakfast. Mr. Pratt said that all the way he could help the cause, and he did it faithfully. But few days passed without some traveler, friend or otherwise, being entertained at the m mission.

One night I was wakened by loud knocks at the door. It being vacation and Miss Morse away, there was no one in the dormitory, but the seamstress and myself. Going to the window I could discern horsemen just outside the yard, seen dimly in the darkness. There appeared to be quite a company, but really only fifteen. They had been dismissed from Wyandotte just at night, and, wishing to get home, started out but lost their way on the prairie. They managed to get to the mission, where we sheltered them the rest of the night.

The second call for the Delawares in the army was to go as warriors. The first call for guides and spies had proved to be a failure, each Indian wanting to get the same pay as the captain. (11) The missions of the other tribes were badly broken up by the war. The Cherokee and some others joined the Southern Army.

In November, 1861, Mr. Pratt's son John, an un unusually bright youth of thirteen, passed away after a short but very distressing illness, which the doctors (Logan ((12)) and Sinks ((13)) pronounced the plague, a black spot on the ankle proving to be the plague spot. He was beloved by all and missed from every part of the mission.

Foy my "Merry Christmas" that December, one of the girls had winter fever and for New Year's another had fever. Miss Morse was confined to her bed; so her cares were added to mine, making the days more busy than festive, with, as Miss Morse said, a prospect of my long, long legs being diminished by wear--but better wear out than rust out. During that season we had our usual siege if colds and coughs, having several ailing at one time. One night, when Miss Morse was taking medicine herself, she had six little boys sleeping in her room, requiring attention during the night. About this time the agent, Mr. Johnson, allowed Mr. Pratt money for medicine and visiting the sick. Mr. Pratt had never had an allowance for that purpose before, although he had visited the Indians for miles about and many a doctor would have been glad of his practice if it had carried with it the usual fees of a physician.

About the middle of June 1862, Mr. Pratt returned from Washington, D.C., where he went with the chiefs to arrange about their land. They concluded to remain o their present reservation, and encourage schools and improvements. The government, on their part, Promised to restore them their stolen bonds, which was a large amount, and afterwards an academy was to be built, but nothing of this kind was ever done. ['What's new!]

In July the trouble increased around the mission, jayhawkers and more modern parties, called bushwhackers, were abundant. It was reported at one time that the famous Quantrill was killed, which, it was thought, might lessen the depredations, but the report was false. One night a negro man was stolen from Charles Journeycake's, where he was working, and taken off in the dark by a party of men, flourishing their pistols and threatening to blow out the brains of his protectors if they moved. [OK, what happened to him?] In November the bushwhacking business received a setback on account of the falling of the leaves, thus making the brush more open and hiding places less secure. In Missouri the disaffection toward Lincoln's proclamation (14) became very strong. The people said, they did not enter the army to fight for negroes, it was to protect the Union and not abolish slavery."

August 21, 1863, occurred the burning and sacking of Lawrence. The details are too horrible to be written at this late date, and they have already passed into history. The mission being on the opposite of the river from Lawrence. it was considered unlikely that the guerrillas would attempt to cross; but a few days after the burning of Lawrence some of the Indians became alarmed by seeing a fire, and a boy was sent to the mission for the children at school. He reported that 500 guerrillas had crossed the river (Kansas), and that night would burn the mission and everything on the way. All the children left in a hurry, save two who lived too far to get home that night. We were not alarmed, however, and slept as well as usual, and were not surprised to find later that the alarming fire was only burning brush.

The first week in October, 1863, I attended a teachers' association session in Leavenworth. It was the first one held in the young state, and during the session a state association was formed. (15) Later I attended the first cultural state fair. (16) One day there was an exhibition of fancy and domestic articles, a very good but not large exhibit; the fruit and vegetable display was very large.

It took but little to get up a scare, even at the mission. For instance. One morning the hired man was going to Leavenworth withy the team, and went earlier than usual--b fore daylight, in fact--to feed the horses. The opening of the stable door and the stamping of the horses roused the other men, and one of them, springing up suddenly, imagined he could see horses coming out of te stable, so he quickly gave the alarm that the horses were being stolen. Lucius started, pistol in hand, but when at the gate he heard the corn drop in the cribs and concluded how affairs were. A lady from Lawrence who was visiting at the mission said it seemed just like the raid on Lawrence. She started up and inquired if she would have time to dress; for in Lawrence she took her dress in hand, threw a bonnet over her nightcap, and left her wig and false teeth behind. I heard the noise from the dormitory, and thought surely some one was after the horses; the, recalling that John was going to town, concluded he was the cause of the racket, and turned over for another nap.

On the 27th of December, 1863, there was quite a fall of snow; a day or two afterward the wind blew, as it often did in Kansas, and the two united in forming a complete blockade on the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad. For sixteen days no mail from the east was received at Leavenworth. Travelers reaching St. Joe were obliged to turn back or remain there until the teams were fitted up to take them on their way. Freight trains which the couple wanted to attend, and the wedding had been put off once; it was to have been on New Year's blocked; in one a large number of hogs were frozen to death, Saturday, the 24th of January, 1864, Mr. Pratt was to ill to go to Leavenworth as usual. At noon a man came for him to go five miles, just off the reservation, to marry a couple of whites. Mr. Pratt said he was too ill to go--that he would come the next morning, but the man was imperative. There was to be a dance that evening which the couple wanted to attend, and the wedding had been put off once; it was to have been on New Year's, but the groom was from Chicago and could not get here on account of the blocked roads. Now that he had come, a minister must be found, and no there was handy. Mr. Pratt had compassion on them, and mounted his pony and rode a away to make the two happy.

Later in the winter, about eight o'clock one morning, and man and a woman rode up to the gate and sent in word by one of the children for Mr. Pratt to come out and marry them without their alighting. Mr. Pratt was not well, lying on a couch, and sent back that of they would dismount and come in he would marry them. They were white people and had ridden eight miles. From the man's boots his toes peeped out, and his elbows showed through holes in his coat sleeves. The woman was tidy in a homespun woolen dress, blue-checked apron and the usual "slat" sunbonnet, which she did not remove. This sort of bonnet was worn in the South and West, both indoors an d out. Mr. Pratt told them to stand together and take hold of hands, but had to mover them around into proper position and place the bride's right hand of the groom before he performed the ceremony which made them man and wife. The man asked, "What was to pay?" Mr. Pratt told him what he would have to pay to record the marriage, and taking it from his pocket, the groom gave the amount to Mr. Pratt, and the bridal party mounted their horses and departed.

In February, 1864, I left the mission, arriving at my home in Concord, Mass., on the 24th of the month. A day or two before left Kansas the weather was very mild; so much that a snake ventured out of his winter retreat and the boys captured him. But one of those sudden changes, which the West is noted for, came; the wind blew cold and froze up things generally. It was very cold when I left the mission, but I was well clothed and had a hot brick for my feet. When we reached Leavenworth, fifteen miles away, the brick was cold and I was chilled through. The boats from Kansas City had been running a week or more, but we found the river so full of broken ice that the boat would mot make the trip up [actually, downriver] that day, so I was compelled to wait over until the next. When we finally arrived on the wrest bank of the Mississippi we found that river partially open, and we were landed from our boat on solid ice in mid river, being cautioned not to walk ashore in a body. However, we saw a large wagon drawn by two horses coming out over the ice from the land to the boat, so we thought that people could not be in danger.

This ended my Kansas experience, as I never returned to the Delaware mission.

(1) Miss Clara Gowing was born at Charlestown, Mass, May 22, 1832 and was the daughter of Jahez Gowing and Hitty Eames Gowing. She received her education in Concord, Mass., developing into a young woman of earnest mind. That she was considered an acquisition in the mission field is shown by the following letter written by J. G. Warren, October 3, 1859, to Rev. Pratt: "We have succeeded in securing Miss Clara Gowing for the Delaware school. She is a person of firm constitution, good mind, mature age, and earnestly devoted to the service of Christ. The committee appointed her last week at the usual salary with $50 for expenses of travel. . . . I think sister Gowing will prove the very person you need. " Miss Gowing has been president of the W.C.T.U. [Women's Christian Temperance Union] at Reading, Mass, where she now lives, for ten years. She taught three years in the colored schools of Lynchburg and Alexandria, Va., and Nashville, Tenn., also in the State Primary School of Massachusetts. She has been matron in the Old Ladies Home at Lowell, Mass. Both her grandfathers served in the Revolutionary War, and both were at the battle in Concord, Mass., April 19, 1776. They were farmers and lived and died in Wilmington, Mass.

(2) Miss Elizabeth S. Morse was first a teacher among the Cherokee Indians, having been sent out from Boston in 1842 by the American Baptist Missionary Union. Upon her arrival in the Cherokee Nation she found there was no building suitable for school purposes, so not willing to be idle, she opened a day school. She boarded in an Indian family, eating at the table with them, and her room was so open that snow and rain came through, falling upon the bed in which she slept. She lived in this way for a year, when she had a cabin built in which she set up housekeeping. The only means of lighting and ventilation was by the door, there being no windows. The chimney was built of logs, with stones laid upon the bottom instead of jambs, so it was unsafe to have any but a very small fire. At first there was no floor in her cabin, but later one of puncheons was made. Miss Morse stayed with the Cherokees several years, but as the building for the school seemed as far off as ever, owing to a difference of opinion as to where it should be built, she left the tribe and went to the Delawares about 1848. She remained at the Delaware Baptist Mission until the removal of those Indians in the Indian Territory, in 1867. Miss Morse then went to live with friends. She died in Kansas in 1899, at the advanced age of 85.

(3) "The Delaware Mission School was started in 1837 by Ira D. Blanchard and was situated where the where the Edwardsville station now is, at the Grinter crossing of the Kaw river. The military road from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Scott crossed the river there. In 1844 the overflow of the river caused by the great flood broke up the school for a time. The Indians moved away from the Kaw bottom lands. In n1848 I moved the building of the mission school up to where I now live. It was a log building. I moved the logs and got the building up in the same form as it stood at the river. It stands now where I then placed it. It forms the middle portion of my house and is clapboard over the logs like the other portion of the frame building." Rev. John G. Pratt, in an interview, July 10, 1895.

(4) John Gill Pratt was born in Hingham, Mass., September 19, 1814, and died at his home near Piper, Wyandotte county, Kansas, April 23, 1900. Mr. Pratt was educated in the academy at Wakefield, Mass., and at Andover Seminary, graduating in 1836. At Andover he was licensed to preach, and immediately employed by the Baptist Missionary Society for work in the Indian Territory. March 29, 1837, he married Olivia Evans, and two weeks later they left Boston on their journey west, where they were to labor among the Shawnee Indians at the Shawnee Baptist Mission, in Johnson county [present Kansas] . They arrive there May 14, 1837. Mr. Pratt had learned the art of printing at the University Press, Cambridge, Mass. and on his arrival at the Shawnee Mission took charge of the printing office, the Rev. Jotham Meeker then being engaged in establishing the mission among the Ottawas on the Marais des Cygnes. Art this printing office were printed, for the use of the Indians, primary text books, translations from the Gospels, hymns and other books, in the Delaware, Shawnee, Iowa, Ottawa and other Indian tongues/ A newspaper, the Shawnee Sun, was published here from 1836 to1842. Mr. Pratt was associated with the Stockbridge Indians for a time, going to them in 1844 and having charge of the mission situated near where the National Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth now stands. In 1849 he took charge of the Delaware Baptist Mission. It was at this mission that Mr. Pratt was ordained to the ministry, November 19, 1843. In 1864 Mr. Pratt succeeded Maj. F. Johnson as the United States Indian agent to the Delawares, serving the tribe in that capacity until they moved to the Indian Territory.

Mrs. Pratt shared the hardships and privations of her husband's lot. She instructed the Indian girls in the rudiments of domestic economy, and had always the burden of a large household on her shoulders. In the early days at the mission she did all the cooking and sewing herself. She was often obliged to sew until late into the night, for the Indian children had no other clothing than the garments in which they came to the school, and these were always laid aside and the mission clothes worn while the child remained there. Mrs. Pratt was a woman of very prepossessing appearance--a round face with black, sparkling eyes, a clear complexion and black hair worn in ringlets. Her keen sense of humor did her good service in her wild, rough home , and helped her through situations which would have dismayed a less wholesome woman. The cabin to which she was brought as a bride consisted of four walls and a roof, all of logs, and built as children build corn-cob houses, with projecting ends. The "chinking" was done with sod and mud, and the chimney was built of the same material. There were no windows, only holes cut in the log walls. The floor was of rough lumber, and it is said that Mrs. Pratt became accustomed to removing splinters from her own hands as she washed up the floors, but later on it was harder to take them from the tiny hands of her babies as they crept about the room.. Often in cold weather four or five Indians would gather around her fireplace before she was dressed in the morning. In such weather her feet would freeze as she worked about the room, and coffee left in the cups on the table would freeze while she was clearing away the food; and that, too, with the table standing on the hearth. Mrs. Pratt had seven children, and she had no medical attention at such times except such as Mr. Pratt could give her, with no nurse but an Indian woman. At one time her Indian nurse could neither speak nor understand a word of English, and Mr. Pratt's range of the Indian language was inadequate to the occasion; so an Indian man who could understand some English was stationed on the doorstep and interpreted Mr. Pratt's directions to the "nurse." Of the many discomforts and loneliness which Mrs. Pratt endured she once said, "The sacrifices and inconveniences were forgotten by us when we considered the great object for which we lived and labored--the conversions of the Indians and their advancement to civilization." Mrs. Pratt was born in 1814, being one month her husband's senior, and survived him a little time.

(5) The name is often seen "Johnnycake," but the form in the text is the correct one, and was so signed by Charles Journeycake in the articles of agreement and convention between the United States and the Delaware tribe of Indians, drawn May 6, 1854. The name "Journeycake" is said to come from a kind of bread used by the Indians in a journey. The Yankees easily changed this to their favorite breakfast cake, viz., "Johnnycake." Mss. of Miss Gowing.

(6) "I believe it will not be disputed that the Indian women love their children with as much affection as parents in the most civilized states can boast. Many proofs might be adduced to support this assertion. . . From their infant state they endeavor to promote an independent spirit. They are never known either to beat or scold them, lest the martial disposition which is to adorn their future life and character should be weakened. On all occasions they avoid everything compulsive, that the freedom with which they wish to think and act may not be controlled. If they die they lament their death with unfeigned tears, and even for months after their deceases will weep at the graves of their departed children.""--Thwaite's Early Western Travels, vol. 2, pp. 96-97.

(7) The Delawares "number at pre3sent 1034, and their personal property averages about $1000 to each individual." Report Commissioner Indian Affairs, 1861, p. 11. The Osage Indians are known as the richest communal people in the world, their per capita wealth being in excess, of $20,000. In 1906 this tribe possessed funds in the United States treasury to the amount of $8,562,690, besides which they had 1,470,058 acres of valuable land.

(8) "April, 1861. The steamer Sam Gaty, at Leavenworth, hoisted a rebel flag, and was compelled to lower it and raise the stars and stripes."-Paxton's Annals of Platte City, Missouri, p. 308. See also, Kansas Historical Collections, vol. 9, p. 310.

(9) "On May 30, 1860 by treaty with the Delawares, eighty acres were assigned to each member of the tribe, in one compact body, to be held in severalty, the Leavenworth, Pawnee & Western Railroad Company (afterward the Union Pacific) to have the privilege of purchasing the remainder of their land, at no less than $1.25 per acre, The treaty was made at Sarcoxieville on the Delaware Reservation." Cutler's History of Kansas, p. 69. See also, Indian Affairs, Laws and Treaties, vol. 2, p. 803.

(10) "When this treaty was made they desired very much to sell all their country within the limits of Kansas and go down among the Indians south of Kansas. [This is not true. Editor] This was because they had suffered so much from the evil and wicked acts of the whites that surround them"--Thomas B. Sykes, U. S. Indian Agent, Report Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1860, p. 103.

(11) Adj. Gen. C. E. Holliday made the following statement in regard to Kansas troops to Governor Crawford, January 17, 1865: "A number of Indians were regularly recruited in the white regiments. These were our home, there are three regiments of Indians in service, officered originally almost exclusively by citizens from Kansas."--Wilder's Annals, 1862, p. 99.

(12) and (13) Are not included because they add little about the life of the Delaware.(14) Preliminary proclamation of emancipation issued September 22, 1862.

(15) The Kansas Educational Journal, vol. 1, p. 2, contains an interesting account of the meeting of this first teachers' association.

(16) The earliest state fairs were held under the direction of the State Agricultural Society in various towns over the state, the first one being at Leavenworth, October 4 to 5, 1863.

CORRESPONDENCE REGARDING THE MURDER OF DELAWARE BY MIAMI

[Although this account is about another reserve in Ohio, I have included the complete text of the following correspondence in order to show the style of negotiations used by the Lenape-Delaware with other Native Americans at that time, that is, a low-key approach with the ultimate action only resorted to toward the end of negotiations. Editor.]

PIERRE MENARD TO TIPTON, April 22, 1825 [ISL: Tipton Papers--ALS]

KASKASKIA, April 22d, 1825

JOHN TIPTON, Esq, Fort Wayne

DEAR SIR On my arrival from Washington I found a letter from the Delaware Chiefs directed to you, and one from the same Chiefs to myself-- The one directed to you is, I find, intended for the Miamies--I feel some what uneasy about those Indians and desire most sincerely that affair to be settled as speedily as possible-- The Delawares are very much exasperated, and unless there is a very large quantity of wampum sent, or more specie than the amount you mention to me in your letter of 22d November last, I am afraid the Delawares will not be satisfied: But let them come on with what they intend to give to repair the wrong, and I will endeavor my best to have the affair amicably settled__ There should be nothing kissing of the property of the woman, or if any is missing, the value of it ought to be replaced in some other things--I have the honor to be very respectfully Your Obt Servt

PIERRE MENARD
P.S. ...Inclosed I forward you the letter of the Delaware Chiefs hereabove alluded to--PIERRE MENARD

RICHARD GRAHAM TO TIPTON, June 11, 1825 [ISL: Tipton Papers--ALBS] St Louis 11 June 1825
SIR: William Anderson chief of the Delaware Nation of Indians & his Counsellers have requested me to make a demand through you on the Miami Indians for compensation for the murder of six Delawars which they have committed--
He requests that the Miamis may be informed that he has made peace with the Osages & that Wampum from his Nation has passed to all the neighboring nations of Indians--& that his Grand children the Miamis are the only Nation with who he has not settled all his differences his wishes them to listen to his demand & pay it without any further trouble.--it has been a long time since they killed the first Delaware it is time his bones should be covered--if they had been made to cover them at first, probably he would not now be asking him to cover4 the bones of others--He wished to live in peace & friendship with all his Grand children; his counsellers have decided this shall be the last time they will ask to have the bones of their brothers covered--if the Miamis refuse to cover them, they will refer it to the war chiefs the demand they make is Five Hundred dollars e[ac]h for the following persons which they allege have been killed by the Miamis
Wash um 16 or 17 years ago on White River near Andersons House
Lanaquis--Killed on his route from Detroit to Piqua, when called by Mr. Johnson Ind Agt. during the war--he was killed 5 or 6 miles above Fort Wayne for his Gun--
Two Indians Pashquino & a young Indian comeing from Detroit with goods, near the Miami Village in 1813 or 1814--(these he says the Miamis deny) [p. 470]
Pashena a woman married to a Miami killed at a Miami Town last winter the daughter of Lahipinilie a correspondence on the murder of this woman has been carried on between Col. Menard & yourself--

If Sir you will have the goodness to mention to the Miamis the above outlines of a talk of Anderson & obtain from their a favourable answer you will probably be the means not only of saving bloodshed, but probably of preserving the small remnants of the Mia Nation--the Delawares seem to be determined on the course they will pursue If they consent to pay what is demanded, information to that effect can be made known to the War Dept. with a request that so much of their annuity (the Miamis) as amounts to the demand of the Delaware, may be forwarded to Govr. Clark superintendent at St. Louis--
With Sentiments of respect & Esteem I am Dr Sir Yr Obt Sevt R. GRAHAM U.S. Indn. Agt
After talks with the Miamis you will have the goodness to inform me of their determination (Ibid., pp. 469-470)

RICHARD GRAHAM TO TIPTON, September 1, 1825 [ISL: Tipton Papers--

ALS] ST. LOUIS 1st Sept[r] 1825
DEAR SIR Your favor of the 31[st] July has been duly received, with the request of the Miamis in council; to their Great Father the president of the United States, to pay to the Delaware 500$--I have not Yet laid this paper, before the Delawares [p. 486], & before I do so, in order to save time, I beg leave to observe that the request from the Miamis to the president, by no means, embrace the amount claimed by the Delawares; by reference to my letter of June 11[th] you will there find the demand made, is 500$ for each of the following persons. whose bones are yet uncov[er]ed, & who, they alledge have been killed by the Miamis.
Washum--16 or 17 Years, killed by a Miami on White River near Andersons
La-na-quis on his route from Detroit to Piqua, when called by Johnson, during the war, he was killed by a Miami for his gun. 5 miles above Fort Wayne.
Pachaquini & another Indian, coming from Detroit, with goods, stopped at the Miami Village & after leaving the same encamped, near it & was killed; this occurrence took place in the Year 1814 or 15.
Pachena. (a woman) married to a Miami. Killed last winter at the Miami Town.
Lapahenile's daughter.
For each of the above Indians five hundred dollars is demanded by the Delawares, which amounts to three thousand Dollars
You will therefore, have the goodness to explain this Again to the Miamis & let me know the result of Your conference with them. Andersen, is determined (I believe) not to take less than the amount above stated for each of the above persons killed--he is satisfied they were Killed by the Miamis.--If however any satisfactory evidence can be adduced to him that all of the above persons were not killed by Miamis, he will withdraw the Charge, he has made for such person, and make his demand of 500$ for each person they have killed.
Respectfully Yr Ob[t] Serv[t] R GRAHAM Ag[t] Of Ind Affairs JOHN TIPTON Esq[r] Ind Ag[t] Fort Wayne (Ibid. pp. 485-486)

RICHARD GRAHAM TO TIPTON, October 3, 1825 [ISL: Tipton Papers--ALS] At Louis Oct 3, 1825

WILLIAM ANDERSON TO MIAMI INDIANS: ADDRESS, February 28, 1827 [ISL; Tipton Papers--DS]

William Anderson the principal Chief of the Dellawares Speach to the Miamies

My Grand Children the Miamies. I want you to listen to me well what I am going to say to you--You Miamies twice I have spoken to you about the injury you have done to my people, and it appears that you have stopt your ears and are determined not to hear what I say to you. I am now going to speak to you for the last time You Miamies you no that you killed one of our chiefs daughters and took from her two good horses besides a great deal of other property, and you promised to pay for it a long time ago which you have not done I now ask you again. You must pay it to our friend Co$^{l.}$ Menard who will send it to us.

You Miamis you no that you killed six more of our people and you have not covered the dead I spoke to you last year and told you that you must pay us five hundred dollars for each one that you killed. I now speak top you again and tell you that I throw away two. We now demand of you for the fore Delawares you killed five hundred dollars each, you no that these people you killed have relations liveing here amongst us. I have kept these people for two or three years and still hold them

You Miamies we will now give you fore months more and see what you will doe. if you pay us in that time you will then make our hearts glad We will then hold you faste4r by the hand than ever If you doe not settle in that time I shall then let my people goe and they must doe as they please WILLIAM ANDERSON his a mark

August 6th [1827, the War chiefs, peace chiefs, the wise old men, and the young warriors, of the Miami nation, appeared in the Council House.--Their numbers were unusual, and their silence unexpected. Amidst this calm, Joseph Richardville, (as the organ of the Miamies, in the absence of his sick father the principal Chief), rose and delivered the following answer to the foregoing speech [that is, the demands of the Delaware of 28 February 1827]:

My Grand Father: Your Miami children have listened to what you have said. Their ears are never stopped when you speak to them.

Grand Father: You must recollect when you passed over the great mountains, and come to our country under our protection; we gave you lands, and at the treaty of St. Mary's you sat in council with us. There we consented to let you sell the land and keep the money for it.--This we considered enough to satisfy you for all the injury our bad young men had done you; but it appears otherwise, for you continue to beg for more notwithstanding all that has been told you by our old Chief who now lies sick in the wigwam. His words I now speak to you.

Grand Father: The Miamies have already done much favor for your people; but they will extend their bounty. They have instructed their agent, General Tipton, to send to Mr. Menard, five hundred dollars for the use of the Delawares, which sum is to be taken out of our present year's annuity. This is all we will give you, and it will be useless to ask for more hereafter. If you accept this, it will be well, and we will then take you by the hand and live with you in harmony, as we have done ever since you crossed the great mountains.

But, Grand Father, if you will not accept of this money, let us know soon, so that we may be prepared to meet your people, who you tell us, "may do as they please."

Done in Council, at the Treaty Ground, I[ndian]a. August 6th, 1827. In presence of JAMES FOSTER, JOSEPH BARRON, Interpreter

Previous to signing the above, young Richardville, called on all the Chiefs, the wise old men, and the warriors, to ascertain whether any objection existed to his signature being placed to the speech, as the organ of his father the principal Chief, who he represented as being to unwell in his wigwam to act efficiently in council. With a unanimity seldom witnessed, on such occasions, the wide old men told him to advance and write his name he done so; and accompanied the last twirl` of his pen with something like a war-whoop. The young warriors and their Chiefs. then pledged to support him under every exigency. (Ibid., pp. 764-765)

PIERRE MENARD TO TIPTON, April 29, 1828 [ISL: Tipton Papers--LS]
KASKASKIA April 29th 1828
GEN^{L} JOHN TIPTON U.S. Indian Agent Fort Wayne
DEAR SIR The only apology I can offer for not answering your favour of the 8th december last before this, is that I wanted to speak to the Delawares on the subject of your wishes, myself--I arrived at their village on James Fork of White River [Indiana] on the 13th of February and remained there until the 17th of March, and have just returned from my tour--when I arrived I found only the Principal Chief Anderson and Old Captain Beaver, the others were all absent--They immediately dispatchd runners to call in the war Chiefs & Braves, who came in the course of seven days, especially the relations of Lapanchili's daughter--On the 26th of February I called them in Council and when all assembled, I began to explain to them the bad consequences that would result in sheding the Blood of their Grandchildren [the Miamies], with whom they had been for a long time friendly, and allied by intermarriages, and besides they would incur the displeasure of the Government--I observed to them, , that their grand Children the Miamies had at once acceded to their demand, by requesting the President of the United States to pay their grand fathers the delawares, Five hundred dollars, and to interchange wampum in order to render their long e Friendship firmer than ever--That this offer of the Miamies, and their request to the President to renew their ancient friendship, shewed certainly their good intention and sincere disposition--To this they remarked, that their demand was $2500. and that their grand Children offered only $500.--Here your letter had a Powerful effect--I opened it, and red to them that part, which says, that Major Graham's first letter demanded only $500, and I convinced them, that the Miamis were right in supposing that some white persons was meddling with this business--They replied that no (white) person had ever spoken to or advised them, but that their agent had made the mistake in the first letter. and therefore would not blame their grand children for supposing that some white person was medling with this Business.--That solely in consequence of this mistake of their agent they authorised me to settle the affair, and to accept the $500--They do however not consider that their acceptance of this sum, embraces any part of the offer contained in your letter to me under date of 22^{d} November 1824 for the murder of Lapanchilis Daughter--They also say, that they have heard, that their grand Children have killed since 1825, in one of their drunken frolics another Delaware woman--If this report should be true they hope that the Miamies will settle it as they formerly did amongst themselves--

By the foregoing you will perceive Sir, that I am now authorised by the Delawares to settle this business and receive the Amount--I asked the principal Chief if he would send a talk to his Grand Children. He answered no. But when the miamies will have settled this business, they will send me one, and I shall then return them mine, and this will be a renewal of our long and ancient friendship. Should the Miamies agree to give up the property of Lapanilies Daughter and the other articles mentioned in Your letter of 22d November 1824 I will receive them, or the just value you may sett on them Yourself--I have done my part agreably to your wished, and hope you will do the balance you may direct the US. Branch Bank at Cincinnati, to pay to my order the $500. and also the amount of the property of the woman, if they should prefer to pay it in the same way. I will draw for nit as soon as I am notified by yourself and when received I will forward you my receipt in form in behalf of the Delawares for the same received.

Accept sir the assurance of my Best wishes and believe me respectfully your Obedient servant. PIERRE MENARD (Indiana Historical Collections, vol. 25, "The John Tipton Papers," vol. 2 (1828-1833), pp. 40-41)

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE LENAPE-DELAWARE AND AFRICAN-AMERICANS

For the time being, this page will be a miscellaneous collection of items regarding the attitudes of Lenape-Delaware toward slaves and slavery in particular and to African-Americans in general. Unlike Native Americans, the Lenape-Delaware did not intermarry to a large degree with African-Americans as many other individuals did. There will be no goal or direction to this page until a certain amount of data has been collected. In may never develop into a given thesis, may just remain an assortment of facts and fiction. It is an important subject and needs to be addressed. Please advise the editor if you have come across any information in his subject that you would like to share. "CAUTION OF DELAWARE TO MISSIONARIES PENDING TREATMENT OF AFRICAN AMERICANS"

This article tells what two European missionaries reported regarding their attempt to convert them to Christianity:

They rejoiced exceedingly at our happiness in thus being favored by the Great Spirit, and they felt very grateful that we had condescended to remember our brethren in the wilderness. But they could not help recollecting that we had a people among us, who, because they differed from us in color, we had made slaves of, and made them suffer great hardships, and lead miserable lives. Now they could not see any reason, if a people being black entitled us then to deal with them, why a red color should not equally qualify the same treatment. They therefore had determined to wait, to see whether all the black people amongst us were made thus happy and joyful before they would put confidence in our promises; for they thought a people who had suffered so much and so long by our means, should be entitled to our first consideration; and therefore they had sent back the two missionaries, with many thanks, promising that when they saw the black people among us restored to freedom and happiness they would gladly receive our missionaries.

"Delaware Protective of Black Fugitives"

So many slaves fled to the Six Nations of the Iroquois Confederacy, that, in 1726,a governor of New York made the leading chiefs promise to return all fugitives in their villages. They gave their word. In 1764 Huron's also promised. The next year Delawares promised. None ever returned a single slave. Katz, Black Indians, p. 111)

ISAAC MC COY JOURNAL

In the interest of conserving space, I have taken the liberty of combining individual sentences and brief paragraphs into one continuous entry under each daily entry. Work continues on this page. Editor

Journal of Isaac McCoy
for the Exploring Expedition of 1828

Isaac McCoy, edited by Lela Barnes. November 1936 (vol. 5, no. 4, pages 339 to 377. Transcribed by lhn; additional HTML by Susan Stafford; digitized with permission of the Kansas State Historical Society.

I. INTRODUCTION

FOR several months previous to his tour of 1828 into what is now Kansas, Isaac McCoy had been preparing to leave the Baptist missionary station at Carey, Michigan, [1] which he had founded in 1822, and remove to a western field. McCoy had worked indefatigably for the betterment of conditions for the Indian, and his insistence upon the removal of the tribes from the influences of the whites had been a factor in the development of the Indian removal policy of the government. By 1828 this national policy was taking form and McCoy looked to the West as a field for greater service. He had not, however, been able to interest the Baptist mission board in establishing stations in the western territory, the attention of that body being given chiefly to missions in foreign lands. "We did not believe," wrote McCoy, "that they [the board] would grant us permission at that time, to go west, and we therefore did not ask it; for it would have been more painful to go contrary to direct orders, than to go without orders." [2] He resolved that no work should be undertaken at the cost of the board, but that he would follow the course that lay clear before him-the dedication of his remaining years to the assistance of the tribes in the western territory.

1829 found the McCoy family established at Fayette, Mo. From that point McCoy made a short tour into the country beyond the Missouri in the early autumn for the purpose of securing additional information about the lands. He spent the months from November, 1829, until June, 1830, in Washington, Boston, and other Eastern cities, working for the bill which would legalize the removal of the Indians to the country west of the Mississippi. The bill was approved May 28, 1830.

The apportionment of territory to the tribes was the next step in the removal program and McCoy was commissioned to survey lands which had been assigned by treaty to the Delawares. His appointment and instructions were received in a letter from Thomas L. McKenney, superintendent of Indian affairs:

War Department
Office Indian Affairs, June 3, 1830.

Dear Sir: The conditional ratification of a supplementary treaty with the Delaware Indians, by the United States' Senate, requires that certain surveys shall be made. The conditions are stated in the accompanying copy of a resolution of the Senate, and the lines to be run are defined in the first paragraph of the treaty aforesaid, [3] and illustrated by a sketch which accompanies this No. 1.

The Secretary of War, by the authority of the President of the United States, refers the execution of this trust to you. No detailed instructions are necessary, since these are ample in the treaty and the resolution of the Senate which accompanies it. You will be governed by these; and in every particular. To aid you with a better view of the country, contiguous to that which is to be surveyed and marked by you, I enclose a copy (No. 2) of Mr. Langham's survey of the Kansas reservation. [4]

I am directed by the Secretary of War to say, that your compensation will be at the rate of five dollars a day, for the time that you may be actually engaged in the execution of this trust; that you will be aided by an assistant surveyor, to be chosen by yourself, whose compensation will be at the rate of three dollars a day, whilst actually engaged; and by a corporal's guard, which will be detailed to report to you from Cantonment Leavenworth. This guard will perform the duties of axemen, & c., and marking of the lines, and in aiding in the transportation of your supplies, & c., from place to place.

You will obtain of the Delawares a designation of their agent, for which the resolution of the Senate provides, whose support will be allowed him, or a daily compensation equivalent to it.

You will be careful, in all things, to conform to the provisions of the resolution of the Senate, in obtaining the certificate of the agent who may be appointed by the Delawares, and in transmitting the map of the surveys, & c., to the President of the United States, for his approval and signature, &c. You will be particular in making up your accounts, and these will embrace your own pay, at the rate mentioned, and your assistant, and the number of days the guard may be with you; as to each man, an extra allowance over the pay in the army will be made, at the rate of fifteen cents a day. The voucher will be your. own certificate that the whole is correct as stated. You will engage in fulfilling this trust with as little delay as possible.

341 BARNES: EXPLORING EXPEDITION OF 1830

That part of McCoy's journal here published covers his tour to establish the Delaware boundaries. The first survey was that of the western line beginning three and one-half miles west of the center of present Topeka where the eastern boundary line of the reservation of the Kansas Indians crossed the Kansas river; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of Section 3, Township 6, Range 15 in present Jackson county. A random line was then run southeast to the Missouri river at Cantonment Leavenworth and the military reservation boundaries established. The party returned to the northwest corner of the Delaware reservation and proceeded to establish the boundaries of the outlet, a strip ten miles wide extending 150 miles westward from the western boundary line.

Isaac McCoy's journal and other manuscripts cited are in the possession of the Kansas State Historical Society.

II. ENTRIES FROM THE JOURNAL

Memorandum-I actually commenced making preparations for surveying expedition July 19- Dr. McCoy [6] started to Fort Leavenworth, [7] and Delaware agency July 26.- He returned August, 7th. On his return I ascertained that the decision of the commanding officer at the Fort was such that I must purchase and equip at least five more horses.

1830, Monday, at 1/2 past 11, o'clock Aug. 16 I started on my surveying expedition attended by my son Rice as asst. Surveyor, son Calvin as baggage master Two white-men as chain-carriers, and black man as cook, &c. and a man to help us with the pack horses as far as Can. Leavenworth. We have 14 horses, We are packed with flour, bacon, and all our out-fit. My wife and child accompanied me six miles, where I took my leave of them. We rode 13 miles, was able to get corn for our horses but -no accomodations for ourselves, therefore slept without a house, and cooked our own suppers.

Tuesday Aug 17. Crossed Missouri river near Chariton Villages [8] - rested at Smiths, and put up for the night at Mrs. McCafferty's --where I make these Notes.

Wednesday Aug. 18. Breakfasted & fed at Davis's and stopped for the night at Estes's

Thursday Aug. 19. Nooned at Jennings, & nighted at C. Ewing['s].

Friday Aug. 20. Nooned at Rennick's, & nighted at Russel's

Saturday Aug. 21. Nooned at Flournoys, Independence. Here I saw M. G. Clark the Sub. agent for the Kanzas, took a letter from him to aid me in assuring the Kanzas that I am not about to disturb them in their lands, nor to intercept any promise which the U. S. had made to them; &c. I purchased a few additional articles of out-fit here, as I had done at Lexington. Received a letter from Genl. Clark, [9] of St. Louis, and a Flag which I had requested him to send me for my use on the expedition. In the evening reached the Shawanoe & Delaware agency, at the house of Maj. J. Campbell the Sub. Agt. by whom we were kindly received. [10] Our tents were pitched for the company, while I accepted an invitation to take quarters with Maj. Campbell. Cobern, the Shawanoe express sent to the Delawares to bring on their Commissioner to see their lands marked off, has not yet returned- Is expected soon. [11]

Sunday Aug. 22. Our Sister Wiskehelaehqua, alias Mrs. Shane, I am happy to hear conducts like a Christian. She expresses a great desire that a mission should be established, here among the Shawanoes, at which she could attend and enjoy religious privileges. She expresses great solicitude for the welfare, especially the Spiritual welfare of her people.

Monday August 23. Major John Campbell, the Sub., but now, acting agent for the Shawanoes & Delawares, &c., has requested me, since my arrival, to endeavour to establish a School among the Shawanoes. Shane the Interpreter, who is a half-Indian, united in the request. The Methodists have been talking of forming an establishment among them, but their project seems not likely to succeed. They have done nothing yet.

Today more than twenty Shawanoes assembled in obedience to a call of Major Campbell, to whom I made a pretty lengthy address on the subject of a mission being established among them. My remarks were seconded by remarks from Maj. Campbell, and some from Shane. The celebrated Shawanoe prophet, who was so often heard of in the last war, and was brother to Tecumseh, replied briefly to me, approbating my doctrine. [12]

An answer in form from the tribe is deferred, until I return from my tour in the wilderness. After the council was dissolved, I had an interview with Fish, alone, He is the Chief of a band of them, He assured me that he and his party were in favour of having a mission established among them. They had been desiring it for some time. They would not have come to this place had they not hoped that this would be done for them. He said he had often expressed his opinion to Shane, He was of the same opinion still. He thought that if a School, &c. was once begun those who are now indifferent to the subject would be induced to follow the example of others who are now ready to adopt those measures, and when they would see others sending their children to school, &c. they would be induced to do the same, &c. &c.

I assured him that at his request a mission should be given them, and that I would enter immediately upon the work of bringing it about. Another man of influence said to me alone that he greatly desired a school that he might send his children, and that his brother might be allowed to send his. Another man, one of Fish's party was pointed out to me, who said that if a school could not be established here he would have to send his daughters into the settlements of the whites, which would occasion an expense which he could not well bear.

Cobern the express sent to the Delawares returned today, and with him the agent of their choice. He is an old man named Johnny Quick is second Chief in the tribe. The interpreter Co [nn] or is bearing the message of the Delaware council- he has not yet arrived.

344 THE KANSAS HISTORICAL QUARTERLY

Tuesday Aug. 24 I made a formal application thro. Mr. Campbell, for permission from government to establish a mission here. I also communicated this and the circumstance of the case generally to the Board thro. Mr. Cone. [13] These letters are on file, and may be considered as belonging to the mission Journals. In the afternoon of this day, J. Connor the Delaware interpreter arrived with the written communications of the Chiefs. The substance of which was that they had been in council on the subject of our surveying. Had chosen and sent as their agt. to see the land marked off-John Quick an aged and respectable Chief- They wished to remove on their lands in the course of two months. While we would be surveying their land, they requested that Maj. Campbell their Agent should be purchasing horses, and wagons, &c. to transport them to their new country before cold weather. They required that the nature of the whole subject be again explained to their Commissioner, and in event of his being satisfied, he was to proceed. This was done to his satisfaction, and he cheerfully agreed to proceed. But stated that neither the nation nor he wished for him to go farther than to see the bounds of their tract generally marked that they cared not to see their out-let marked. They would be content without it. It would save the agent, who is old, from much fatigue, and would allow him to return in time to aid in removal to their new country.

Wednesday Aug. 25. It was not until the evening of this day that Maj. Campbell could procure a horse for John Quick to ride.

Thursday Aug. 26. We have been detained here until this time waiting for the Delaware Commissioner to prepare. This done we proceeded. As we passed the Shawanoe village we found 35 Kanzas there, assembled to have a talk with the Shawanoes. They said that the Shawanoes had been living two years in the country, that a general talk between them had been expected, and they had now called for that purpose. The Shawanoes invited me to attend their council, as one, as they said, who took a deep interest in Indian affairs, with which I had made myself acquainted, &c. This was a high compliment, of which I cheerfully accepted. I proceeded to the river five miles, directed the company how to encamp, and returned with my son Rice. By this time it was late in the day & their interpreter having not yet arrived, we returned to camp with the understanding that we should meet them on the following day. It was dusk when we reached camp and I was really fatigued & hungry. Maj. Campbell, & Mr. Shane and his son are with us accompanying us to the Garrison. We expected to have to raise a boat that was sunk in the Kanza river here, to enable us to cross, and to this end the Shawanoes to a considerable number, had been invited to help. On arriving here the Indians pronounced the boat unfit for use.

I had bought of an Indian a small beef for their use when helping us, and for our company. We now gave half of it to the Kanzas. Soon after I had passed them with our packs today, old Plume, [14] sent two persons in great haste after us. We saw them coming running, and halted to hear what news when we were informed that Plume had sent to get some of - our Bacon. Having no disposition to unpack there, and as little disposition to give away our bacon, we went on.

Friday Aug. 27. I left Rice to take on the company, and took Calvin and Mr. Shane, and returned to the Shawanoe village. It was indispensable for me to see the Kanzas to explain to them the nature of our expedition before we commenced surveying. It is favourable that I can see them here and will save us several days hereafter. I addressed 35 Kanzas, seated on one side of the Council-house and some Shawanoes on the other. A fire in the centre, near which I placed a few twists of tobacco for them all to smoke. I spread out the map before the Kanzas and explained to them what we were about to do, the wishes of the government in relation to settling the Indians in this country, and enjoined on them to be at peace among themselves. The Kanzas said they had not yet ceded away that country. Why should the U. S. give it to the Delawares without first consulting them. I told them that they had ceded it five years ago-that I was not at the treaty, but so said the paper, to which they had signed their names. [15] They knowing this to be true said no more, especially as I had told old Plume that he understood it all, for he had last year showed me where their line crossed the Kanza river.

Having gone thro. with my talk with the Kanzas, I was anxious to follow after our company. But the Kanzas asking me to stay and hear what should pass between them and the Shawanoes, I consented to stay. The speeches of each are on separate sheets from this and may be considered as a part of this Journal. [16] The packhorses had with difficulty, and some miring in the river, and some wetting of packs, got over. The river is sandy and miry with quicksands. It is muddy so that the bottom cannot be perceived. Neither of us knew the ford- Shane got thro by wading very deep. Calvin and I took a little to one side of his place, found it more shallow. Calvin went before to try the bottom, &c. His horse mired about the middle of the river, so that he had to dismount, and carry out his saddle bags. His horse relieved of so much of his burthen arose and was led out. I seeing this, dismounted in the river, tied up my bridle and let my horse follow, With much difficulty he got across. I having my saddle-bags, which were very heavy, and my gun to carry waded slowly after him. Calvin having got his horse and mine safely ashore returned and met me in the river and relieved me of my load. We stopped at a solitary wigwam at which lived an Old Delaware alone, without any other human being near him on either side of the river. It was now in the afternoon and we began to get pretty hungry. I had found a few ears of green corn in a deserted Indian field. While we dried our clothes wetted in crossing the river, we roasted the corn. We over-took our company in camp at dark. I was very much fatigued.

Saturday Aug. 28 Quick's horse could not be found. We proceeded a few miles and encamped. Son Rice, Shane & I went to Cantonment Leavenworth, three miles from our camp. We saw the Commanding officer, Maj. Davenport, [17] and Maj. Dougherty Agent for the Pawnees, [18] on our business-the history of this interview will be given a few days hence. We came back to our camp, and my two sons again went to the garrison with our papers for the inspection of those officers.

Sunday Aug. 29 We remain in camp. Receive communications from home. Also a letter from Rev. S. H. Cone, in which among other things he very kindly states that as it is probable that we are in want of funds for the support of my family, I was at liberty to draw on him for one-two-or three hundred Dollars. He does not say how, or when he would expect to be remunerated. This is an act of kindness [and] generosity worth recording, in our Journal, and on our hearts, and one that will be rewarded by Heaven. I am thankful to the Lord for such a friend-and thankful that I am not under the necessity of accepting the offer. True, we had not funds to fit out Mr. Lykins, [19] and to bear his expenses, nor to leave for the use of my family, but the Lord has given us friends, who have, and will let us have what we need on credit in Fayette, until I realize the earnings of my present labours. Major Dougherty spent most of the day at our camp.

Monday Aug 30. Son Rice & myself again visited the garrison, In order to make arrangements for proceeding. We hope to get off on Wednesday next, which will be as soon as we can arrange our business with the commanding officer at the garrison. When I undertook this work, the Secretary of War was advised that there would probably be some difficulty with the neighbouring Indians, and ordered a Corporal's guard, (10 men) and at my request he then left the matter to the discretion of the commanding officer at Cantonment Leavenworth. I had sent my son to the garrison to arrange with the commander, who then was Maj. Riley [20] all appeared fair.

A Maj. Davenport had succeeded to the command a day or two before our arrival, and he perceived difficulties in everything. He first appeard unwilling to furnish any men to help me, said that my surveying company might be completed by my hiring men. That he could not send an escort, because if one were necessary, it would require more men than he had to spare-at least two companies. I stated to him the nature of the case, that a guard had from the first been deemed indispensable, and therefore the Secretary of War had ordered it. I returned to my camp, & wrote him an official notice that I was now engaged in the work and desired him to furnish the men needed to complete my surveying company, and also the necessary escort. When he discovered that I was disposed to proceed in a way that would tell, he appeared more obliging. He said he expected some orders on the subject from Genl. Atkinson, [21] near St. Louis, on Sunday. I also sent him on Saturday evening, my Commission & instructions, and the ratification of the treaty by the Senate &c. for his inspection.

[Marginal note.] This took place on Saturday, Aug. 28. On Sunday, he forwarded me a letter stating that the number of men that I asked for, to aid me for the first three weeks, which was only six, should be in readiness to start at any time, but that he could not furnish an escort, because, if the disposition of the Indians rendered a guard necessary at all, it would require more men than he could spare. It seems that he had received an order from Genl. Atkinson stating that as there was no appearance of hostility on the frontiers, no escort was necessary. And if needed at all, not more than 20 men could be spared &c. (this was stated to me by Maj. Dougherty). All this was mere trifling. Atkinson, and every one else in this country knew that not a year for several years had passed, in which those Pawnees did not kill, and rob, and otherwise abuse, more or fewer of the citizens of the U. States who happened to fall into their hands. The Secretary of War, aware to some extent of the difficulties to be apprehended from the Indians within the vicinity of our surveying, had issued an order to Genl. Clark, Superintendent of Indian affrs. at St. Louis that he should require the Indian Agents for those tribes with whom I should likely come in contact, to notify the Indians of their several charges that I acted under the authority & protection of the U. States, and to require them to treat me with friendship &c. accordingly. [22] Genl. Clark had not given this notice to the agents. He had written to me that he had notified the Subagt. -of the Kanzas, but he, the Sub-agent, M. G. Clark, told us the other day at Independence that he had not been notified. Neither had Maj. Campbell, S. Agt. for the Shawanoes. Both those men acted promptly upon my statements to them.

I brought on the order to Clark from the Sec. War, and knowing that there were many crooked sticks about St. Louis, I had the precaution to take a copy. This I have used to effect with the agents above named. But Dougherty was absent at the time my son was at the Garrison. He was then in St. Louis, was many days in Clark's company, both at St. Louis, then at Du Chien, at a treaty, then again at St. Louis. He asked Clark about it, but Clark gave him no information, and intimated that he did not believe that the treaty had been ratified. After Dougherty's return to the garrison, and his hearing that we were certainly going to work, and knowing that the Pawnees were the only Indians from whom we need fear any hostility, wrote to Clark, from whom he has not yet heard. Clark's neglect of duty, and Atkinson's foolish & wicked orders, and Davenport's childishness are partly unaccountable. Dougherty could omit doing any thing for us, because he had received no orders, but he kindly consented to act. To justify him in doing so, I made a written request for him to notify and endeavor to conciliate the Pawnees. I also inquired if there were any circumstances which had recently occurred which evinced that they were now under the influence of better feelings than formerly, and what those circumstances were if they did exist. I forwarded him a copy of the Sec. War's order to Clark, and also other documents to show to him the full character of the expedition. He agreed to send immidiately to the Pawnee towns, and bring in some of them to council on the subject. But he had not horses to send, and I was obliged to let him have two of our horses. These I sent up to him today-and his express will start today or tomorrow.

Tuesday August 21. I again went, in company of Rice, and conversed with Major

Davenport, respecting an escort when we shall commence running our long line. But he appeared to be no more accommodating than before, and wished, as he had stated in his letter, to let the matter rest. until we could hear from the Pawnees. Maj. Dougherty politely replied to my communication and offers to afford all the aid in his power. In reply to my enquiries, "If any recent circumstances evinced that the Pawnees are now under the influence of better feelings than formerly," &c. He stated that he knew of no such favourable circumstances. Davenport advised me to write to Genl. Atkinson, and state the number of men that I should probably need, &c. This I declined to do.

350 THE KANSAS HISTORICAL QUARTERLY

The neglect of Davenport I attribute to his naturally, disobliging disposition, as he wished to be understood as treating me with politeness. The unreasonable, and foolish opinion expressed by Atkinson, I attribute to the influence of Clark. The neglect of duty on the part of Clark, I attribute in part to his dislike of Dougherty, but chiefly because he dislikes Vashon, [23] and was not pleased that Vashon had made a treaty with the Delawares, and more especially because that treaty does not stipulate for the payment of certain claims of traders against the Delawares. [24] This is the last treaty to be made with the Delawares respecting land, and those who had hovered about them like crows about a carcase, knew that this was their last draw. After the treaty with Vashon, the Delawares were prevailed on to ask that certain claims to the amount of some thousands of Dollars, should be paid by the U. States. Vashon told them that the U. States had paid their debts at the treaty of St. Marys in 1818 and that ought to suffice. The Indians gave him to understand that they were quite satisfied to let matters rest so, and that they had made the request at the instance of others.

The nature of those claims are generally as follows. Traders credit the Indians, charging three or four prices for their goods, expecting that all will not be collected, and charging so high as to make themselves safe if but a small amount should be collected. They always enter the trade upon their own risk, and have no more right to insurance from the U. States than any other merchants and traders. When a treaty occurs, they come in with these claims. A trifling present or profession of friendship, &c. will induce an Indian to say the claim is just, and must be paid, if he sells his land. If the amount of claims of the claimer, is not equal to what he hopes the U. States will agree to pay, he creates claims by the same means that he has proven his old ones. Vashon informed me of Clark's displeasure that the treaty had been made, and of the circumstance of those claims. Such is the character of the people with whom I have to do this business, and such the state of things in relation to the Indians.

The express-two men, will start this day for the Pawnees. Some Kanzas are at the garrison, by these Dougherty sends for the Kanza chiefs to assemble. He is going with us that far, and will talk to them on the subject of our surveying. This he deems necessary, notwithstanding the interview I had with some of them the other day. A band of Kanzas have lately stolen nine horses from the Pawnees, a little previously, the Osages and Pawnees had a fight in which some ten or twelve Pawnees and two or three Osages were slain. Thes[e] circumstances have induced Dougherty to suggest to me the propriety of taking a guard on our first and present tour. This is to extend only sixty miles west of Missouri State, and will last about three weeks. We shall then be led back to this place by our work, and shall re-fit for our more remote and important expidition. We leave some of our supplies at Canto. Leavenworth and are preparing to proceed on our Journey, tomorrow, which is as early as we have been able to adjust our business with our trifling major. Maj. Campbell, Shane, & his son, left us yesterday for their place.

Wednesday September 1. At a half past 9 o'clock we left camp, proceeded to Cantonment Leavenworth, where we took into our company a Corporal & eight men with 21 days' provision. We have deposited the balance of our supplies at the garrison. The garrison furnished food for the men from there but we had to furnish horses and bags, &c for transportation. We there borrowed a spade for mound-making, & a tent for the soldiers. I and Calvin proceeded with the company, at 12- made, about 15 miles and encamped at the Stranger. [25] Rice, Major Dougherty, & Lieut. Cook overtook us at dark, the latter merely to spend the night.

Thursday Sep. 2. Major Dougherty & I proceeded early and left my sons to bring on the company. We reached Boon's, [26] at the Kanza agency at 1 o'clock, soon after, about 20 or 30 Kanza chiefs & others assembled, to whom Dougherty explained the objects of our coming into their country &c. and conversed with them on the subject of their differences with the Pawnees. A band of [Kansas] have lately stolen 9 horses from the Pawnees Since that two other parties have gone, one a party of five, which has been out five days, the other a party of four, which have been gone four days. One party have gone to the Republican

Pawnees, and the other to the Grand Pawnees on the great Platte -both to steal horses. This increases the danger to us, of falling in with hostile Pawnees following in after the Kanza thieves, and to avenge their thefts. We shall be in danger of having our horses stolen at least, even while we are near to the Kanza villages. The Company overtook us at night, & we encamped near Boon's.

Friday Sep. 3. Had further Had further talks with the Kanzas, Maj. Dougherty Sep. 3 warned them not to follow our party to beg for provisions, &c. &c. I have hired our interpreter who speaks Kanza. He has agreed to overtake us tomorrow & to accompany us a few days only. An interpreter is necessary, because, otherwise we could not distinguish a friend from a foe as he would approach us. The Kanzas have not yet decided whether they will deliver up the horses they have lately stolen. [Marginal note.] Connor returned, had not found the Del. Chiefs horse-but brought another. About 11 o'clock Maj. Dougherty started home- We sent a man with him a days journey. The company started and I and Calvin soon followed, having obtained some Smith work on our guns and a horse. Stopped at Plume's, 3 miles from our camp, and borrowed an U. States' flag. Made about eight miles and encamped on Grasshopper creek. [27] Col. Boon accompanies us.

Saturday Sep 4. Several Kanzas passed us both ways yesterday and two encamped with us. We started before 8 oclock, saw a considerable number of Kanzas going each end of the road. We encamped on Soldier creek. [28] More than twenty Kanzas came to our camp, many of them seemed anxious to beg some of our provisions or clothing. But we assured them that we had not come to trade- We had come to perform a piece of work for the benefit of their Delaware neighbors, and had brought no more of food or raiment than we needed for our own use. I gave them some tobacco, at dusk they all left us. We are now within three miles of the line on which we shall commence our work, and not more than four or five miles from the place of our beginning. Jo Jim, the Kanza interpreter whom we hired overtook, and joined our company at camp.

Sunday Sep. 5. We spend the day in camp, My writing desk is the pad of a packsaddle, one board of the saddle being tied fast to a stake on the out-side, the other board necessarily projects from the stake, and forms a kind of shelf. The two pads are then suffered to fall on to the shelf part, and forms a kind of cushioned table.

My seat is formed upon three stakes driven into the ground, with sticks fastened across the top so that the seat is made firm.

Monday Sep 6. Left Calvin in charge of the camp, and Rice & I commenced our work. We had to go about 5 miles to find the line of the Kanza lands at the crossing of the Kanzas river. We crossed Soldier creek one mile & three quarters from the river. The creek is three rods & fifteen links between the banks. About a mile and a half north of us between the creek and river is the village of Chachhaa hogeree, Prarie-village. It contains about 50 houses, with say three families to the house. All except three or four persons, started yesterday and today, on their hunting excursions. Sent the Kanza interpreter Jo Jim to try to get some sweet corn of them but he was unsuccessful. From the creek, which we could not cross with our horses, I returned to camp with Quick and his interpreter. The surveyors got in at dusk, I having sent horses to meet them.

Tuesday Sep 7. Sent four men early to take a Bee tree which they had found yesterday. They got no honey of consequence. We left camp a little after 9. The packhorses encamped so far ahead that it was dark before the surveyors came in. We were encamped on a branch of Soldier creek. I had sent a man to meet them, who returned at sundown without having seen them. I took Connor and rode till dark before we met with them.

Wednesday Sep. 8. It rained on us last night, and I omitted to state that I have made some beginning for a mission on Missouri above Cantonment Leavenworth sixty or eighty miles. In June & July a treaty was held with various tribes-viz Sauks, Foxes, Iowas, Otoes, Omaha, and Sioux assembled at Prarie-Du-Chein, at which treaty it was stipulated that $3000. pr. Ann. for ten years, be paid by government for education purposes among those tribes. Dougherty, the Agt., since I met with him at the garrison suggested that a suitable place for a mission would be on a tract of land above the garrison, between the two Nemaha rivers, on the Missouri, about ten miles wide and twenty miles long, which had been set apart at the late treaty for the use and settlement of half-breeds. The land is to be held by them as other Indians hold their lands, though the Prest. of the U. S. may grant to any one of them a tract, not exceeding 640 acres, in fee simple. Maj. Dougherty thought that some or all of the three thousand dollars mentioned above might be obtained to aid an institution there (though I am of opinion that there has been a contrivance among some whites to apply it to Johnson's School) [29] In conference with him, he has assured me that he would do all in his power to promote such an undertaking. I have stated to him that we would turn our attention to the matter. On Sunday last I wrote to Mr. Cone on the subject, and have requested that he & the Board resolve to enter upon the work. I state to him that in event of the Board not seizing upon these openings, that others of us intend to improve them. See my letter to Cone, which may be considered as part of this Journal. [30] We left our camp after 12 oclock, passed the surveyors who had commenced their work pretty soon, and encamped on the Soldier creek, left of our line. The surveyors came in at dark.

Thursday Sep 9. Our work went on as usual- surveyors made seven miles today. We encamped half a mile to the east of our line, on the upper branches of (perhaps) Sotraell creek. [31] Connor and the Delaware Chief went a hunting about 9 o'clock yesterday morning, and have not yet returned. I had been very particular in telling Connor where we intended to encamp. A little after dark a white man express arrived with dispatches from Genl. Clark & Maj. Dougherty, sent by the latter. Genl. Clark has sent us plats of the meanderings of Missouri and Kanza rivers, the Kanzas reservation &c. He advises that we should not run farther west than the Republican river because we should likely run onto Pawnee lands, and because we should be in danger of injury from the Pawnees. Dougherty wishes to know what I intend to do, and whether we wish him to delay a tour up Missouri on which his business pressingly calls him, to attend our interview with the Pawnees. I am gratified with Clark's attention in this case, Dougherty appears to be very prompt and obliging.

I replied to Dougherty, and early on Friday Sep. 10. I started the express back Surveyors commenced early. We passed the northeast corner of the Kanzas reserve, and encamped on the sources of Grasshopper river. We have not been able to kill either Deer or Turkeys, or any thing larger than squirrils. We have found wild honey frequently. Today we have found and taken two trees. Near night Connor & the Chief got in to camp.

Saturday Sep. 11. I went with some hands and enlarged the mound at the north east corner of the Kansa reservation. We had rain. We found trouble to get a good camping ground, which was on Grasshopper creek. Killed a rattlesnake in the midst of our encampment sometime after we had been tramping over it. Surveyors came in at 4 oclock- Jo Jim killed a deer.

Sunday Sep. 12. We spend the day in Camp. Every night we tie up three horses, so that if the Indians should steal the others we might still have some. Our horses sometimes get affrighted and one taking alarm from another, all are put in motion, and soon would leave us, were they not securely hobbled. By tying up some of them there is less danger of the others leaving camp.

Monday Sep. 13. We surveyed to the northern line of Del. lands, and begun a mound ten feet square at the base, & six feet high. Removed our encampment to another branch of Sotrael. Elk sign has been seen for several days. Today a Buck Elk stalked near the camp, Two of the men got each a shoot at him, but he escaped Found iron ore on Delaware lands near the corner. The Doctor killed three Turkies.

Tuesday Sep. 14 . Set our course as nearly towards Cantonment Leavenworth, (which is one of our points) as possible. Finished our mound, and made six miles. Encamped on a small branch of same creek. Two of our men fired on a large flock of Elk.

Wednesday Sep. 15. Moved our encampment a few miles down the same creek. Three men started early hunting. One of them came in, unsuccessful, after dark. The other two remained absent.

Thursday Sep. 16. Found difficulty in crossing two Creeks. Encamped on a branch of same creek, Two lost men still out-- Fired the prarie, that by the immense, column of smoke that arises by the burning of old grass mingled with the green, they might see where we were. One of our men killed four turkeys.

Friday Sep. 17. Two lost men not returned. We saw a smoke rise not many miles from us, and thought it possible that our lost men had given a signal. We answered by kindling two fires in the grass at different times, but heard nothing from them. Found two bee trees, but obtained little honey. Discovered a large flock of Elk at a distance, about middle of afternoon. Stopped & encamped. Called in the surveyors, and four of us remaining to keep camp, the residue of our company made an unsuccessful effort to take an Elk. Encamped on a branch of Stranger creek as we supposed.

Saturday Sep. 18 . Paid Jo Jim our interpreter with Kanzas & others, and sent him home, supposing that we should have no further need for him until we should re-fit for another tour. Took a bee tree. Came in sight of Missouri river, say seven miles ahead. Found that we were too far north for the garrison. Turned at right angles southwardly. Found a grove of wood & brush, and encamped on a water of Missouri.

Sunday Sep. 19. No water for our horses, and food poor, we removed four or five miles- (without surveying) and encamped on Stranger creek.

Monday Sep. 20. Yesterday my son narrowly escaped serious injury by the kick of a horse on his head and arm. Being in want of meat, Jackson shot a fine buck. We brought up our off-set line, and turned towards the garrison again. Encamped on a small stream running into Missouri. Before we left camp this morning, Cap. John Quick the Delaware Chief told me that he had seen enough to satisfy him. he would go on to the Garrison and wait until I arrived and then go on home. He could not continue longer with us. They wished to come to this country before cold weather- they had many women & children who would suffer much with cold if it should be late in the season, &c. &c. He has all along indicated no disposition to stay long with us. After he had started I called to him and made a second effort to pursuade him to stay. The day was cloudy and I feared he could not find the garrison. I promised to send a man in with him on the following day. He stayed with us.

Tuesday Sep. 21. We have kept up one Sentinel at a time during the night for most of the tour. Last night we dispensed with it, and think of not having guard while near the garrison. Delaware Chief went for the garrison attended by one of our soldiers. Saw at a great distance in the prarie a company of Indians, amounting, to one hundred going towards the garrison. Found ourselves getting too near Missouri and had to make another offset. Had to travel at least two miles along a difficult stream to find water for encampment, which was not far from the river.

Wednesday Sep. 22. Encamped on a branch of Stranger, fired the prarie for a signal to our men sent to the garrison.

Thursday Sep. 23. Rode out with son and ascertained the best way to get to the garrison. Sent Calvin and a man to the garrison for supplies. Our man returned from the garrison with a large bundle of papers, letters, &c. Altho. we were no more than 12 or 13 miles from the garrison, such had been his awkwardness that he and the Delaware did not reach it until the second day, & they as awkwardly slept out last night on their return. The Indians we saw passing in were the Pawnees we had sent for. Dougherty & Davenport requesting me to go in as soon as possible to attend the council, I rode to the garrison but it was too late to call the council.
Connor & Vincent, who got lost on the 15th did not go together. Each had made the best of his way to the garrison and after three or four days reached it. Vincent returned to us today with our express. Connor started alone yesterday to find us, crossed our trail more than once, We had fired the prarie, notwithstanding all which he slept alone in the woods and after spending two days, was making his way back to the garrison last night when, a little after dark as I was returning to camp, I met him and took him with me.

Friday Sep. 24. We moved our encampment further down Salt creek. 24 Went to the garrison. Had a talk with the 100 Pawnee chiefs & Wariours. Dougherty stated I had been sent to survey lands of the Delawares, and that if any of them should meet with any of our party, they must treat us well, &c. [32] I said a few words to them, enjoining on them to be peaceable to the Delawares. John Quick made a short speech to them, expressive of friendship &c. Dougherty gave them a considerable amount of presents which was due them, consisting of powder, lead, blankets, tobacco, &c. &c. Lately the Kanzas sent to Dougherty to say that the 9 horses lately stolen by them from the Pawnees they could not restore, because their hunting party had taken them with them. This is as it usually happens in those cases. Dougherty now told this to the Pawnees, and said the Kanzas have gone to hunt. If you should meet with them I don't wish you to attack them, but if they attack you, I don't want you to hold down your heads. Agents might prevent wars among these tribes. Had the Kanza agent seized the nine horses, or taken nine others of the Kanzas, and forbid a repetition of such tresspass upon a severer penalty, and returned the horses to Pawnee Agt. Dougherty; if the latter had restored them with damages, and forbidden retaliation by the Pawnees upon a penalty of witholding some of their next year's presents, how much better it would have been than for both agents in this indirect way to encourage hostilities among them! I sent Connor to bring hither Maj. Campbell, to adjust our business with Quick.

Saturday Sep. 25. The Pawnees set out for their place. They are a naked wretched looking people, more fierce and brave looking than the Kanzas, but not less miserable in appearance. Quick & I meeting some of them this morning, a chief entered into communication with Quick by signs. It was amusing to see them enquiring of each other how many nights journey they had to their homes, promising to be friendly &c. The Pawnee at length not well understanding the signs of the Delaware, invited him to the garrison where they could obtain an interpreter. I went on & informed

Maj. Dougherty. The chief difficulty was the Pawnee had understood that the Delaware had invited him home with him. Whereas the Del. had only stated that hereafter they should meet and talk more, and that if either should go to the others place, he should be received with friendship, as also their people severally. Sunday Was informed that Maj. Campbell had gone higher up Sep. 26 Kanza river (which turned out to be a mistake) Sent express to intercept him, and inform him where we are. We remained in camp. In the evening Shane and Connor arrived. Campbell is sick and cant come.

Monday Sep. 27. Took Quick and Shane and showed them where we intended to run the lines of the garrison reserve. [33]

Tuesday Sep. 28. Took a certificate from Quick that he was satisfied with the land, the lines, &c. and he made a written request that government aid them in their new home, in making fields and houses, and in such other respects as the Govt. should perceive their wants required. He stated also that they had exchanged lands with the expectation that here their posterity would be allowed a residence as long as any of them remained on earth. In order to satisfy them that all was secure, they wished to obtain from the U. States such an instrument of writing as that by which the U. States secured land to their own white citizens. This is perhaps the first instance of an Indian tribe asking a patent for their lands. We had the documents witnessed by several officers in the garrison, and others-and the two interpreters Connor & Shane.- Furnished Connor & Quick with eight days' rations, and, in the afternoon, started them home.

[Marginal note.] For Shane's communication relative to the wish of the Shawanoes for a school, see, page for Note Oct. 17. Quick on leaving gave many assurances of his satisfaction and friendship, &c. among which he stated, more than once, that he had travelled much, but had never been treated with so much kindness by any as he had by me, and our company. Wednesday We dined with Dr. Bryant [34] and attended to small matters.

Thursday Sep. 29. Move our encampment a little lower down Salt creek35 Sep. 30 on account of obtaining food for our horses. Surveyors at work.
Friday Oct. 1
Saturday Oct. 2. Surveyors, I with them, worked on the lower line of the Military reserve. Surveyors at work on the lines of the Military Reserve.

Sunday Oct. 3. Remain in camp.

Monday Oct. 4. On a hill not far from the garrison we discovered, as we went out a few weeks since, eight mounds or heaps of stone. This morning we examined them, and excavated one. The stones were not hewn-and were placed circular as though a building had been the design. Within was earth. We found in the one excavated human bones, apparantly scorched with fire, coal-burnt earth, and stone that had been in the fire. The bones were so much decayed that it could scarcely be seen to what part of the body they belonged except the sculs, some of which appeared to have belonged to adults and some to children, and a few other bones. They were situated as exhibited below. [MS. illegible] It was not a mere burying place, because the bodies had been burned. The burning was not intended to reduce the bones to ashes, because this had not been done. It was, I suppose, or rather, they were "High places" in which worship was performed anciently, agreeably to the account in Scripture of heathenish customs. Human sacrifices had been offered on them, or rather in them for they had been a kind of kiln, or furnace, surrounded with a stone wall and the corps and fire within. I should think that the victim had been placed upon a wooden scaffold, or among a pile of wood. The corpse, or corpses, part consumed, had lastly been covered with earth, or with vegtable substance and earth mingled. [36]

We then went to examine a coal mine we had discovered a few days before, and found it an extensive stratum in the bottom of Salt creek, a little within the military reserve, and apparently very good.

Tuesday October 5. Two of our horses cant be found. Packed the others, and about two o'clock left camp- In crossing the creek at our encampment one of our horses fell back from a steep bank they had to ascend, into the water. He could not rise until the pack ropes were cut, and the packs removed- packs in the water. Five of our soldiers are with the surveyor, two of those left too drunk to be of much service. Our packs very heavy, one especially, Calvin had a difficult time to get started and to get on. Overtook surveyors, and encamped on a branch of Salt creek about six miles from garrison. [Marginal note.] Our company now consists of 15 soldiers, and six of us who came from Fayette, in all 21 with 14 horses- The two that were taken by express to Pawnees, much reduced. Calvin remained behind, with one of the soldiers to look for the lost horses. During the time we have been in the vicinity of the garrison, I have had a troublesome time, again, with Maj. Davenport the Commander. He from our first entering upon this work manifested a most disobliging Spirit. I gave him notice that we should need six additional men to make up our surveying party for our long route, and asked for such an escort as he deemed expedient. He appeared to get into a fever, insinuated that an escort was not necessary, but if one was necessary it wod. require three of his four companies. He said the commanding General Atkinson had ordered that not more than twenty men in all should accompany us. I held all my intercourse with him in writing, so that these papers might speak for themselves. I at length informed him that I asked for no escort unless he deemed one necessary, I did not think he would have the hardihood [to] say one was not necessary. This however he ventured to say, as by this means he could take advantage of my remark, and not send any. He then endeavoured to keep me from getting the six additional men for the surveying company. When he found I insisted on these, and he dare not refuse, he then insisted that I should go on a week, and then send for them. I let him know that I was in immediate want of them. For five or six days previously I had informed him that I wished to leave the neighbourhood on monday morning. He still put the matter off. On tuesday early I wrote him I wished to leave that morning. He at length wrote me that they would be detailed that afternoon. On account of his delays we had not the requisite number of persons to assist us. He seemed to wish to subject us to inconvenience. He had wheedled Maj. Beauchamp, the Sub. agt. to say he thought there was no danger. I saw Beauchamp and when I told him the story of the affair he appeared to feel embarrassed. I stated that no company, even down to one that came in a few days ago, ever thought of going almost half way to the mountains from State of Missouri without being prepared to defend themselves against the Pawnees. The Sec. War had thought an escort necessary- Maj. Riley, who lately commanded the garrison, had thot. two companies necessary- Genl. Clark, of St. Louis-Dougherty, Campbell, M. G. Clark, and others thot. one necessary, and every body would think an escort necessary and even Davenport never ventured to say one was not necessary until from my remark, he by saying so could withhold the escort. Having discovered the disobliging disposition of Davenport on our first coming into this country, I had despaired of a competent escort, and therefore had confer[red] with Dougherty on the best method of accomplishing the work without one. It was hoped that when the Pawnees would be absent on their huntings, we might get thro. their country undiscovered. We, therefore, in council the other day gave them no idea of our going into their country.

Wednesday Oct. 6. My son overtook us with the six men, having found their horses, and brought on the men's provisions. On crossing a little creek near camp, mired a horse, and had to pull him out of the mud with ropes, &c. Our horses so heavily packed, & the men so awkward, and some of them drunk [so] that we had some difficulty to get on. Encamped on a branch of Stranger creek. Sent a man to aid the surveyors to find the camp. He awkwardly led them much astray. I heard him blowing, & shooting, and took a man and went out and fired my gun several times, before we discovered them coming in. Found honey today

Thursday Oct. 7. Soon after we left camp, discovered a company which turned out to be Kanzas, who had been out hunting, & trapping. The company halted in a vale out of sight and more than a mile from us, and one rode across in great haste to meet us. I gave him a small piece of tobacco. He said there was a man or more with them, who wished to speak to me. I informed him that on such a hill I would stop to speak to them. On which he rode back in equal haste, and brought a half-breed who could speak English. In the evening three more came to our camp, on Stranger creek. This creek was so deep that the chain men had to swim it.

Friday Oct. 8. We found a good crossing for our horses, on Stranger Creek, a mile above our camp, and where was a good mill seat-water enough, now, to turn a grist mill most of the time.
Found a piece of gypsum here- Found a piece some days since on waters of Missouri. Encamped again on main Stranger creek.

Saturday Oct. 9. Discovered a large flock of elk. Sent three men, one of whom fired and wounded one of them. But we did not get him. Encamped on a small branch of Stranger, 26 miles from the garrison. Thus far the country about the garrison and this way is very well supplied with springs of water, even at this time of great drought.

Sunday Oct. 10. Remained in camp on a small branch of Stranger. Jo Jim, whom I, the other day employed to go with us as interpreter, came to us. Brot. letter from M. G. Clark S. agt. for Kanzas. Clark advises that we take care to avoid depredation from both Kanzas, and Pawnees. A quarrel, a few days ago, took place between some white men hunting bees, and consequently trespassing on the Indians' lands, and in the affray a Kanza was killed. Jo Jim can speak no other Indian language than Kanza. I have not been able to procure a man who speaks Pawnee. This is a serious misfortune, and much increases our liability to be injured by them.

Monday Oct. 11. We encamped on the main Sautrell.

Tuesday, Oct. 12. Encamped on a branch of Sautrell.

Wednesday, Oct. 13. Reached the mound we erected, some weeks ago, at the commencement of the Delaware outlet. In running from the garrison to this place a distance of nearly 46 miles, the surveyors struck within less than two chains of the mound, -distance, also, agreed with our calculations. I was much gratified with the accuracy of our work. We encamped a little above the mound.

Thursday Oct. 14. Grass for our horses, is every day becoming more scarce. The season is remarkably dry. The whole country around us, has burned over today. We had encamped in a creek bottom where there was least danger of the fire approaching us, and still, it sometimes seemed as though we should not escape. We were much annoyed by smoke and more than once, had to beat out the approaching fire. We did not leave camp. Some of the soldiers erected a couple of mounds.

Friday Oct. 15. We steered our course due west and encamped on the sources of the Soldier. Difficult to find tolerable food for our horses. Had to beat out the fire to save a little spot for our horses. In a day the whole country put on its black and dismal dress. The dust arising from the burnt grass, and the blackened weeds and shrubbery, annoys our eyes, and blackens face, hands, and clothes.

Saturday Oct. 16. Sent Jo Jim & a soldier, with two horses, to the garrison for our papers, and for some additional supplies for the soldiers. After much searching for food for our horses, stopped in, not a good place, on another branch of Soldier creek, some two or three miles from our work.

Sunday Oct. 17. Remain in camp on the sources of Soldier creek. Omitted Oct. in Note, Sep. 28. Shane informs that since my talk to the Shawanoes respecting a school, Cummins the principal U. S. Indian Agt. for the Dels. and Shawanoes, had stated to the Shawanoes, that he had been directed by the Prest. of the U. States to say to them that if they would send some of their male youths to Johnson's school, in Kentucky, it would be well for them, that they would there be instructed at a cost to the Shawanoe nation of two hundred Dollars a head. [37] Again. If they would accept of a school in their neighborhood, he had been requested by the Methodist congregation to inform them that they should be furnished with a mission in their place. To the former, the Shawanoes replied that they wished to send their youths to school. But the tribe were poor, and could not spare the money it would cost them to send them to Ky. Moreover they would prefer sending to a school nearer at hand.

To the latter proposition they replied, that I had lately offered them a school. They had deferred their answer until I should be returning from the tour. But they had determined to accept of my offer.

Monday Oct. 18. Had a little rain last night-the country is exceedingly parched with drought. When we got on to the praries, the ashes from the recently burned praries, and the dust and sand raised so by the wind that it annoyed us much, the wind rising, I found that the dust was so scattered that it became impossible to perceive the trail of the surveyors, who had gone a few hours ahead of the horses. While conversing with Calvin about the course we should go, we discovered the atmosphere ahead darkening, & as it had become cloudy, we fancied that a misting rain was coming upon us, and made some inquiry respecting the security of our packs. A few minutes taught us that what we had fancied to be rain, was an increase of the rising dust, sand, and ashes of the burnt grass, rising so much and so generally that the air was much darkened, and it appeared on the open praries as though the clouds had united with the earth. Our eyes were so distressed that we could scarcely see to proceed, It was annoying to our lungs. The black burnt grass, lodging on our hands and faces, and each one rubbing his watery eyes with pain, soon occasioned a most horrid appearance, our clothes also blackening fast. The wind blew incessantly and excessively severe.

We succeeded in finding a mile stone, and steering our course as well as we could reached a wooded creek some four miles from our encampment. This afforded a partial relief from the wind and sand. Having left the horses and men in charge of Calvin, I with another man had just found the line along which the surveyors had passed, and was about to select a camping ground, when we met a man whom the Doctor [sent] to inform me that he could not proceed with his work, & that they waited for us in a wood a mile ahead. It being very difficult for me to look at my pocket compass I told the soldier who had just returned, to lead us back. He set off with great confidence that he could find the way and in a few minutes was leading us north instead of west. He was unwilling to be called back, and insisted that he was right. On finding the surveyors, we encamped for the residue of the day. Even in this wood, and after the wind had somewhat abated, the black ashes fell on us considerably.

Tuesday Oct. 19. The wind and dust were severe, but not so bad as yesterday. We worked all day- late before we encamped, which was on a large creek, supposed to be Vermillion. [38]

Wednesday Oct. 20. Calvin surveyed today- Had to turn out of our way two miles or more to find food for our horses. Encamped on a branch of Blue river.

Thursday Oct. 21. Again had to leave our course, with the packhorses, two or three miles to find grass. Late before the surveyors came into camp. We had got into a tract of a few miles square, which had not been burned. While in the act of pitching our tents, we discovered the fire coming towards us with alarming rapidity. We set fire in the grass in self defense. The fires around us were sublime-the long lines and the flame ascending ten, fifteen, and sometimes 20 feet high. On seeing these praries on fire in such a dry time as this we cease to wonder that the wood does not increase faster-we only wonder that a vestige of wood is left. It was in the night before the surveyors got in to camp. We have seen sign of Beavers and Otters, for a few days.

Friday Oct. 22 . Crossed the trail of about ten waggons, and perhaps 7 horses which had gone out to the Rocky mountains, and returned since last spring, in the employ of trappers of fur-white men. Crossed an old beaten path. Reached & crossed Blue river, [39] and encamped not far west of it. Saw fresh sign of Indians-suppose they have discovered us, as we saw where one had been running. Men killed two Deer. Jo Jim & the soldier sent express to the garrison seven days ago, overtook us with flour, our papers, &c. Dougherty urges me to endeavour to establish a school on Missouri above the garrison as soon as possible, and beleives that a mission there would be greatly encouraged by the Indians.

Saturday Oct. 23. Encamped on a branch of Blue river. Grass poor. Nash killed a very fat buck. Fresh sign of Indians. Seen a trail of horses-some tracks show that the Indians had been running

Sunday Oct. 24. Blue river is a stream of beautiful clear water 99 yards wide, strong current, averaging one foot and a half in depth. Now very low. Heads near, and above the Grand island of the great Platt. It is a limestone country. Hilly near the river. Hills much washed, stony on sides, appearing white with the white limestone, sometimes of clay appearance-vallies & level up land good.

Oct. 24 Waters of Blue river, north of Kanza--108 Miles west of Cantonment Leavenworth. At Camp. One of our horses, a hardy little fellow that I have long had in use, Broke his left hind leg in the night, by fastening it under the root of a tree, as he attempted to descend a bank ten feet high and almost perpendicular. The sentinel was driving him and another horse back to the company, when it occurred. I suppose the man had hurried them in the dark, and being hobbled before, the horse was forced down. The grass is so poor for our horses, which are fast failing for want of food, that we deemed it indispensable to move on, in hope of reaching the Republican fork of Kanza, where we hope to find better food. Before we left camp we gave our poor little horse a bucket of water, and a lick of salt, & left him to hop about on his three legs until he dies-I have no hope of his recovering.

Carrot, who, on the first tour, was twice found asleep on post, was again detected in the same offence last night. On the former occasions he had escaped with a mere reprimand. It now appeared necessary to punish in some way. Immediately after breakfast, the company were convened, Carrot plead guilty and begged pardon for this time only. He plead with tears, and I soon became quite willing to let him off, provided I could do it in a way that would do us no injury in future. I asked if any of his associates would be security for his better behaviour. Several spoke, but so far from even requesting his pardon, they refused to vouch for his good conduct, expressed opinion that he ought to be punished. I told him then that I would compel him to carry a pack today- This I did not so much for a punishment really, as to show him that we would punish him, more severely for a repetition of the offence. I directed the corporal to prepare such a load as he deemed proper, reserving to myself the right to lighten it in case I thought it too heavy. The fellow padded on, and was very attentive to business in the run.
After searching much for green grass for our horses, we encamped on a branch as we suppose of Blue river. Grass poor indeed. Men killed two deer-some of the Deer are remarkably fat.

Monday Oct. 25. Wind very high. Proceeding about three miles we came to a few acres of bottom land on a creek that had not been burnt, and where the grass was better than we had found it for a day or two, we encamped. Dried the venison we had lately killed.

Tuesday Oct. 26. Wind very high, scarcely allowing us to pass. Encamped on a creek of the Republican, or Panee river. [40] Crossed a trail of Indians going to our left-lately supposed to be Otoes or, Kanzas. Saw much iron ore today.
Found a hill of iron ore-indeed the most of the stone appears to be of that quality, though most of it is sandy.

Wednesday Oct. 27. Passed some high rocky isolated hills, in which cliffs of sandy rocks appeared to contain much iron-much of the stone looked as if it had been melted in a furnace, and when broken exhibited the appearance of newly broken pot metal. The stone is Shelly-the whole exhibiting volcanick appearance. We took some very curious specimens of hollow, and mineral stones.

We found Coperas on a creek further on. And immense rocks of soapstone above ground.

We had hoped to find food for our horses better on the river than on smaller streams. Today we reached the Republican, or Pawnee river, and to our great disappointment we found it more destitute of grass than any place we had seen where wood was to be found. The river runs over a bed of sand-the banks low, and all the bottom lands are a bed of sand white and fine, and now as dry as powder ought to be. I never before saw a river along which we might not find some rich alluvial moist bottoms, on which, at this season of the year could be found green grass. But here there is, in a manner none.

We examined along the river for grass until satisfied that none could be found and then turned back to a creek we had passed five miles back. We met the surveyors, and reached our creek a while in the night, having kept our poor horses in motion from 9 oclock in the morning. On reaching the creek we bogued along its banks by moonshine, a half a mile, and finding a little spot not burned over, we halted. Our poor horses had miserable fare. Some places along the river for half a mile or a mile in a place, there is no timber. A grove then occurs on one side, which, at a distance appears, but on reaching it, no timber is found more valuable than cotton wood and Elm. The scarcity of wood on the river and the sandiness & poverty of the bottoms, greatly discouraged me as to the country- While the great scarcity of food for our horses made us fear that we should not be able to proceed much further.

Yesterday killed a Raccoon- today killed a Deer and Turkey.

Thursday Oct. 28. Cannot proceed on our way westward today, for want of food for our horses- Surveyors went on to run a few miles, and to cross the river with their line. We sent down and up Coperas creek in search of grass. Moved camp a mile up the creek, and guarded the horses, unhobled, along the brink of the water, where was still a little green though coarse & hard, grass that had escaped the destruction occasioned by the great drought, and the ravages of the fire.

Friday Oct. 29. Our line was seven miles ahead of us. We started early. From appearances we were afraid to cross the river lest we should not be able to get food for our horses, and proceeded up a creek on the N. East side of the river, where after much searching we found a tolerable place, for these times.

Saturday Oct. 30. Started early, crossed the river-travelled and searched for grass till after sun set. Found a pretty good place. Surveyors urged on by our necessity for grass, made eleven miles. Encamped half a mile south west of the river, on a little creek. Our western line has now passed near the river 18 miles. The river averages in width 140 yards-though where measured it was only 126 yards. banks low-no rocks-all sand along it-its waters turbid-about half the bed covered with water-now very low average of water say 14 inches-tolerably brisk current. Prarie bottoms four or five miles wide-but little hill back-land tolerably good, except the sand near the river. Quick sand in the river. Epsom salts are deposited in the sand beaches so as to be perceiveable both to the eye, and by the taste. Pass two isolated ledges, or heaps of iron looking sand stone, one on each side of the river. Picked up pieces of an earthen pot, made by the aborigines in olden times. A few days ago I found the iron and brass parts of a short gun, in the Prarie-such as are much used by the Indians near the mountains. The wood part had been burned with the burning of the praries-one of our men found a knife. Night before last Jo Jim caught two Beavers in Steele traps that he set. Saw tracks of horses & mules--

Indian sign-yesterday & today-not fresh. Many old tracks of Elks, tracks of one drove of Buffaloe. Crossed today three or four old paths leading to and from the river. Neither of our interpreters can tell whether we are below or above what is called the old Pani village,[41] though both are half-Indians, and have been in this country before. We know that we are below, but how far below we are at a loss to judge. Killed many fat turkies within two or three days. I shot one this evening.

Sunday Oct. 31. Remain in camp. Four men at a time, guarding the horses, and keeping them along the banks of a little creek now dry, where they find a little grass. At the commencement of the high land of the river, a mile from our camp, is a Cliff, two or three hundred yards long, of very coarse sandstone undergoing decomposition. The process has rendered the appearance of the pile romantic in the extreme, excavations ready to pull in immense rocks,-huge pillars standing alone, 15 or 20 feet high, castles resting on a kind of tripod, &c. are exhibited to the fancy. The stone is generally of a reddish yellow, parts, however, are white sandstone.

Monday November 1. We travelled about 4 1/2 miles, and finding better grass than usual, encamped about 12 oclock- Surveyors went on further, & returned to camp. Passd. a very large encampment of Indians, made last spring-there must have been several hundreds of them. Killed six or seven rattle snakes on the open prarie. Killed two Deer & several turkies.

Tuesday Nov. 2. Dug out a root which bears a fruit like a small squash, the size of a pare on a vine resembling a squash vine. The root is three feet & a half long before branching and [blank in MS.] inches in diameter. I shot a deer, but had not time to follow it to recover it. Jo Jim caught a beaver, caught a badger yesterday and another today. Saw much Indian sign- Saw also Buffaloe & Elk sign. Left the river bottom. Country high, pretty fertile limestone land. Encamped on a creek of the river. Grass very poor water extremely bad. Light of prarie fire discovered to N. West. Johnson, was lost and slept out last night. We discharged several guns last night and this morning to notify him where we were.

Wednesday Nov. 3. Jo Jim wounded a buffaloe, and others wounded another though neither could be found to day, and we have not time to stop to look after them tomorrow. Saw a flock of Antelopes. Old camping places of Indians seen. Encamped on a water of Solomon river. [42]

Thursday Nov. 4. Saw two Buffaloes early-did not stop to look after them. Saw a village of prarie dogs. Saw antelopes. In the evening saw five Buffaloes-wounded two, but had not time to follow them. Travelling in a small part of the country which had not been burnt, we were stopped by the fire. We set fire in self-defence, but had barely time to get our horses on to the small place we had burned in time to escape disaster from the approaching fires. For a while we were surrounded by flame, tho. not near enough to injure us, and enveloped in smoke. Encamped on a water of Solomon.

Friday Nov. 5. Completed the line of the outlet to 150 miles, and stopped. For some days we have discovered that our horses were failing so fast, that we must soon return, or lose them all. We have therefore risen before day & made extraordinary efforts to accomplish as much as possible while the horses could live. We are sure that we ought not to proceed further, and hope to get our horses back. We are beyond all Indian villages, and 50 miles, or more, into the country of Bufaloes Fired on a flock of Antelopes. Passed another Village of Prarie dogs. I fired on one, anxious to examine him, but he disappeared in his hole.

After we completed our survey, we turned on to a creek, and were looking for an encampment-the day calm & fair-when suddenly the atmosphere became darkened by a cloud of dust and ashes from the recently burnt Praries occasioned by a sudden wind from the north. It was not three minutes after I had first discovered its approach, before the sun was concealed, and the darkness so great, that I could not distinguish objects more than three or four times the length of my horse. The dust, sand, & ashes, were so dense that one appeared in danger of suffocation. The wind driving into ones eys seemed like destroying them.

I was more than a quarter of a mile from the pack-horses, with three men, only one of whom was immediately with me, when the storm commenced. Had I not feared that Calvin, with the horses and company, would continue to travel to reach me, and lose himself, I should have sought a low place and concealed my face until the storm had somewhat abated. I led on my horse, having the man who was with me to whip him on, sought the bank of the creek on which I had left the horses and proceeded on it until I reached them. Calvin had prudently halted in a low place, and was waiting for the abatement of the storm. We had great difficulty in making ourselves tolerably comfortable. One tent was prostrated after it was pitched. Mine could scarcely be made to withstand the wind, by tieing to trees.
The Doctor had taken three men and gone to examine some mineral hills. They sheltered for a while beneath a bank -of the creek and about dusk reached our camp. The storm commenced sun three quarters of an hour high in the evening, and blew tremendously all night. It had abated a little by morning. The dust was most annoying at the commencement. There was no clouds over us.

The termination of our line was about four miles north of Solomon river, in a district remarkable for minerals. Since we came into the vicinity of Republican, or Pawnee river, wood has been more scarce than previously. The creeks, however, are all wooded. Fuel would be sufficient for a considerable population-chiefly Elm, cottonwood, & willow near the rivers- farther from the rivers is more wood on the creeks, and of different kinds. Some of the country between Pawnee & Solomon is of limestone character though stone scarce generally-assuming more & more of a level character as we proceed westward- Soil generally good -some rich-other of 2d. quality. Water not so plenty nor so good as east of Pawnee. We stopped 210 miles west of the State of Missouri. The country is habitable thus far.

Saturday Nov. 6. After a severe night, on us & our horses, which in addition to the wind and cold, were almost perishing with hunger, we set off as early as possible-the day freezing cold, and the wind excessive. Killed a poor Buffaloe on Solomon. Took a part of it. Searched much for grass. Travelled about 12 miles, and encamped on the north side of Solomon. Found a little spot not burnt-food miserable, yet better than we have had for a while. Passed some very large encamping places of Indians some made the last summer, and others longer ago. Many buffaloe sculs were placed together at one of them.

Sunday Nov. 7. Remain in camp. Solomon is here about 70 yards wide, now lowwater at present, where the current is brisk, say 25 yards, shallow on ripples. Water transparent.-its shores, or rather sand beaches whitened with a deposit of salt, and in places, glauber salts. Glauber salts are deposited on the sand beaches of Pawnee river, & on the banks of [blank in MS.] creek where we terminated our survey. About half a mile above our camp is a salt spring which is a great natural curiosity. (See description on other side) [43] Fresh horse track seen, either Indians, or a wild horse is near.

Monday Nov. 8. We started early, & travelled till a half past three oclock--Encamped on the south side of Solomon, poor grass. Killed a Deer. Passed where Indians had been encamped hunting & trapping,-about 3, or 4 miles from where we had spent the two last nights. They had left there yesterday or early this morning--went towards Panee river. They had probably discovered us. Passed many old and large camps. Much sign of Bufaloe. We had proceeded about four miles a little east of S. east, when we again came into a limestone country.

Tuesday Nov. 9. Made about 22 miles and encamped near Solomon, crossed a little of running water, which was salt. Killed a deer, & Badger.

Wednesday Nov. 10. Traveled east about nine miles, and then ten miles E.S.E. Encamped on a water of Solomon (as supposed) Killed two deer & a badger. No limestone for 12 miles back-occasionally mounds & hill sides of iron looking sand stone. Soil good, for a few miles back resting upon sand of white & red colour, so that banks resembled an old lime kiln.

Thursday Nov. 11. So foggy that we could not see from one end of the line of company to the other. Set pocket compass, my son before, and I in the rear would observe the variation from the true course by the bend of our line. Often stopped to notice the compass. Finding this troublesome, and that the wind blew pretty constantly the same direction, I tied a ribbond to the end of my riding stick, and guided by the direction of the flag proceeded east until after noon, then bore southeast down Nishcoba-or Deep water. [44] Fell in with a flock of about 70 Elks. Killed three, and encamped on Deepwater.

Friday Nov. 12. Travelled Southeastwardly down Nishcoba, and encamped on its south bank. We had intended to have travelled east from Solomon, until we fell in with Panie river, & made two attempts, but found that we should be thrown on to the smaller branches of streams, where we could find less food for our horses. Saw many elks. Killed a deer. Four Kanzas came to our camp & remained thro the night.

Saturday Nov. 13. Last night we had rain. The country here is moist, and consequently more pleasant to us, & better for the horses. Left Deepwater travelled east-reached Panee river about one proceeded down it east, and encamped on the point near the Junction of Panee & Smokey hill rivers. A horse tired and was left behind. Five Kanzas came to us and spent the night. Almost every place burnt over. Little food for our horses.

Sunday Nov. 14. Remain in camp. Found & brot. in the tired horse. Put our horses on to the south side of Smokyhill river, where we found a spot of bottom land not burnt. An old Kanza came to camp, & staid most of the day.

Monday Nov. 15. Crossed Republican river, & proceeded down Kanza on the north side. Two Indians, one an old man; overtook us running, in high state of perspiration, said a great company, returning from their Buffaloe hunt, had come to our camp since we started, and these two had run after us (some three or four miles) to speak to us, & to get a little tobacco. We gave them some, & left them. A horse tired. Left two men to bring him on, who reached camp before dark. Encamped near Kanza river.

Tuesday Nov. 16. Branded our tired horse with a stirrip iron, and left him at camp. Encamped on Black paint creek, near an encampment of Indians, one of whom I hired to go and bring on, if he could, the tired horse to the Kanza agency.

Wednesday Nov. 17. Met several Kanza hunters-give all we meet a little tobacco. Encamped on Kageshingah, on crossing crk.

Thursday Nov. 18. Encamped on a small creek near Kanza river.

Friday Nov. 19. Reached the Kanza agency. Obtained corn for our hungry and poor horses- spoke to Clark, the Agent respecting a school, &c. for the Kanzas- Made no definite arrangement. Clark promised to receive the tired horse.

Saturday Nov. 20. Messrs. McCallister & Johnson, Methodist preachers, arrived last night. They purpose establishing a school &c. among the Kanzas. They, or, some others of that society had been here previously. I knew nothing of their intentions until since I spoke to Clark yesterday. They have, also, a few days since, made proposals to the Shawanoes to furnish them with a school, &c. I told them that our Society had made formal proposals to the Sec. War, a year and a half ago, to establish a mission among the Kanzas. Also, that I had spoken to the Shawanoes on my way up, & expected to receive their answer on my way down. But, I wished not to throw any obstacle in their way. They united in supposing there would be no disagreeing between them and us-manifested no solicitude about our propositions, and spake with a good deal of confidence relative to carrying forward their propositions. I think they will not likely do much for the Kanzas. Their circumstances are such as to require the exercise of faith & patient perseverance, in labourious, and often discouraging operations, rather beyond what we can expect from that denomination. 376 THE KANSAS HISTORICAL QUARTERLY where we have business, after he shall have rested and recruited the horses two or three days, and Calvin & I set out by way of Shawanoe Agency, taking two of the stronger of our horses. We had rain-no tent-fixed up a blanket, which partially sheltered us. No grass for our horses-had corn brot. with us from the agency.

Sunday Nov. 21. Passed the new settlement forming by the Delawares on their land. Spent a few minutes with Anderson, their aged principal Chief. He, and his people are much pleased with their new country, as he declared to me. Govt. has not assisted in removal. They, anxious to come set out upon their own resources. Most of the tribe have either arrived, or are on the road. All will be here in the Spring. There is much difficulty, and some scolding among the agents, & superintendent, &c. about furnishing the Delawares. Some hopes had been entertained of profitable business in removing them, that are disappointed, now the Indians have removed themselves. Govt. has not furnished provisions, except to a very small amount, and nothing will be done by the Sec. War, or the superintendent until I make my report, and an appropriation be made by Congress for expenses of that concern.

Monday Nov. 22. Agreeably to my promise gave notice to the Shawanoes that as they recollected what had passed as we went out, and as I had then promised to call on them on my return, I had done so-because I was the same man every day. If they had any thing to say to me, I was there ready to hear. Only Cornstalk & Perry were present-the others were absent from their villages. They replied that, since I had passed Mr. Johnson-(the Methodist) had offered them a school, &c. They had answered him, that schools had been offered them repeatedly. They could not accept all-for there would not be room for them. They had been pleased with the talk I had given them relative to the manner of conducting schools, &c. and I had long been experienced in Indian matters, and they had therefore determined to accept of my offer. (This was not the time that the agent, Cummins, spoke to them for the Methodists, to whom they gave a similar answer.) They then said to me we are pleased with your views of the subject, and with your proposition, and cannot do otherwise than accept your offer- We do now accept it, & that matter is settled. [46]

Major Campbell, the subagent-in whose house we were, and who is my particular friend on this business, was transported with gladness that these two Chiefs had so cordially agreed to have a school, &c. Fish, and others were known to be friendly, and no unwillingness had been feared except from these two Chiefs. Campbell gave them his hand, and a present. I must now look out for missionaries & means, to build up affairs here, as soon as possible. May the Lord provide! Sister Shane is sick-thinks she will not live long-has lately been very unwell,-wept freely when I conversed with her-said in her severe illness, she desired greatly to see me once more in the world, and now her requests had been granted. She did not fear to die, &c. Sick as she was she manifested a laudable solicitude for the establishing of a mission among the Shawanoes. I made myself acquainted with the agency difficulties relative to the removal, and the provisioning of the Delawares, and promised to be the friend of Campbell on this, and some other Indian matters, when I should go to Washington. I also promised to attend to some of Shane's requests. Left Campbell's at 2 o'clock P. M. and lodged in Independence. at 8 o'clock P. M. slept at Young's-

slept at Davis', and on Thursday, Nov. 25. at 8 o'clock P.M. entered the dear circle of my family. For favours to them, and to us who have been absent, let me again erect an Ebenezer. I was absent One hundred and two days.

6. Rice McCoy, eldest son of Isaac McCoy. In his History of Baptist Indian Missions (Washington, 1840), Isaac McCoy wrote, regarding his son's participation in the tour: "From the time of our reaching Fayette, my eldest son had been employed in the practice of medicine, and his prospects were flattering, but he cheerfully consented to gratify my desire to see him labouring in some manner in the Indian country, and took an appointment as assistant surveyor."-p. 404.

7. In March of 1827 Col. Henry Leavenworth was ordered by the War Department to select a site for a cantonment on the left bank of the Missouri river, near the mouth of the Little Platte river. Colonel Leavenworth, however, upon examination of the site suggested, did not find it favorable and chose instead a location on the right bank of the Missouri river. This choice was approved and the post was officially designated Cantonment Leavenworth by Department Order No. 56, of 1827. The primary purpose in stationing troops at this point was for protection of the rapidly increasing trade over the Santa Fe trail. Fort Leavenworth (official designation under Department Order No. 11 1832) figures prominently in the history of the West and the military history of the United States.

8. Near present Glasgow in Howard county, Missouri. The following notice appeared in Niles Register, v. 17 (1819-1820), p. 30: "Chariton, a new town somewhere in Missouri, containing about eighty houses, and several brick buildings are now erecting. A year ago there were only 'five or six unchined cabins' on the town plot."

12. Shawnee medicine-man, Tenskwatawa, known as the Prophet, commander of the Indian forces at the battle of Tippecanoe He removed from Cape Girardeau county, Missouri, to the Shawnee reservation in present Kansas in 1828 and located a town known as Prophet Town in what is now Shawnee township, Wyandotte county. 15. Article 1 of the treaty made and concluded at St. Louis, Mo., June 3, 1825, between William Clark, superintendent of Indian Affairs, commissioner on te part of the United States, and representatives of the Kansas was as follows: "The Kanzas do hereby cede to the United States all the lands lying within the State of Missouri, to which the said nation have title or claim; and do further cede and relinquish, to the said United States all other lands which they now occupy, or to which they have title or claim, lying west of the said State of Missouri and within the following boundaries: Beginning at the entrance of the Kanzas river into the Missouri river; from thence north to the northwest corner of the State of Missouri; from thence westwardly to the Nodewa river, thirty miles from its entrance into the Missouri; from thence to the entrance of the Big emahaw [Omaha] river into the Missouri. and with that river to its source; from thence to the source of the Kanzas river, leaving the old village of the Pania Republic to the west; from thence, on the ridge dividing the waters of the Kanzas river from those of the Arkansas, to the western boundary of the State line of Missouri, and with that line, thirty miles, to te place of beginning." Article 2 provided for a reservation 30 miles in width on the Kansas river.-Treaties Between the United States of America and the Several Indian Tribes, 1778-1837 (Washington, 1837), p. 334.
16. Missing from journal.
17. Maj. William Davenport, Sixth infantry.
18. Maj. John Dougherty received his appointment as Indian agent in January, 1827, and began his work at Cantonment Leavenworth in September of that year.
19. Johnston Lykins (1800-1876), son-in-law of Isaac McCoy, had been associated with him in missionary work in Indiana and Michigan and at this time was planning to continue his labors in the west. He founded the Shawnee Baptist mission in present Johnson county, Kansas, in 1831. The trip referred to was from Fayette, Mo., to Carey, Michigan, where he arrangd for the appraisal of the Baptist mission propety at that place, preparatory to the closing of the mission. 20. Maj. is charged by the executive with the duty of running and marking the lines called for by the treaty with the Delaware. You will instruct the agents who have charge of the Indians, owning the country over which Mr. McCoy will have occasion to travel, to inform them of Mr. McCoy's object; that be is under the protection of the United States, and to require their kind and friendly conduct towards him and his party. I have, & c & c. Thos. L. MCKENNEY. To General Wm. Clark, Superintendent Indian Affairs, & c."-"Indian Removals," 23d Cong., 1st sess., S. Doc. 512, v. 2, p. 8.

23. George Vashon, Indian agent for Cherokees West.

24. Treaty with the Delawares concluded September 24, 1829, ratified March 24, 1831. This was a supplemental article to the Delaware treaty concluded at St. Mary's, Ohio, October 3, 1818, and provided for the cession by the Delawares of all lands in the state of Missouri. George Vashon represented the United States at the treaty.

25. Stranger creek rises in the central portion of present Atchison county and flows in a southeasterly direction, emptying into the Kansas river at present Linwood, Leavenworth county. The stream was named O-keet-sha by the Kansas Indians, the word meaning stranger.

26. Daniel Morgan Boone, son of Daniel Boone, pioneer, was appointed farmer for the Kansas Indians in 1827 and located seven miles west of present Lawrence, on the north bank of the Kansas river, at the Kansas agency.

27. Now called the Delaware river. The stream flows in a southeasterly direction across present Jefferson county emptying into the Kansas river near present Perry.

28. "The first surveys in what is now the State of Kansas were made in 1826-7 by Maj. Angus L. Langham of St. Louis but previously from Chillicothe, Ohio. These were 1st the meanders of the Kansas river from its mouth to a point twenty leagues due west of the western boundary of Missouri as provided by the treaty of 1825 with the Kansas tribe as the east boundary of their reservation thence south about 13 miles to the S. E. corner thereof, then west two hundred miles marking the south line thereof. He passed the winter of 1826-7 on Soldier creek about four miles north of present Topeka and about three miles east [of] the Kaw village of the 'Fool Chief.' He had with him a small guard of infantry detailed from Fort Osage. Cantonment Leavenworth was not established as a military post until 1827. The name 'Soldier Creek' was adopted afterwards in honor of the flag that proudly waved over the Major's shanty and the warlike aspect of the camp . . . . -Letter, John C. McCoy to F. G. Adams, February 9, 1885.

29. Under the terms of the treaty of 1825 with the Choctaw, the sum of six thousand dollars was to be allowed the tribe annually for twenty years for the use of schools. A school for boys was established at Blue Springs, Scott county, Kentucky, under the management of the Baptist church and the sponsorship of Richard M. Johnson. The first students were received in the autumn of 1825. Boys from other tribes were also accepted and for a number of years the institution flourished, but by 1842 the Indians began to withdraw their boys on account of dissatisfaction with the results of the educational plan. Soon thereafter the school closed.

31. Grasshopper river, later known as the Delaware river, was also at this time called Sautrelle river.

32. "Cant: Leavenworth, 22d. Octr. 1830. To Genl. Wm: Clark, Supt. Ind: Affs. Sir, I have the honor to inform you that in obedience to a message that I sent to the Pawnee Republicans, about one hundred of that tribe consisting of their chiefs and head men assembled at this post, on the 24th ult. My object for calling a council of those Indians at this post,/ was to apprise them, that the Government had sent the Rev. Isaac McCoy to run the Delaware lines; and to point him out to them, and advise them how they should treat him, should they meet with him. This I conceived necessary as a precautionary measure, to guard against any difficulty which might possibly ensue, should they meet with his party, without any knowledge of its character. They made professions of friendship in general, and furthermore promised, that if they met with Mr McCoy they would treat him friendly; and also would advise their young men to do the same. They informed me that they met with our Santa Fe traders last summer on the Arkansas, smoked and talked with them friendly. They left here shortly after the Council for their village, apparently much gratified, well pleased with their visit. I thought it the more necessary that I should assemble and talk with the Pawnees, in regard to Mr. McCoy, as the Kanza Indians have recently committed a breach of the treaty of peace between them and the Pawnees, by stealing several horses, and taking one scalp; and supposing it not improbable that the Pawnees would endeavor to retaliate, in which cases their war parties in passing from the Republican to the Kansas village, might possibly fall in with the surveying party, and finding them not far distant from the Kansas village, might without being apprised of their cr chatter seriously interrupt them. After hearing of the conduct of the Kansas, I went to the Kansas Sub Agency; on finding Genl. M. G. Clark Sub Agent absent, I requested of the Kansas a return of the Pawnee horses, which they declined doing. I have not been informed that the Pawnees have made any attempt at retaliation.

Very Respectfully, Your Obt. Servt, Joe. Dougherty, Ind. Agt."

-U. S. Indian Superintendency MSS., v. 6, pp. 58, 57.

33. "The treaty which had fixed the boundary of the Delaware country made no provision for reserving to the use of the United States the site of Fort Leavenworth, and to make the survey according to my instructions would have rendered the site ineligible. I therefore assumed the responsibility of making an arrangement with Quick, who acted in behalf of his people, by which a suitable tract was reserved for the use of te garrison. This measure was afterwards approved by the Secretary of War."-History of Baptist Indian Missions (Washington, 1840), by Isaac McCoy, p. 407.

"The McCoy party arrived at Cantonment Leavenworth in the fall of 1830. . . A feeling of uneasiness . soon became manifest, for very soon it was discovered that no provision had been made for reserving the land upon which the Cantonment stood. In fact, if Issac McCoy had followed his instructions literally, he would have included the Post in the Delaware reservation. However, upon his own initiative, he arranged a conference with the Post Commander, Major William Davenport of the 6th Infantry, and the Indian Commissioner, John Quic. Through arrangements with them, a survey of the land immediately surrounding the Cantonment was made and limits were established generally paralleling the present boundaries."--History of Fort Leavenworth, by Elvid Hunt (Fort Leavenworth, 1926), pp. 39-41.
34. Dr. T. S. Bryant, surgeon of Cantonment Leavenworth.
35. Salt creek flows in a northeasterly direction across present Kickapoo township, Leavenworth county, emptying into the Missouri river.
36. "At frequent intervals along Salt Creek I have found evidences of aboriginal encamp ments, showing that it was a favorite haunt of prehistoric man.
In the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, section 10, township 8, range 22, is a natural basin of perhaps one-half acre in extent, which was evidently at one time either a largely marshy spring or a small lake. It is situated on the east bank of Salt Creek, just south of the /public highway leading to Fort Leavenworth. On the shores of this now dessicated depression have probably been found more aboriginal relics than at any other spot in Salt Creek valley. It was no doubt the site of a workshop connected with the old Kaw village [the lower of two Kansas villages on the Missouri river, both of which had disappeared when Lewis and Clark visited the region in 1804. On the high hill, along what is known as 'Sheridan's Drive,' overlooking this camp site and the whole valley, is a group of ancient mounds, one of which was opened by Mr. McCoy, the government surveyor, in 1830, being the first Indian mound ever explored in Kansas. . . A chain of prehistoric dwelling sites extends the whole length of the Valley, and mementoes of a vanished race are turned up by every plowshare."="Salt Creek Valley," by George J. Remsburg, Leavenworth Times, February 15, 1905.
37. See footnote No. 29.
38. Vermillion creek rises in present Nemaha county, flows across present Pottawatomie county and empties into the Kansas river near present Belvue.

39. The Big Blue river is the largest tributary of the Kansas river. It rises in present Hamilton county, Nebraska, and enters Kansas through present Marshall county; forms the boundary between present Riley and Pottawatomie counties and joins the Kansas at present Manhattan. One hundred miles of its entire length of 250 miles are in Kansas.
40. See "Ferries in Kansas, Part IV-Republican River," by George A. Root, the Kansas Historical Quarterly, v. 3, pp. 240-248.
41. McCoy's reference is doubtless to the Pawnee Indian village thought to have been established in present Republic county, S. 3, T. 2, R. 5w. The surveying party was below this location. John C. McCoy, a member of the party, states in his article "Survey of Kansas Indian Lands," Kansas Historical Collections, v. 4, p. 305: "On the 29th of October we reached the Republican, one hundred and thirty-four miles from Cantonment Leavenworth. This stream was called by the Kansas Indians Pa-ne-ne-tan, or Pawnee river. The river was twelve chains wide where we reached it, at a point near the present town of Clifton, in Washington county. Crossing to the south side, our course took us past near the present site of the town of Concordia. The terminus of our line, one hundred and fifty miles west of the initial points, was in what are now the limits of Smith county, on the top of a ridge west of Oak creek, not many miles from the present town of Cawker City."
42. See "Ferries in Kansas, Part V-Solomon River," The Kansas Historical Quarterly, v. 3, pp. 339-340.
43. McCoy probably intended to add a description of the salt spring but failed to do so and there is only a blank page in the Journal. However, he described it as follows in his History of Baptist Indian Missions, p. 411: "On the Solomon river, a middle branch of the Kauzau, is a salt spring, which is a great natural curiosity. About one hundred yards from the bank of the river, in an extensive level prairie, is a mound of stone, formed by a deep ravine which surrounds it; it is one hundred and seventy yards in circumference at its base, and it rises above the bottom of the ravine thirty feet, and is level on the top, with a diameter of one hundred and twenty feet. The ravine, on one side, is about forty yards wide, and on the other ten. The summit of the mound is about a foot and a half higher than the adjacent plain. No stone of any kind is seen in the vicinity of the place, except that which composes the mound, which appears to be a secondary, shelly, and porous limestone. The sides of the mound, being stone, form a striking contrast with the outer bank of the ravine, which is only earth. The salt water forms a stagnant pool in the centre of the mound, fifty-five feet in diameter, and rising to a perfect level with the summit, so that a wind from any quarter causes the water to run over the opposite side of the basin. About half-way up one side issues salt water, which runs off in a small rivulet into Solomon river. Along this rivulet, and generally on the sides of the mound, salt is chrystallized in such quantities that it might be collected for use. The pool on the top is deep. Solomon river is, by the Kauzaus, called Nepaholla-meaning, water on the hill-and derives its name from this fountain; but the fountain itself is by them called Ne Wôh'kôn'daga--that is, `Spirit water.' The Kansans, Pawnees, and other tribes, in passing by this spring, usually throw into it, as a kind of conjuring charm, some small article of value. Waconda, or Great Spirit Spring, is about two and one half miles southwest of present Cawker City in Mitchell county.

44. Chapman creek, flowing into the Smoky Hill river near present Chapman, Dickinson county.

45. Two Methodist missions were established in what is now Kansas in 1830. The Shawnee Methodist mission was located near present Turner, Wyandotte county. It was moved to present Johnson county in 1839. Thomas Johnson was the first missionary. His brother, William Johnson, was the first Methodist missionary to the Kansas Indians and evidence supports the theory that he began his work among them at the Kansas agency. Marston C. Clark, U. S. subagent at the Kansas agency wrote from that place to U. S. Indian Superintendent William Clark on November 21, 1830: ' . . . Mr. McAllister & Mr. Johnson and myself have selected a site for a school house (near the Agency. Those gentlemen say their school operations will commence at this place in a very short time. I am pleased with those gentlemen, and their views on the subject of teaching Indian children."-U. S. Indian Superintendency MSS., v. 6, pp. 78, 79.

46. There seems to have been a lack of agreement among the Indians themselves on the subject of the proposed mission; also a tendency to accept the proposal of the last one to solicit their consent. Richard Cummins, Indian agent, Delaware & Shawnee agency, wrote/ to U. S. Indian Superintendent William Clark on January 13, 1831:

> "I have the satisfaction to state to you, that agreeable to your wishes expressive in a letter dated the 8th Nov. 1830, handed me by the Rev. Mr. McAllister do Thos. Johnson who were appointed to establish a school among the Shawnee Indians, that we have been able to get the consent of the Chiefs to establish a school among what is called Fish's or Jackson's band. The managers of the institution intend instructing the Indian children the arts of mechanism as well as that of literature. Mr. Johnson is at this time making arrangements, and I think shortly after the winter breaks will have the school in operation. I have great hope, that after this school is got into operation, the Indians within my Agency will not be so much opposed to complying with the wishes of the Government, in the arts of civilization."-U. S. Indian Superintendency MSS., v. 6, p. 96.

THE OLD NORTHWEST CONFEDERACY RE-FORMED IN KANSAS.

The following article is of interest to the history of the Old Northwest Confederacy to which the Delaware belonged. It is taken from William Walker, The Provisional Government of Nebraska Territory, pp. 62-63. It was part of legislative report at the time: "It is well known that for the last hundred years a league has existed between the following tribes, viz: Wyandot, Delaware, Chippewa, Ottawa, Pottawottomie, Shawnee, and Miami. This League unanimously elected the Wyandott the Keeper of the Council fire, where all diplomatic and other important matters involving the interests of the several tribes composing this league were to be discussed. Whether in peace or War this league maintained a unity of mind and action in all important measures. On the happening of any important event interesting to them, it appears from past history, that the Keeper of the Council fire was the member whose duty it was to apprise the members by a confidential running bearing the official wampum. of the nature of the information received.

In pursuance of this understanding mutually entered into, the tribes composing this Confederacy naturally looked to the Wyandott for all official information of importance to them. Thus the principles of this compact were kept up till by the action of the U. S. Gov't the tribes composing the Confederacy removed from the North and East to the west of the Mississippi. This caused some derangement in our intercourse with each other--caused an interruption of the usual interchange of friendly messages. Thus matters continued till the autumn (Oct) of 1848, when the members of the League assembled for the first time in the West and demanded "Where is the Council Fire? The keeper promptly responded: "When I rose from my seat in the East with my face to the West, I snatched the only fire brand yet burning in the Council fire and bro't it with me; and here my brethren I rekindle it in the West. Light the pipe and scour up my dish and Camp kettle again." At this first session West, all the former arrangements of the league were solemnly renewed and two other tribes joined us and agreed to incur the responsibilities and abide by the regulations and joint acts of the league, viz: The Kickapoos and Kansas...The Wyandot thus being formally reappointed the Keeper of the Council fire in the West, the obligation still rests upon him to discharge faithfully those obligations he incurred when originally invested with this mark of distinction. [The October 1848 meeting was probably held at or near Fort Leavenworth.]

Kansas Collection: Kansas Historical Quarterlies

The Pratt Collection

by Esther Clark Hill

February, 1932 (Vol. 1, No. 2), pages 83 to 88
Transcribed by lhn; HTML editing by Tod Roberts digitized with permission of the Kansas State Historical Society.

THE Pratt collection of manuscripts and documents takes its name from that of John G. Pratt, a young missionary-printer who came to the old Shawnee Baptist Mission from Reading, Mass., in 1837, to take the place of Jotham Meeker, who was going farther south in the Indian Territory to found the Ottawa Baptist Mission on the Marais des Cygnes (Osage) river.* These two young men operated the first printing press in Kansas, and there is much mention (and some samples) of their workmanship among the Pratt papers.

The collection, which had lain for years in the attic garret of the old Delaware Mission house (since torn down), was given to the Kansas State Historical Society in 1907 by Rosamond Pratt Burt, a daughter of John G. Pratt. The original mission building was of walnut logs, with hewed edges, and stood, in 1837 (the year of its founding by Ira D. Blanchard and his wife, Mary Walton Blanchard, Baptist missionaries), on the present site of Edwardsville, Wyandotte county, Kansas, at the Grinter crossing of the Kaw river, on the old military road between Fort Leavenworth and Fort Scott. The flood of 1844 broke up the school, and in 1848 John G. Pratt removed the log building to higher ground, putting it up again in its first form, and for fifty years it served as the middle part of the Pratt homestead.

It was from this old mission-homestead that the Pratt collection was removed by George A. Root, a member of the staff of the Kansas State Historical Society. The Society had had some correspondence with Mrs. Burt on the subject. Mr. Root's diary in 1907 records:

"Nov. 5. Called on Mrs. Rosamond Burt, daughter of Rev. John G. Pratt, the Delaware missionary. She gave me several papers to add to the Pratt collection, one being Rev. Pratt's last sermon, and another a photo of him. Mrs. Burt asked me to go down to the old mission at Piper, Wyandotte county, and tell Mrs. Pratt [her sister-in-law, widow of E. H. Pratt, who was living in the old Pratt mission-home] that she was anxious that her father's old papers should be added to the Historical Society collection.

*. See the next article, Some Background of Early Baptist Missions in Kansas, in this issue.

Reached the Pratt home about 7:30; found Mrs. Pratt absent, but a daughter of one of the Journeycakes in charge. She was also looking after the four Pratt children. She got me a supper, saying that I was expected. Mrs. Pratt got back about 9:30, and we had a pleasant chat for an hour or more.

"Nov. 6. Raw and chilly. Good frost. Put in entire day ransacking the attic, third floor, hunting up boxes, papers and manuscripts. Packed a number of curios, a communion set (pewter) globes for studying geography in school room, a cuspidor used by Rev. Pratt and his Indian callers, etc . . . .

"Nov. 7. Finished packing the last of the things I had boxes for this morning . . . . In the afternoon I got a relative of Mrs. Pratt to drive to the depot, where we went with the load of Indian things I brought back with me. There was an Indian-made bookcase, cherry lumber and glass front, which was in the collection. Ran out of nails and had to take the last of the collection to the depot loose, where the station agent, a young girl, kindly offered to procure string and wire and bind them for shipment."

There are, it is estimated, 10,000 papers in all; handwritten and printed, with not a typed line in the lot. There are letters, land grants, allotments, deeds, contracts, government papers and a variety of miscellany, covering a period of more than sixty years, the bulk of them lying between 1837 and 1870. John G. Pratt was not only a missionary-printer, but teacher, preacher, United States

Indian agent, and physician extraordinary to the Indians, in the course of his western life.

Taking it as a whole, the collection falls logically into the following divisions of Pratt's varied activities:

From 1837 to 1844 he was missionary-printer at the Shawnee Baptist Mission in Johnson county.

From 1844 to 1848 he was in charge of the Stockbridge Mission, near Fort Leavenworth. (This was abandoned in the latter year.)

From 1848 to 1864 he was in charge of the Delaware Baptist Mission in Wyandotte county (from which the collection was taken).

From 1864 to 1868 he was United States Indian agent at the old Delaware agency, with headquarters at Leavenworth. He was the last of the Delaware agents, as the tribe removed to the Indian Territory (now Oklahoma) in 1868.

HILL: THE PRATT COLLECTION 85

Other Indian agents and individuals are represented to a lesser extent in the collection, which is broken and in many instances illegible from stains and the wear and tear of the manuscript. The government papers are for the most part intact, and the series fairly in order.

The letters for the first few years are altogether personal; even those from officers of the missionary board in Boston, under whose auspices the Pratts had taken the Indian post, were often pleasantly chatty of mutual acquaintances and interests. What, after all, were these two adventurous young missionaries but babes in the dark woods along the shores of the sullen Missouri river, alone save for other missionary company hardly older than themselves?

The families of both John G. Pratt and Olivia Pratt are well represented in this correspondence. The letters are extremely religious in tone, and those of friends and acquaintances not the less so. Even the younger children of the Evans family caught the solemnity of the elders, and the letters that passed between the young Pratts before their marriage are not only models of propriety, but deeply serious in contemplating their coming separation from home and kindred, and the spiritual importance of the western undertaking. Their very youth made the step the more momentous, for all their high courage. And their inexperience in the wild new country and the perils that may befall them there is never for an instant out of mind with those in the east, who had sent them forth with blessings and prayers and not a few tears.

The reports of the missionary-printer from the beginning of his long correspondence with the secretary of the missionary society in Boston, Dr. L. Bolles, are almost painfully detailed as to the expenditures of the slender funds placed in his hands, and his recital of the hardships and privations of the Indian wilderness. The last penny is faithfully accounted for; the calculations of how much more will be actually needed for bare comforts are stated with an apologetic hesitation.

Practically all the letters of those first years, both from the board and the families and friends, as well as the western Pratts themselves, are written on the old-fashioned, unruled foolscap, once white but now yellowed with age and much handling. There are one or two daintily penned missives on a faded pink paper, from the young ladies of the female seminary which Olivia Pratt had so lately left, but even their cheerful color does not relieve the awful solemnity of their religious tone.

There being no envelopes used in this country until about 1845, the letters are addressed in the middle of the back, or fourth, page. In many instances they were sent by persons traveling west, or tucked in the "missionary barrels" and boxes that were sent from the missionary rooms in Boston to the several stations under their supervision in the Indian Territory of that day. Lists of the articles sent always accompanied the container, and were usually a part of the letters. Homely and useful items, all of them-clothing for the children, which were beginning to arrive in the missionary families, as well as for their elders; bedding and household necessities of the plainest character.

With the removal of the Pratts from the Shawnee Mission to that of the Stockbridge Indians (still under authority from the Boston board) the letters are infrequent from the families and friends, but increase in volume from the mission board as the scope of the work in the west widens. The bookkeeping is somewhat involved and irregular, as the business accounts are almost invariably included with letters, and often on the same page with personal matter. But John G. Pratt remains faithful to detail and conscientious in the smallest expenditure, to the very end of his dealings with his Boston superiors.

In the beginning the salary for the double office of printer and missionary had been $300 annually; on Pratt's taking charge of the Stockbridge Mission, in 1844, this was increased to $400, and by 1859, according to the letters, he was receiving $500 a year.

From 1844 to 1848 there is an appreciable increase in the accountancy contained in the letters, both to and from the board. At times the soul of the conscientious young missionary was sorely tried by the demands made upon him from headquarters. There seems to have been one kind of accounting done there and another at the mission. More than once he writhes, in his letters, at what he deems injustice done him by those to whom he is humanly accountable. Once, indeed, he and Mrs. Pratt gave up the Shawnee Mission and went back to Massachusetts. But that was for barely a year, and in 1841 they had returned to their first charge.

After the abandonment of. the Stockbridge Mission, and the reopening of the Delaware Mission, the letters of various Indian agents begin to increase in this collection. Also those of a certain shrewd commission merchant in St. Louis, R. H. Stone, whose business correspondence is mixed with much dry humor and a bit of Baptist piety. His bills of lading, however, of which there are many as the letters drop into the 1850's, are scrupulously drawn up, and his accounting with his missionary customers is rigidly correct, in figure and in detail.

It is not until 1864 that John G. Pratt was made United States Indian agent for the Delawares and took up his office in Leavenworth. In the following four years the government papers of the collection swell in volume, running into the thousands, of printed form and more or less filled in. These usually follow a series, and considering the length of time the papers have lain in the old walnut log building's attic, it is remarkable that they have retained as much of their physical integrity as they have; and there are few missing numbers in any given series. Treaties, land allotments, reports of Agent John G. Pratt to the government, letters to and from politicians in Washington and elsewhere these form the mass of the papers of his four-year term. That his relations with his charges were almost invariably cordial is richly in evidence all through the collection, both in letters-some from the Indians themselves-and in contracts and treaties made with them.

With his entrance into government service Pratt seems to have left behind him the pressing cares of the missionary and the factional differences that grew up with the new territory. The last years of the letters are devoted to government business: with officials and commissioners of the Indian Department in Washington, superintendents in St. Louis, St. Joseph, Atchison and elsewhere, and with other agents at different stations. There is not, in the official correspondence, a very clear distinction between agents and subagents, and the seat of the superintendency shifts often. In the latter years, too, there was some desultory communication with army men; sometimes Indian guides were wanted; in one instance the Pratts, for all their kindly character, needed the protection of the army from an unfriendly Stockbridge Indian, one Konk-a-pot, whose viciousness aroused the commandant at Fort Leavenworth to a most spirited letter to the Pratts.

After the retirement of John G. Pratt from his duties to the government, in 1868, the letters dwindle down to personal and real estate matters until the time of his death in 1900. The letters of the last of the century are negligible in quantity and in historical value.

The miscellanies of the collection include some irregular church records of the Delaware and Stockbridge church, beginning in 1841 and ending abruptly in 1848, about the time of Ira D. Blanchard's abrupt dismissal from the church and the withdrawal of his ordination.

88 THE KANSAS HISTORICAL QUARTERLY

There are also many fragments to which there are no supporting papers that might add a valuable chapter to the history of this section of those days. Painfully scrawled Indian letters; others purporting to come from the Indians but written in the intelligible and by the intelligent hand of the white man-usually some Indian agent. Many of these leave a speculative interest with the reader as to how much of the first American's demands on the government and the Great White Father (as he is addressed) originated with themselves, and how often they were prompted by the cupidity of the white men.

Two letters, in a class by themselves, are in the year 1855, from a Mrs. C. P. Chapman; one addressed to Commissioner George W. Manypenny, of Washington, and the other to the local Delaware agent, B. F. Robinson. They outline a most ingenuous plan for an Indian school along communistic lines, which is rather startling at that date in the United States and in that particular section. The fact that the proposed school was to be nonsectarian is indicated in so many words, and the inference left that it was to be more cultural than religious, with only women in charge of the boys and girls proposed to be taken, and a single man-of-all-work.

RUSSIAN LENAPE

Believe it or not, but there are Russian Lenape. After all, according to our origin story, the Wallam Olum, we had our roots thousands of years ago in Siberia!

THE WALLAM OLUM (THE RED RECORD)

THE LENNI-LENAPE AND THE "RED RECORD"

The "Red Record" (The Wallum Olum) is not new or a recently discovered piece of ancient history. It was given to the white man in 1820, when its last caretaker presented it to a Dr. Ward, a Moravian missionary and physician who had lived among the Lenni-Lenape for a number of years. Dr. Ward had saved the life of the village historian and, as a show of appreciation, the Red Record was given with the statement, "This is like our Bible".

The Red Record has passed through many hands, but most did not even examine the carved and painted prayer sticks made of bark and wood. Finally, it fell into scholarly hands and the inquiry into its meaning began. As the words and symbols of the Red Record were matched to each other by anthropologists, archaeologists and historians, the impact of these writings began to emerge. Each time understanding was near, the writings were pushed aside. There were a number of reasons for this, as there are for all ancient writings as they are discovered.

Firstly, translating and understanding the Red Record would have destroyed the European position that they had taken this land because it was an uncivilized country inhabited by heathen savages. Secondly, it was believed that these heathen savages did not have the mental capacity to maintain a written history of their people. Thirdly, so little was known of the world described by the Red Record that it was passed off as more Native myths and legends.

In spite of this, the inborn curiosity of the intellectual and learned people of history were fascinated by this mystery. With the aerial photographs of Russia, China, Japan and Africa of World War II, and the later, sophisticated photographs and maps from satellites, connections were made with the Red Record which set about the first serious and scientific examination of its meaning. After more than 20 years of work and study, a translation was completed.

In 1976, David McCutchen, a graduate of the University of California at Santa Barbara and the California Institute of the Arts, was hired to research the history of the Delaware Nation. It should be pointed out that the tribal name "Lenni-Lenape" meant the "Original People". In 1610, Captain Samuel Argall sailed up the Lenape River, and named both the river, and the people living on its banks, the "Delaware" in honor of his patron, Lord De La Warr. From that time on, these people were referred to by outsiders and Europeans as the "Delaware".

In his work, McCutchen came upon The Red Record, the history of its translation, some of the original wooden prayer sticks, and the original words which described the meanings of the carvings. He completed his study as far as he could, and then proceeded to go to the source. He took the results of his research, photographs of the original prayer sticks, and all materials the curators would allow, to Linda Poolaw, the Grand Chief of the Delaware Nation Grand Council of North America in Oklahoma. With Chief Poolaw's assistance, McCutchen was able to fill in the blanks, answer remaining questions and complete the final translation of The Red Record. In 1980, the tribal descendents of the Lenni-Lenape passed a resolution endorsing McCutchen's recreation of the entire Red Record as an accurate re-telling of the history of their people.

As we begin the journey of the Lenni-Lenape, it is important to remember the time frames covered. They did not fly the friendly skies, nor did they take the bus and leave the driving to someone else. THEY WALKED!!

The Red Record begins with the Lenni-Lenape story of the Creation - with Adam and Eve and the Snake of Eden - each with a Native name. Throughout time, the snake has been the Lenni-Lenape symbol for the enemy. The story of man's struggle continues through the Great Flood, and the re-settling of the land after the waters receded. At the time of the re-settling, there came a common understanding shared by all the people that a great body of water lay to their east. It was their destiny to reach that body of water, and so their migration began.

The first scholar to investigate the Red Record estimates that the migration began 1600 years Before Christ. The people set out from their ancestral home located near the border between present day China, Mongolia and Russia. On their journey eastward, settlements, villages and towns of the various inhabitants along their path were encountered. Some were avoided, and some allowed safe and peaceful passage, but there battles and wars to be fought, especially among the great dynasties of China.

The Lenni-Lenape reached the Bering Straight, which was primarily a land bridge with a small strip of swift and treacherous water between them and the shores of present day Alaska. Realizing that they could not cross the water safely, they camped along the shore waiting for the waters to freeze over. When the freeze came, some 10,000 people made the crossing into the North American Continent. As they traveled inland, they encountered other Natives already living in the area. The main body of the migration divided, with some bearing south into the area of British Columbia and the Pacific Northwest, and others continuing deeper into Canada. Their passage through this territory continues to be evidenced today by marked differences in the appearance and customs of the interior Eskimo, and the coastal Eskimo/Inuit.

During their travels, the Lenni-Lenape encountered many Natives already living and working on the land. When they reached fertile areas where the fishing, hunting and farming were good, they would settle for a time, learn the hunting and farming techniques of the people already there, and replenish their strength and their food supplies. During these times of peace and prosperity, their numbers would increase. Each time the main body of the migration would continue their search for the great water in the east, various groups would remain behind because they had become attached to the area and its life. Others would continue southward, and eventually ended up at the mesas and pueblos of the Anasazi to became their peaceful neighbors. This would account for the oriental features found in the remains of some ancient Anasazi as previously discussed. The groups who settled in various parts of the country eventually took other names more descriptive of their lifestyles, or were given different names by neighboring tribes.

The physical environment, and the attitude of the existing inhabitants, greatly influenced the crossing of this continent. Great droughts forced them to move quickly, and great wars stopped them altogether. Two major conflicts are worthy of mention: one in the Pacific Northwest and one in the Mississippi River Valley. The tribes of the Pacific Northwest, at this time in history, were extremely fierce and war-like, and did not look kindly upon the newcomers. They practiced sorcery and black magic, which were hated by the Lenni-Lenape. A great war broke out and the Lenni-Lenape, who were great warriors, prevailed.

The Mississippi River Valley was lush and fertile, and was looked upon by the Lenni-Lenape as a good place to establish a permanent settlement. They followed it downstream to its junction with the Missouri River where they came face to face with the mighty Talega; The Mound builders. Highly sophisticated and intellectual, the center of Talega land was the walled city of Cahokia located near our present East St. Louis. Cahokia was the commercial, political and religious center of the Mound builder culture, and has been described as "a cross between New York, Washington, D.C. and the Vatican".

A message was sent to the Talega leader asking permission for the Lenni-Lenape to settle in their area as friends and allies. Permission for a settlement was denied, but safe passage across their territory was granted. A peaceful crossing was begun, but trouble soon reared its head. Over the generations, the numbers of the Lenni-Lenape had swelled greatly. When the Talega leader saw the thousands of people preparing to cross his land, he panicked. Fearing an invasion, the Talega warriors were ordered to attack, killing those who had already crossed the river. Enraged by this deception, the Lenni-Lenape swore to "Conquer or die", and called upon the Iroquois (with whom they had established a strong bond) for help. Help was granted.

What followed has been described as one of the largest wars ever fought on the ancient continent. One stronghold, called Fort Ancient, had palisade walls 13 feet high and 5 miles long, and could shelter 10,000 people. The war raged over the lifetimes of 4 Lenni-Lenape chiefs before they were finally victorious, driving the Talegas south forever. The Natchez are the descendents of the final remnants of the defeated Talega.

After 9,000 miles, the Lenni-Lenape finally reached that great body of water in the east, and stood on the shores of the Atlantic Ocean in the general vicinity of New Jersey or Delaware. During their migration, their language lay at the root of the Algonquian-speaking people; the most widespread language group in pre-Columbian North America. They were the founding fathers of: The Mohicans; the Nanticokes; the Shawnee; the Ojibwa; The Cree; the Powhatan; the Abenaki; the Massachusetts; the Blackfoot; the Cheyenne; the Munsee; the Yurok; the Wiyot; the Algonkian; the Montagnais; the Arapahoe; the Menominee; the Potawatomi; the Ottawa; the Sauk; the Fox; the Nipmuc; the Narraganset; the Pequot; the Wampanoag; the Montauk; the Illinois; the Conoy, and surely many others not discovered, all of whom tell the same story of creation and migration, all of whom refer to the Lenni-Lenape as "Grandfather", and all of whom defer to the Lenni-Lenape as their ancestral elders.

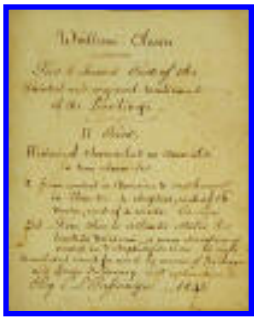
This remarkable story goes far to explain how houses, customs, clothing, art, ceremonies, beliefs, colors and all things great and small can be the same from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Alaska to Mexico. The last entry into the Red Record was in 1620, and reads "Who are they" referring to the white men in great ships they had met at New York Harbor. However, there is an addition to the Red Record, called "The Fragment", which picks up the Lenni-Lenape history in the mid-1600's, and ends in the early 1800's with their forced removal to "Indian Territory". The Fragment also ends with a question — "Shall we be free and happy there"?



The Red Record is the oldest written record of a Native North American people, and spans almost 100 generations. It is not a large book, and is fast reading well worth your time. It may be in the history or research section of your library, or any store that carries Native American books can order it for you. BOOK REVIEW FROM AMAZON.COM

*This book is awesome. March 10, 1999, by a Reviewer from USA. Scientists and Native Americans argue amongst themselves and each other about if/when/how the Indians reached North America. Much of the so-called debate in the popular press is shallow and insipid. Here we have the written pictograph record, along with accompanying orally transmitted songs - and translation, of the Lenni Lenape people, known to us white folks as the Delaware (named for some dead white guy). The Lenni Lenape were acknowledged as "grandfathers" among the Lenape family of tribes, known to us white folks as the Algonquian language group, the largest language group of Native Americans in North America. The Wallum Olum begins with the mythical creation of the world, the entry of evil and strife, and a great flood. Sound familiar? Then, things get interesting, as the tale takes on a more historical character, discussing a migration, perhaps from somewhere near Lake Baikal, north, until the icy sea is reached. Lacking a land bridge to "stumble" (as one white guy put it) across, the Lenape set out in boats and explore a beautiful country to the east. When the icy sea freezes over, 10,000 Lenape cross in an arctic night, after a debate on the subject. They find a North America already populated by humans. They interact with these others as they migrate across the continent - Iroquois, Mound builders, others. And as they migrate, they leave a trail of splinter groups of Lenape peoples, Yurok, Wiyot, Salish, Blackfeet, Cree, Cheyenne, Shawnee, Nanticoke, etc.. Finally they reach Delaware and wait a few hundred years to get "discovered" by whites. Well, I apologize for telling so much of the story, but it is really a fascinating story, and David McCutcheon does a much better job of telling it than I can, so go check it out. In addition to translating the Wallum Olum and including other stories of the Lenni Lenape and other Lenape tribes that illuminate their culture and migration, he also provides plenty of sound analysis tying the story to the various geographical locations I've hinted at. This book blew my mind. I wonder what we'll learn when we take a serious look at the stories of other Native Americans.

The Red Record is now out of print, but used copies can be ordered from: http://www.amazon.com for $10-$15.)

WAMPUM BELTS

The creation and use of wampum belts was important in the Lenape-Delaware culture and history.

Wampum Belt Used in William Penn Treaties

Wampum Belt Presented to William Penn by Lenape Chiefs at the treaty of 1682 at Shackamaxon (present Philadelphia, Pennsylvania) Pennsylvania (National Museum of the American Indian, Smithsonian Institution)

LENAPE LAND SALES, TREATIES, AND WAMPUM BELTS

From: "NOTES AND DOCUMENTS", Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography, of July 1984, pp. 351-356, by: Marshall Joseph Becker. The major support for the research was provided by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Continuing research has been supported by the American Philosophical Society and West Chester University. The author would like to thank L. Mitchell for aid in the preparation of this manuscript. (The article was submitted by Arlene Micucci.)

Even the earliest contacts between European traders and native peoples made the question of land holdings and land sales an important issue. The extensive records pertaining to Lenape sales of land to various European merchants and settlers enable us to document in great detail the processes involved. (1) From these data we also can extract the basic rules reflecting native ideas relating to their land holdings and use. (2) considered in relationship to earlier purchases made by various Swedish and Dutch entrepreneurs, enables us to reconstruct Lenape social groups and their patterns of land use in the seventeenth century. The consistency of these patterns from the earliest documented sale in 1629 until the sales of the 1680s reflects the integrity of these Lenape bands during this period. (3) This evidence also indicates that this native population was not subjected to depopulating and disorganizing epidemics of European diseases.

Each Lenape band consisted of an extended family, perhaps numbering as much as twenty-five or thirty members. Each occupied one or more adjacent river valleys feeding into the Delaware or Schuylkill Rivers. Within its activity area each group foraged in a pattern which enabled it to use available resources minimally supplemented by small stores of maize and beans grown while encamped at summer stations. (4) Land rights to these territories were inherited by the descendants of each band, who had the use of these resources and, collectively, the right to seel these resources.

Prior to Penn's arrival various tracts of land had been purchased from separate Lenape bands.. These parcels varied in size, but on the whole each was quite small and intended only to provide a limited area on which to erect a trading post, farmstead, or small settlement. (5) William Penn's ideas of extensive colonization led him to purchase the rights, or to clear native title, to lands within his Proprietary Colony. This began with systematic purchase of all of the tracts held by these Lenape bands. In each sale all of the adult male owners acknowledged the contract, by signing both halves of an indenture which described the land in question; the terms of the sale, which always granted clear and complete title; the names of all grantors and recipients; and the quantity of the goods or the price to be paid for the stipulated tract. These goods were paid at the time of signing, when seals were affixed to these documents and the payment delivered. (6)

On those occasions when one or more "owners" were not present at this ritual, their acknowledgment of the sale often included by a subsequent signing and sealing of the original document. (7) At the original signing as well as when later additions were made, both native and colonial witnesses signed the indentures. No case of dissent appears to have occurred among the Lenape. Their general willingness to sell land may have been related to the dispersal of the Susquehannocks in 1674/5, a dispersal providing them with access to lands along the Susquehanna River. (8) Also, Penn protected Lenape rights to lands on which they were camped, perhaps mistaking the annually used but relatively transient summer settlements for permanent villages. (9)

The series of purchases by which William Penn cleared Lenape title to all of their former lands involved payment in goods of various kinds. Many of the deeds note that a quantity of wampum was included as part of the purchase payment. This was "cash" wampum rather than "formal" wampum. Wampum belts and short "strings" of wampum of the category which may be called “formal” wampum had a meaning beyond the cash value of the beads incorporated in them. (10) These items did not appear in simple economic transactions such as land sales but were made and presented only when requests were being made for cooperation and joint efforts, as will be noted below.

In general, any formal meeting between a group of Lenape and representatives of the colonial government was called a “treaty.” Therefore, meetings held only to discuss land sales as well as the conclaves held in order to sign transfer documents relating to these sales were termed “treaties,” but were different from meetings at which belts and/or strings of wampum were presented. When the Lenape and colonials met to discuss and to attempt to resolve various issues, presentations (“gifts”) of formal wampum were made. (11) These belts and strings were tendered along with a request; the acceptance of a belt, or string, indicated that the recipients also accepted the obligations to honor that request. For example, when the Lenape made requests to the Proprietors that something to be done about sales of distilled spirits to the Lenape, such petitions were accompanied by a presentation of formal wampum. (12) A presentation of such formal wampum from the Proprietors to the Lenape could occur if the former wished cooperation in warning about hostile natives entering the area. Such a request for help from the Lenape would have been made in conjunction with a presentation of formal wampum.

Although the original sales of land to William Penn do not appear to have involved the use of formal belts or strings of wampum, there are situations related to previous land sales which may have included such presentations. Quite often confirmation treaties were held at which land grantors and their heirs would gather to review and to clarify the terms of previous sales. (13) At such a treaty the government might have presented a belt of wampum to a group of Lenape in conjunction with a request that these people acknowledge and accept the terms of the sale as stipulated on the original indenture. The final confirmation treaty involving Lenape lands in the Delaware Valley was the 1737 “Walking Purchase.” Ironically enough, this was not in actuality a purchase. Nor were the Pennsylvania Lenape among the principle native participants. The various requests made at this treaty, including one for acknowledgment of past land sales, were all accompanied by the presentation of formal wampum. (14)

The well-known William Penn wampum belt, if presented to Penn or some other official by the Lenape or any other native group, may have been made and given in conjunction with any of a number of possible requests. The colonial documents include numerous references to meetings or treaties at which strings of wampum were presented and many at which the more significant “belts” exchanged hands. With only a few notable exceptions do we have any idea what the specific belts presented on any given occasion actually looked like. (15) Often the width of a belt (the number of rows of wampum) is stated, but the designs, if any, are rarely described. Of interest in determining the configuration of any belt is the problem of longevity for these items. Relatively few examples appear to have survived. Native recipients appear to have disassembled most belts, probably after some interval, to use individual beads, or to fashion yet another belt. Colonial recipients seem to have done much the same with the old belts, with the result being the infrequent survival of any of the earliest examples.

The survival in the hands of William Penn's family of this single example of a wampum belt does suggest that it held special significance in the history of the Proprietary colony, but this belt can be attributed to no specific event. The sale of lands on which central Philadelphia now stands was but one of several "treaties" negotiated in the early days of the colony, and not one is clearly associated with the presentation of a formal belt of wampum. Until a specific reference can be found which describes the Penn wampum belt and the original context of its presentation, we can only assume that at best this belt was but one of many received by the Proprietor or his heirs over the years.

FOOTNOTES:

1). Many of the numerous deeds to lands owned by the Lenape are referenced in several different places, but no one complete listing has ever been published. The Penn deeds are the best recorded but most of the others, when noted, often are abstracted and only in the most general way. Examples of these deeds may appear in approximately complete form when they are short in length. Longer transactions, listing grantors, the specific area sold, the quantities of goods paid, the colonial grantees, plus both native and colonial witnesses and often ancillary appendages, do not appear completely and correctly transcribed. Some colonial signatories made only their marks Transliterations of the native names continues to be problematical to researchers interested in these records.

Among the sources noting these deeds are the Pennsylvania Archives, 1st Series, ed., Samuel Hazard (Philadelphia, PA 1852-1854), I, 47-48, 62-68, 92-96, 116-117, 125-125, 133-134,; II, 33-37. Hereinafter, Pennsylvania Archives. See also, the Colonial Records of Pennsylvania, II, 9-12; III, 320-330; IV, 338-340, 346-347. Hereinafter, Colonial Records.

Complete transcriptions of several deeds also appear in William Penn's Own Account of the Lenni Lenape or Delaware Indians, Albert Cook Myers, ed. (1970), Revised edition, Somerset, New Jersey. Hereinafter William Penn's Own Account. A listing of the 43 deeds (land transfers) involving Lenape land sales to the Proprietors of Pennsylvania appear in the Colonial Records, XIII, 461-471.

Many of the deeds from New Jersey natives are available in transcription in the New Jersey Archives in Trenton. William Nelson, Personal Names of Indians of new Jersey (1904, Peterson, New Jersey) culled these documents for native names, but we do not know from his publication if these individuals appeared as grantors or witnesses.

This program has not been tested since the difficult chore of transcribing most of the deeds and the putting the information into a computer lies before us.

3). The earliest land sale to the Dutch in this region was Gillis Hossertt's purchase of lands in the area of Swanedale, now central Delaware. This document was first published by A. R. Dunlap, "Dutch and Swedish Land Records Relating to Delaware," Delaware History, 6, No. 1 (March, 1954), 27-28. Although some believe that the grantors of this land, known as Ciconicins, were members of one Lenape band, I now believe that the Coconicin were the peoples immediately south of the Lenape, whose southern border was at Old Duck Creek. 5). An example of one of the many Lenape land sales made before 1681, and one in which only a limited tract was conveyed, was negotiated on September 25, 1646. This deed was recently published. See Charles T. Gehring, translator and editor, New York Historical Manuscripts: Dutch, XVIII-XIX of the Delaware Papers (Dutch Period), Baltimore (1981), 15-17.

6). Several of the Penn deeds recorded in the Pennsylvania Archives also have been published by Myers (William Penn's Own Account), 338 ff., as noted in note1. Myers selected many of the most complete and elaborate of these documents.

7). Certain deeds have added texts indicating that one or more rightful owners of land were not present at the granting of a native tracts to colonial purchasers. In these few cases, all of which appear to have involved lands of the Jersey Indians, an additional payment was made. See Marshall Becker, "The Lenape of Southern New Jersey," New Jersey History (in press).

11). Perhaps the best documented example of wampum belt presentations occurred during July of 1756 when concerns about the French and Indian War were great. Prior to a "treaty" (meeting) between the famous Teedyuscung (A. F. C. Wallace, King of the Delaware, Teedyuscung, Philadelphia, 1949), and the English, Teedyuskung had "made an Exceeding large Belt of Wampum." Teedyuscung circulated it widely along with a request for aid from other native groups. On 29 July, Teedyuscung was presented with two belts and a string of wampum by the Governor of Pennsylvania along with a request to release prisoners. Teedyuscung replied by presenting a belt, described in the minutes (Colonial Records, VII, 207-213), along with his own request. This belt is one of the first known to include human figures, and it postdates Penn's treaties by many years.

12). Native elders frequently asked Colonial officials to control the sale of alcoholic drink to their people. These "requests" were delivered at formal meetings, and the requests always were accompanied by the presentation of some wampum, usually in the form of a "string" of the beads.

13). At several meetings between Lenape and colonial officials note was made of previous land sales. When belt or strings of wampum were presented at such meetings the exchange indicated some current request and not a payment for past sales.

14). At the Confirmation Treaty of 1737 Manawkyhickon, speaker for the "Delaware," presented the Proprietor with a small belt of wampum; see Pennsylvania Archives, I, 540. This suggests that the Lenape are making a petition at the same time that they were confirming earlier land sales made to Penn or the Proprietors.

15). Four wampum belts, among the thirty-two belts prepared by the Lenape for presentation to the Five Nations in 1712, are known because the colonial scribe made sketches of them in the margin of the minutes of a meeting at which they were discussed. The Colonial Record, II, 547-548, provides the published version of this meeting, but this version lacks these marginal drawings. William A. Hunter noted the figures during his research and pointed them out to the author. These four belts have only simple diagonal bands such as appear on the ends of the "William Penn" wampum belt. Presumably, these four were the most elaborate of the thirty-two belts in this group as they are the largest and first to have been noted.

Aside from the elaborate belt held in the Treasury at Chartres Cathedral, a late seventeenth century gift, we have very few belts for which dates can be established. Figures do not appear on any of the known earlier belts. Quite possibly the use of figures did not develop as a decorative technique for weaving these belts until after the death of William Penn (see footnote. 11).

WYANDOTTE COUNTY, KANSAS

Allotment Maps and Lists (New) Wyandotte Gazette /Kansas City Gazette Grinter Place Schools

Wyandotte County, Kansas is a relatively new page. I am yet uncertain as to exactly what I will put in it. Be assured, that there will be all kinds of interesting items. So much of what happened in the Lenape-Delaware Experience was in this county that is seems worthy of an entry by itself. As a starter, I am putting in some historic maps and some general county history. This page is not intended to be the "History of Wyandotte County, Kansas History," but rather a view of the county as it related to the Lenape-Delaware and their extended families; and to their Native American Neighbors, the Kickapoo to the north; the Wyandotte (Huron to the east; the Shawnee to the south; and to the families of the Lenape-Delaware, the Kansas Delaware, who remained in the area. I will try (not promise) to provide some better order to this page later. For the time being, I am stuffing in things I find of use and interest. The Wyandotte County Gazette Extracts take up sufficient space that I have made them a sub-folder. Similarly, I have created separate sub-folders for Schools and the Grinter Place. Kansas City, Kansas Historic Landmark: January 26, 1983

Register of Historic Kansas Places: February 13, 1982

The first church to be erected on this site was of logs, and was constructed in 1840, some eight years after the Methodist mission to the Delaware was founded. The Delaware Indians had come to what is now Wyandotte County beginning in 1830. For a century they had been pushed west, from Pennsylvania to Ohio, from Ohio to Indiana, and from there to southern Missouri. They naturally hoped that each new home would be permanent, but had learned long before to distrust the American government and its promises.

On September 24, 1829, the Delaware then in southern Missouri signed a treaty agreeing to leave the state and move to Indian Country, in what is now Kansas. They were to receive support for the move, one year's provisions thereafter, erection of a saw and grist mill within two years, and an additional permanent annuity of $1000. In addition, thirty-six sections of their best lands in Missouri were to be sold to provide a school fund. Experience had taught the Delaware to be cautious, so the treaty was to be valid only after the examination and approval of the new lands in Kansas. Final approval was signed by a Delaware delegation at the confluence of the Kansas and Missouri Rivers on October 19, 1829, after they had examined the proposed reserve. After months of preparations, the first party of Delaware emigrants, 61 individuals with two wagons and many horses, led by their long-time Principal Chief, Captain William Anderson, arrived in their new home on December 1, 1830. They were followed within a few days by thirty more families, but the last Delaware to remove to Kansas did not arrive until the summer of 1832.

The new Delaware Reserve consisted of all of what is now Wyandotte County north of the Kansas River, substantial portions of Leavenworth and Jefferson counties, and a ten-mile wide outlet strip extending some two hundred miles to the west for access to the buffalo hunting range. (The area south of the Kansas River was part of the Shawnee Reserve, established in 1825.) Despite this sizeable area, the principal Delaware settlements were in western Wyandotte County and southern Leavenworth County, often with substantial cabins and well-tended farms. There were also several towns and villages, the chief of which (prior to the flood of 1844) was Anderson's Town, on the site of the present Edwardsville. The eastern part of Wyandotte

County, which the Delaware would subsequently sell to the Wyandot Indians in 1843, remained largely uninhabited. The Rev. Thomas Johnson had founded the Shawnee Methodist Mission south of the Kansas River in November 1830. Earlier in that year, he had been assigned to the new Shawnee mission, and his brother William to the Kansa, by the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The first volume of the Rev. Isaac McCoy's The Annual Register of Indian Affairs, published at the Shawnee Baptist Mission by the Rev. Jotham Meeker in January, 1835, lists 1831 as the date of the founding of the Delaware Methodist Mission, and this founding is usually credited to the Johnson brothers jointly.

The Indian Mission District was created by the Missouri Conference on September 17, 1832, with the Rev. Thomas Johnson as Superintendent of the District, the Rev. Edward T. Peery assigned to the Shawnee Methodist Mission, and the Revs. William Johnson and Thomas Markham assigned to the Delaware. It is this date of 1832 that is most often given for the founding of the church and cemetery, but this is almost certainly incorrect. Local church tradition, adding to the confusion, ascribes the founding to Thomas Johnson in May 1832. The confusion stems in part from the fact that the original mission building, like all Methodist missions to the ndians, was primarily a school. It also furnished space for religious services as needed, but a separate church building would normally not be built until the congregation had grown to sufficient size to warrant it.

This first mission building, as distinct from the church, originally lay somewhere in the area between Anderson's Town and the Grinter ferry. The Rev. Edward T. Peery was assigned to the mission from 1833 to 1837, and was replaced by the Rev. Learner B. Stateler on October 9, 1838. Late in that year, or early the next, Rev. Stateler relocated the mission school to a new building in the vicinity of the present South 78th Street and Speaker Road, near Stony Point South Elementary School. The Shawnee Indian Manual Labor School was opened in October of 1839 under the supervision of the Rev. Thomas Johnson, and from that point on the Methodists began to consolidate their educational efforts at the new school. In February, 1844, the Delaware agreed that their school fund for the next ten years would go to the manual labor school, and nothing more is recorded of the Delaware Methodist Mission school as a separate entity.

By 1834, the congregation of the Delaware Methodist Mission church had forty members. This number fluctuated greatly over the next twenty-five years, but the average stood between fifty and sixty. It is uncertain if there was ever a separate church building at a prior location, but the first church at the present site was onstructed in 1840. (The distance between church and school, some three and one-half miles, was not unusual, as they were largely separate operations.) The ewed-log structure was dedicated on July 3, 1840, by the Rev. Thomas Johnson, acting as Superintendent of the District.

This first building stood on the southeast corner of the property, where the parking lot and Sunday school wing are today. This first church burned in 1844, and was soon replaced by a frame building on the same site. The new church measured approximately forty by sixty feet and was painted white, which was apparently nough of a novelty at this date to cause the building to be called the White Church thereafter. The church cemetery was located to the northwest of the building. It was the burial place of many of the most notable members of the Delaware Nation, including the Ketchum family, as well as Isaac Mundy (1814-1858), the longtime acksmith and government paymaster for the tribe.

One of the earliest burials of which any record remains is that of Captain Ketchum, Principal Chief of the Delaware Nation, in July of 1857. At the time of his death at the age of 77, he had been a church member for 22 years. The Ketchums also played a prominent role in the split of the congregation in 1845, when the national Methodist Episcopal Church was divided on the issue of slavery. The Indian Mission Conference, which had just been organized the previous year, chose to go with the southern division and thus the newly built church and its missionary became part of the new Methodist Episcopal Church South. Most of the Delaware congregation ollowed their missionary into the South church, including the Rev. James Ketchum, the first ordained minister in the Nation. However, his brother the Rev. Charles Ketchum, a deacon and noted orator, led a portion of the congregation in adhering to the parent church. Where this separate congregation met, and whether or not they had their own church building, has never been adequately determined. Despite the division, the two brothers were subsequently buried side-by-side in the cemetery.

In anticipation of the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Act, which would open much of Kansas to white settlement, both the Shawnee and the Delaware were ersuaded to sign new treaties with the government, giving up lands that were supposed to have been theirs “forever.” On May 6, 1854, the Delaware signed a treaty giving up their western outlet and substantially reducing the size of their reserve, to 275,000 acres. (The northern boundary of the Diminished Reserve, as it was called, eventually became part of the boundary between Wyandotte and Leavenworth Counties.) Then in the Treaty of Sarcoxieville on May 30, 1860, the Delaware were 1 persuaded by the government to take their land in severalty as provided for in the 1854 treaty, effectively dissolving the reservation. Each tribal member was allotted 80 acres, and 40 acre tracts were set aside for both Methodist churches. The unallotted balance of the reserve was to be sold to the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railway (later to become the Kansas Pacific) at $1.25 per acre. The treaty was protested by a substantial number of Delaware, but to no avail.

Still not satisfied, in a treaty signed at Leavenworth a year later between the Delaware and the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western’s attorney, Thomas Ewing, Jr., the railroad was able to secure title to the Delaware lands with a mortgage in place of a cash settlement. The railroad issued bonds to pay for the land, using 100,000 acres as security, then offered the remaining 123,000 acres for sale at $20 to $50 an acre. This allowed a profit of up to $3,000,000 without the railroad investing a cent of its own money.

During the Civil War, the Delaware repeatedly demonstrated their loyalty to the Union. Delaware volunteers served with Fremont in southern Missouri in the fall of 1861, and joined Col. William Weer’s Indian expeditionary force to the Cherokee Nation in 1862. At one point, Delaware enlisted in the service of the Union numbered 170, out of 201 eligible men between the ages of 18 and 45. The government in turn agreed that the Delaware could remain on their Kansas reserve, and promised to build a school and restore stolen tribal funds (neither of which was done). A report drafted in September 1864 by the Delaware Indian Agent, the Rev. John G. Pratt, stated that there were 1,065 members of the Delaware Nation resident on the Reserve, with holdings of substantial value, but noted, “The Delawares are affected by the unsettled conditions of the country. Many of them are in the army. Their families are consequently left without male assistance.”

Demoralized, cheated out of much of their land, and their tribal existence in danger, the Delaware signed a new treaty on July 4, 1866, in which they agreed to sell their remaining lands to the Missouri River Railroad Company (Missouri Pacific) for $2.50 an acre and remove to the Cherokee Nation in Indian Territory. (The Delaware treaties are an excellent example of how the term “being railroaded” originated.) The move was made in the winter and spring of 1867-1868, with much hardship and numerous deaths. One hundred and seventy-five Delaware chose to give up their tribal relations, become United States citizens, and retain their 80-acre allotments in Wyandotte and Leavenworth Counties. The White Church and its cemetery also remained, and continued an active existence as a Southern Methodist church.

A small community including a school and a dozen or so houses had gradually grown up around the church, and by 1870 this community was itself being called White Church, a label which persists to this day. For a while the church building was shared with a third congregation, the White Church Cumberland Presbyterian Church, organized in April 1869. The group continued to worship at the White Church until 1883, when their own building was completed near the present 112th and Parallel. The original White Church was destroyed by a tornado on May 11, 1886. Its ruins were still scattered about the area two years later, but the small congregation lacked the funds to build a replacement. Instead, for the next 20 years the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the Methodist Episcopal Church both met in the adjacent school. The question of property titles in the former Delaware Reserve was often confused and the subject of much litigation. As a result, the Methodist Episcopal Church South never did have a full title to the site of the old White Church (its 40 acre allotment under the treaty of 1860 was apparently elsewhere). Instead, it had only managed to secure a title to an undivided one half 2 interest in the acre on which the church originally stood, excluding the cemetery. In 1901 Robert Wise, who owned the adjoining land to the north and west including the Delaware Indian cemetery, proposed to the church to deed to it the ground on which the cemetery was located in exchange for its undivided one half interest in the acre on which the old church had stood. This was accepted and the ownership of the cemetery tract passed to the church while Mr. Wise took title to the old church site. Shortly thereafter, in 1904, the congregation was able to secure a loan from the Methodist Episcopal Church South building fund. The church then hired W. W. Rose, the most prominent architect of that period in Kansas City, Kansas, to design a new building. The new church was small but impressive, a simple ectangle in plan with an entry surmounted by a bell tower projecting from the eastern side of the main block. The exterior was carried out in roughly dressed stone masonry with wide joints. Corner buttresses, Gothic arched openings, and a subdued machicolation at the top of the bell tower formed the only decorative elements. The windows, however, were beautiful examples of stained glass work, and were dedicated to the memory of the Methodist missionaries who had served the Delaware. The Memorial White Church, as it was called, was dedicated on July 29, 1906. A cemetery association was organized in 1914, and the church trustees deeded the west 152 feet of their new site to this organization.

The Delaware Indian Agent, Thomas B. Sykes, reportedly tracked one chief down on a buffalo hunt and forced him to sign. He was also accused of getting three of the chiefs drunk in order to secure their signatures.

In the 1930s, the church property went through a number of changes. On November 4, 1931, the congregation voted to withdraw from the Methodist Episcopal Church South and subsequently reorganized as a Community Church. The trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South deeded the church property to the new church organization on June 10 of the following year for the sum of $600, ending 100 years of Methodist history. And on February 5, 1934, the widow of Robert Wise deeded the property he had acquired in 1901 back to the church for a park and playground to be known as Wise Memorial Park. The original church site, the new church, and the Delaware Indian cemetery were thus rejoined under a single ownership.

Further changes have occurred in subsequent years, but the integrity of the third church and the cemetery remain largely unimpaired. A kitchen and social hall were added to the west of the church by architect J. G. Braecklein in 1933-34, carrying the building up to (and possibly beyond) the cemetery line. (One source states that the addition was not carried out until 1945, and that a number of graves were moved at this time.) The Wise Memorial Park was converted to church use when a Sunday school wing was constructed to the south of the west addition in 1954 and 1965, with a parking lot to the east. The congregation changed its affiliation once more, and is now the White Church Christian Church (Disciples of Christ). The church and cemetery were placed on the Register of Historic Kansas Places on February 13, 1982, and nominated to the National Register as well. Unfortunately, the National Register nomination was rejected by the Department of the Interior on the grounds of questionable historic significance, a decision surely at odds with all that has occurred here over the past 150 years.

Wyandotte County

Moses Grinter was the first white settler in the bounds of what is now Wyandotte county. He located near where the station of Secondine now stands, in 1831, and lived there till his death in the fall of 1878.

In May, 1843, Silas Armstrong and George Clark, with their families, and Miss Jane Tilles, now Mrs. William Cook, came to this section to select a reservation for the Wyandottes, who were to be removed from Ohio. Mr. Armstrong was also to build a trading store for the nation, which he did. The town of Armstrong was named after this Silas Armstrong.

In May, 1832, a mission school was established among the Delaware Indians, near the white church, by Rev. Thomas Johnson, a Methodist minister.

In 1837, John G. Pratt located on Section 10, Town. 30, Range 23, about 16 miles west of Wyandotte City [now Kansas City], where he still resides. He established a Baptist mission among the Delawares. Mrs. Pratt is still living at the old place, and has never visited either Wyandotte or Leavenworth. Mr. Pratt has published several hymn books in the Delaware language, one of which was as printed at the Wyandotte Herald office. Mr. Pratt was appointed agent for the Delawares by President Lincoln. One of his sons married a daughter of Charles Journeycake, a well known Delaware chief. His oldest daughter is the wife of Col. Sam. Black, of Leavenworth.

On the 31st of July, 1843, the first party of the Wyandottes came to this section, and, with them, a number of whites; of these, there are still living, Mrs. Lucy B. Armstrong, Miss Anna H. Ladd and Mrs. Lydia B. Walker. Mrs. Wm. Cook, who came in the May previous, is also still alive.

Hiram N. Northrup, now a leading banker and prominent citizen of Wyandotte, located here in 1844. He married Miss Margaret Clark. This marriage was the first in the county, and was celebrated at the Methodist Episcopal parsonage, by Rev. James Wheeler. Miss Clark was a member of the Wyandotte nation, and, by this marriage, Mr. Northrup was adopted as a member of that nation, and was one of the most prominent and trusted men in this section. In 1855, the Wyandottes made a treaty with the Government, by which their lands were divided in severalty, and most of them became citizens, the heads of families being allowed to sell their lands; as soon as this was done, white settlers came in rapidly.

On the 2d of September, 1854, a convention was held at Wyandotte, on the spot where Dunning Hall now stands, at which a provisional government was formed for the Territory. At this convention, William Walker, a Wyandotte Chief, was appointed Provisional Governor; Matthew R. Walker, Probate Judge, and George I. Clarke, Secretary. Col. Russell Garrett and Isaiah Walker are the only delegates to that convention now known to be living.

On the 8th of April, 1856, two churches, which had been built under the auspices of the Methodist church, at Wyandotte, were burned down. Mrs. Lucy B. Armstrong was teaching a school in one of these churches at the time. The first school opened in the county was taught by John B. Armstrong, in a building standing on the east side of Fourth street, between Kansas and Nebraska avenues, in Wyandotte.

The first frame building in the county was the Methodist parsonage, erected in 1844, in the northern portion of Wyandotte City. Its first occupant was Rev. James Wheeler. The first mill in the county was erected in 1852, by Mathias Splitlog. It was run by horse power, and was located where the residence of the late Hon. S. A. Cobb stands, on what is called Splitlog's hill. The first jail in the county was erected by the Wyandottes, near the Council house, in 1848. Its first occupant was locked up for being drunk. In those days, when a woman got drunk her head was shaved; while a man was imprisoned.

Early in the spring of 1857, George W. Veale, now of Topeka; V. J. Lane, now editor of the Wyandotte Herald; Charles Robinson, now of Lawrence; A. D. Richardson, author of "Beyond the Mississippi;" John M. Walden, now agent of the M. E. Book Concern, at Cincinnati; S. C. Smith, who was private secretary of Gov. Robinson; P. T. Colby, appointed U. S. Marshal by President Buchanan; Fielding Johnson, agent for the Delawares; Alfred Gray, who was the first Mayor of Quindaro; M. B. Newman, Perley Pike, Charles Chadwick, Morris Sherman and Owen C. Bassett, located at Quindaro. At about the same time, Col. Dan Killin, now of Miami county; Dr. F. Speck, at present Mayor of the city; E. L. Buesche, John E. Zeitz, Hester A. Halford, Mrs. J. W. Huskins, Nicholas McAlpin, Dr. J. P. Root, Col. S. W. Eldridge, L. H. Wood, Thomas J. Barker, John M. Funk, M. W. Delahay, Wm. Y. Roberts, N. A. Rheinecker, Col. J. R. Parr, C. S. Glick, George D. B. Bowling, Joseph Hanford, Dr. G. B. Wood and others, settled at Wyandotte. The first postmaster at Wyandotte was Thomas J. Barker; he used to bring the mail on his back from Kansas City to his office. There have been only four postmasters in the city, altogether. These were Mr. Barker, R. B. Taylor, E. T. Vedder, and the present incumbent, A. D. Downs, who was appointed by President Johnson.

A steam ferry was established at Quindaro in 1857, and one at Wyandotte in 1858. Neither of these are now in existence. The first steam flouring mill was built in 1858, by McAlpine & Washington. Silas Armstrong and Matthew R. Walker erected the first brick buildings in Wyandotte: the first, at the corner of Minnesota and Fifth streets, afterwards the Eldridge House, which was burned in 1865; the other is still standing on Third street.

The first bridge built across the Kaw river was erected in 1858, by private subscription; it was located about three miles above Wyandotte, and cost $15,000. In 1860, a tornado passed over this section, which tore out one span of this bridge, and the remainder soon disappeared.

In 1859, Wyandotte county was formed from territory belonging previously to Leavenworth and Johnson counties, and the first election under the new organization was held on the 20th of February of that year, at which J. W. Johnson was elected Probate Judge, Marshall A. Garrett, County Clerk; W. L. McMath, County Attorney; Samuel E. Forsythe, Sheriff; Robert Robitaille, County Treasurer; V. J. Lane, Register of Deeds; J. B. Wilburn, Superintendent of Public Instruction; Cyrus L. Gorton, Surveyor.

The first bank in the county was established by Davis & Post, in 1857. It was called the Exchange Bank. The first store established after the county was open to settlement, was by Barker & Walker.

In February, 1857, Colby & Parker opened the first hotel in the county; it was at Quindaro, in a building five stories high, and 60 by 80 feet. The first brick church built in the county, after it was opened for settlement was erected at Quindaro by the Methodists in 1857. The first survey for a railroad was made from Quindaro to Lawrence under the charter of the Missouri River & Rocky Mountain Railroad Company. The first grading for a railroad in Kansas was done at Wyandotte on the Kansas Valley Railroad. This was about twenty feet higher than the present road bed of the Kansas Pacific. The Kansas Pacific Railroad was put in operation in 1863. The first locomotive was called the Wyandotte. The Missouri River Railroad was put in operation in 1866.

In 1867, the county built a fine wooden bridge across the Kaw about two miles above the town of Armstong, at a cost of $165,000. There is also a fine iron bridge across the Kaw, connecting Wyandotte with Kansas City, Kansas, which cost $62,500. A street railway from the center of Wyandotte City to the State line of Missouri, a mile and a half long, was put in operation in 1873.

The convention that framed the present State constitution met at Wyandotte, July 29, 1859. The hall in which its meetings were held was afterwards used as quarters for the first Kansas regiment raised for the late war. It was a four-story building. The regiment moved out of it at half past ten on the morning of June 1, 1861; at twelve o'clock the same day the building tumbled into a heap of ruins. At the time it fell, Capt. James H. Harris was in it, with nineteen recruits, some of whom were so seriously injured that they afterwards died, though none were killed outright.

For the last five years, the growth of the county has been a substantial one, and the improvements of the solid character needed by its rapidly increasing business. Population in 1860, 2,609; in 1870, 10,015; increase in ten years, 7,406; population in 1875, 12,362; increase in five years, 2,347; population in 1878, 13,161; increase in eighteen years, 10,552. Rural population, 6,449; city or town population, 6,712; per cent. of rural to city or town population, 49.

POPULATION of 1878, by Townships and Cities.

Wyandotte City	4,209	-----	-----	-----	-----

Face of the Country. - Bottom land, 20 per cent.; upland, 80 per cent.; forest (Government survey), 25 per cent.; prairie, 75 per cent. Average width of bottoms, one to two miles; general surface of the country, undulating and bluffy.

Timber. - Timber abounds to a greater or less extent throughout the county; the entire county was formerly heavily timbered, except the extreme northern limit. Varieties: cottonwood, walnut, oak, hickory, sycamore, pecan, hackberry, etc.

Principal Streams. - The Missouri forms the northeastern boundary of the county, flowing in an easterly and southerly direction; the Kansas river forms part of the southern boundary, then flows north and east into the Missouri at Wyandotte; each has numerous tributaries well distributed through the county. The county abounds in splendid springs; good well water obtained at a depth of from 20 to 50 feet.

Coal.- For the object of testing the practicability of reaching coal at Wyandotte, boring was commenced in 1875, under the direction of a company organized for that purpose. The diameter of the bore is 4-1/2 inches. At the depth of 250 feet, gas was struck. A constant issue of gas has escaped since it was reached, in May, 1875. It is estimated that 10,000 cubic feet of gas escape hourly, affording 240,000 feet every 24 hours; a sufficient quantity, it is estimated, to light a city of double the population of both Wyandotte and Kansas City. The boring has reached salt water, and the escaping gas forces up a constant stream of this water to the height of from 12 to 15 feet. The gas roars like the escape of steam from an engine, and when ignited, as it has been at night, a continual column of flame, of several feet in diameter, is seen shooting into the air to the height of from 30 to 40 feet. This gas has been, as yet, utilized only in an experimental way. A two-inch pipe conducts a sufficient quantity of it to the house of a Mr. Wilderman, to supply all needed light and fuel. The engine which is used in continuing the boring for coal is constantly run by the use of this gas as its only fuel. The gas burns with a strong, clear, white flame, and is free from sulphurous smell. The salt water yields 4-1/4 ounces of salt per gallon of water; the salt being free from impurities. At the depth of 500 feet, coal had not yet been reached.

Building Stone, etc. - Fine quarries of white magnesian limestone extend for five miles along the Kansas river - it is similar to the Cottonwood Falls stone; also, an excellent quality of blue limestone for building purposes. The abutments and piers of the Kansas Pacific Railway bridges built the present season near Wyandotte are constructed of this stone.

Railroad Connections. - The Kansas Pacific Railway runs through the county, following the north bank of the Kansas river; principal stations, Wyandotte, Armstrong and Edwardsville. The Missouri River Railroad (an extension of the Missouri Pacific Railroad), follows the south bank of the Missouri river to Leavenworth and Atchison; principal stations, Wyandotte, Quindaro, Pomeroy, Barker's Tank and Connor.

Agricultural Statistics. - Acres in the county, 97,920; taxable acres, 90,577; under cultivation, 43,281.12; cultivated to taxable acres, 47.78 per cent.; increase of cultivated acres during the year, 3,525.87.

LARGE YIELD. - Statement by J. H. Hollingsworth, Connor Station:

Potatoes. - I planted one acre of rich sandy upland with Climax potatoes, in the middle of April. The land is in Section 13, Township 10, Range 23. The crop was ploughed twice and hoed once, being planted in drills about 12 inches in the row and 3 feet the other way. I harvested them from the 1st to the 15th of September, the produce of the acre being 200 bushels; the cost of producing being $4.50.

Value of Garden Produce, Poultry and Eggs Sold during the Year. - Garden produce, $17,784; poultry and eggs, $7,404.

Shawnee township: steam saw mills, 2, capital invested, $1,000; steam-power rolling mill, capital, $80,000.

THE KANSAS ROLLING MILLS. - These mills are located at Rosedale, in Wyandotte county, about four and one-half miles from Kansas City. They were built in 1875, the machinery being brought from Decatur, Illinois, and operations were commenced in November, 1875. There is now employed a force of 275 men; but the pay-rolls frequently show as many as 325 names. The works are under the immediate direction of Ira Harris, Manager and Treasurer of the company. A. B. Stone, of New York City, is President; W. H. Harris, of Cleveland, Ohio, Vice-President; E. V. Wilkes, Secretary, and D. S. Mathias, Superintendent. The mills consume an average of 3,600 bushels of coal each day, and produce, when running full time, 268,800 pounds of rails, weighing 56 pounds to the yard. The same heating also produces 55,000 pounds of splice bars, and 80 kegs of railroad spikes, weighing 150 pounds to the keg. There is also made at these mills, wrought iron draw-heads, and the company is arranging to put in an additional train of rolls. At present they have three roll trains - one 21 inches, one 18 inches, and one of 12 inches in diameter; the new roll will be nine inches in diameter. They have nine large furnaces, which can be used for either the 18 or 21-inch train; one furnace for the steam hammer, and one for heating spike rods. There are five steam engines in use, and three steam pumps. The main engine has a 32-inch cylinder and a 36-inch stroke; its fly wheel weighs 30 tons. The wages paid the employees range from one dollar to eight dollars per day. The skilled workmen are paid by the piece, the scale being fixed at so much per ton of manufactured goods. The pay rolls vary from $8,000 to $20,000 per month. The amount paid for wages for the seven months ending February 1, 1878, was $69,931.15. The value of new rails made during the same period was $366,246.88. To produce this quantity of rails required 11,100 tons of iron. The average daily consumption of iron is 130 tons, of 2,240 pounds each. In 1878, there were manufactured 1,350 tons of splice bars, valued at about $50,000. About 15,000 tons of new rails were turned out during the last year, the aggregate value of which was nearly $500,000.

The Kansas City Car Wheel Company, which has its mills at Rosedale, was organized in May, 1877. Its officers are: O. D. Moore, of Rosedale, President and Manager; W. H. Green, of St. Louis, Mo., Vice-President. At present this company can turn out about 300 car wheels and 150 tons of other castings for railroad machinery and ore crushers per month. It employs now from 18 to 30 men, one-third of whom are moulders. The pay-roll is from $750 to $900 per month.

The Kansas Iron Fence Company is also located at Rosedale. This company commenced work in June, 1878. Ira Harris, President; E. V. Wilkes, Secretary and Treasurer; and J. R. Brown, Superintendent. As now working, it employs 19 men and boys, paying about $500 per month. Its capacity is now 800 pounds of barbed wire, and the iron posts, braces, stays, etc., for the same per day; but steam engines now contracted for will increase its capacity to 1,900 pounds of wire, or two miles of iron and steel fence complete, each day.

Valuation and Indebtedness. - Assessed valuation of personal property, $194,181; railroad property, $514,492.36; total assessed valuation of all property, $2,203,040.86; true valuation of all property, $3,671,734.77. Total indebtedness of county, township, city and school districts, $354,328.84; per cent. of indebtedness to assessed valuation, 12-.

Newspaper History. - The first paper published in Wyandotte City was the Wyandotte Citizen, by Ephraim Abbott. It was established in 1857, or early in 1858, but was continued only a few months. It was succeeded by the Western Argus, which was printed on the same material, and published by the Western Argus Company, J. E. Bennett, editor, and P. Sidney Post, commercial editor. The first number of the Argus was issued March 25, 1858, and it was continued till March 9, 1861, when the material was sold to R. B. Taylor, on which to print the Wyandotte Gazette. The Wyandotte Gazette was established August 7, 1858, by S. D. Macdonald, editor and proprietor. Mr. Macdonald continued the publication one year, issuing a daily during the sitting of the Constitutional Convention, and then suspended. In August, 1860, Mr. Macdonald, having associated with himself R. B. Taylor, resumed the publication of the Gazette. This partnership continued but a few weeks, when Mr. Taylor leased the office from Mr. Macdonald and published the paper alone. On the 15th of January, 1861, while the editor was in the East, the office was entirely destroyed by fire. When Mr. Taylor returned he purchased the material of the Argus office, and printed the Gazette on it. He continued the publication of the Gazette till the spring of 1867, when Philpott & Brown got possession of the office, printing the paper for about three months, but failing to comply with the terms of sale, Mr. Taylor resumed control of the establishment, and published the paper till October 1, 1869, when he leased the office to Kessler & Tuttle. On the 1st of January, 1870, Mr. Tuttle withdrew, leaving Mr. Kessler sole lessee and editor, under whose management it remained till July 1, 1870, when Mr. Taylor again assumed control, and continued the publication of the paper till his death, March 26, 1877, since which time, his son, W. B. Taylor, has conducted the paper. The Gazette has always been Republican in politics.

The Wyandotte Reporter was started by M. W. Delahay in the spring of 1857. The material was sold to S. D. Macdonald the same year. In April, 1857, the publication of the Quindaro Chindowan, a Free-State paper, was commenced by Babb & Walden. The paper was published by them a year, when it was suspended. It was afterwards revived and published by the Quindaro Board of Trade, of which Alfred Gray was President. The Wyandotte Democrat was published about a year and a half, commencing in May, 1857, by J. A. Berry. Its name was indicative of its politics. The material was removed to Pleasanton, Linn county. The Kansas Tribune was established at Quindaro in the fall of 1859, by Francis & Davis. It was printed on the material previously used for the Chindowan. In about three months Mr. Davis retired, and Mr. Francis continued the publication till the spring of 1861, when he removed the office to Olathe The Kansas Post, a German weekly paper, was removed to Wyandotte, from Kansas City, in the early part of the war and published for one year, by A. Wuerz and John Haberlein. It was again moved to Kansas City. The first number of Die Fackel (The Torch), was printed in Wyandotte, September 12, 1866, by Kastor, Ficher & Co., H. W. Kastor, editor. On the 1st of January, 1868, the paper was removed to Atchison. The Kansas Real Estate Herald was issued at Wyandotte, by E. F. Heisler, from November, 1868, to July, 1869. The Kansas Pilot was established at Kansas City, Kansas, May 1, 1878, by William Caffrey, editor and proprietor. It is a weekly, and Republican in politics. The Wyandotte Herald was established by V. J. Lane, on the 4th of January, 1872. It is a Democratic paper, and its publication is still continued by the original proprietor.

Schools. - Number of organized districts, 39; school population, 5,235; average salary of teachers, per month, males, $46.33; females, $31.67. School houses built during 1878, none. Total number of school houses, 44; log, 1; frame, 31; brick, 7; stone, 5. Value of all school property, $85,733. HISTORY

By general consent, Moses Grinter is awarded the priority among the early settlers of Wyandotte County. He located near where the station of Secundine afterward stood, in 1831. and lived there up to the time of his death, which occurred June 1, 1878. The next white man to stop within the limits of Wyandotte County was Rev. Thomas Johnson, a Methodist minister. who established a mission school among the Delaware Indians, near "the white church."

In April, 1837, Rev. John G. Pratt located upon Section 10, Town 30. Range 23. about sixteen miles west of Wyandotte City, where he still resides. He established a Baptist mission among the Delawares, published several hymn hooks in their language. and one of his sons married a daughter of Charles Journeycake's, a well-known chief. He is now-the oldest settler in the county and the following account which he gives of the tribe is therefore of more than usual interest and value:

> That part of the country on the north side of the Kansas River was first settled by the Delawares in 1829. They came from Ohio, and brought with them a knowledge of agriculture, and many of them

habits of industry. They opened farms, built houses and cut out roads along the ridges and divides, also erecting a frame church at what is now the village of White Church. The south side of the Kansas River was settled by the Shawnee Indians in 1823. They also afterward came from Ohio, and were about as much advanced in civilization as the Delawares. They had a Methodist mission about three miles from Westport, a long time, it being presided over by Rev. Mr. Johnson; also a Quaker mission about two miles west of that. The population of the Delaware tribe when it first settled in Kansas, was 1,000. It was afterward reduced to 800. This was in consequence of contact with the wilder tribes, who were as hostile to the short-haired Indians as they were to the whites. Still the Delawares would venture out hunting buffalo and beaver, to be inevitably overcome and destroyed. Government finally forbade their leaving the reservation. The effect of this order was soon apparent in the steady increase of the tribe, so that when they removed in 1867, they numbered 1,160. The ruling chiefs from 1829 to 1867, were Ne-con-he-con, Qui-sha-to-what (Capt. John Ketchum), Nah-ko-mund (Capt. Anderson), Kock-a-to-wha (Sar-cox-ie), Charles Journeycakes, Qua-con-now-ha (James Sacondine or Secundine), Ah-cah-chick (James Connor) and Capt. John Connor."

Capt. John Ketchum, one of the most noted chiefs of the Delawares, died in August, 1857. He lived near White Church on the Lawrence road, and at the time of his death, which occurred at an advanced age, he was almost helpless. His funeral was attended by a large number of Indians, who came in their colored blankets and painted faces, carrying their guns. They were mounted on horseback, and as the procession slowly followed the remains of their chief along the windings of the forest road, they seemed truly the sorrowful survivors of a once powerful race.

On May 8, 1827, Colonel Henry Leavenworth established Cantonment Leavenworth on the site of the present fort. It was intended to be the principal western depot for government supplies, which were shipped up the Missouri River by boat and then distributed overland to the various posts on what was intended to be the permanent border between the United States and Indian Country. It soon became evident that, for the supply system to function smoothly, a ferry would be needed across the Kansas River. Accordingly, in January 1831, a twenty-one year old Kentuckian named Moses R. Grinter was sent to establish and operate a ferry at a point on the river near the present intersection of 78th and Kaw Drive. [1] At that time, the area north of the Kansas River was part of the Delaware Reserve, established in 1829, while the lands on the south bank were part of the Shawnee Reserve, established in 1826.

The Grinter ferry was a typical rope ferry, the type most frequently used on the larger streams such as the Kansas River. It was designed so that the current furnished the motive power. A heavy cable was stretched across the river, on which ran two pulleys from which ropes were attached to each end of the boat. When the ferryman was ready to start across, he would release one end of the rope to head the boat upstream. The current pushing against the side of the boat would then propel the ferry to the opposite shore. The boatman controlled the movement by winching the cables with a windlass to hold the boat at different angles. This was a slow process, as generally only one team and wagon at a time could be carried. In the case of the Grinter ferry, the charge to non-military users of the ferry was set at 50 cents for a passenger and two dollars for a wagon.

In the first years of the ferry's operation, the roads that ran to it were little more than Indian trails, but in 1836, Secretary of War Lewis Cass proposed the construction of a military road from Fort Snelling in Minnesota south to the Texas border, linking the forts and posts of the "permanent" Indian frontier. In October of that year, the Delaware signed an agreement granting the government permission to open a road through their reserve. From September 1 to October 8, 1837, the route for a section of Cass' military road between Fort Leavenworth and the Arkansas River was surveyed by a party led by Col. Stephen Watts Kearny, but it was not until some five years later that the southern section of the Military Road was finally completed, connecting Fort Leavenworth with Shawnee Town, Fort Scott and the government posts beyond. The Grinter ferry is often noted as having been on the Military Road from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Scott. This is correct, but the establishment of the ferry predated the construction of the road by eleven years.

In the summer of 1844 there was a great flood on the Kansas River following six weeks of rain in May and June. The Grinters' cabin was washed away, as was the Delaware mill on Mill Creek a short distance to the east and the village called Anderson's Town to the west where Edwardsville is today. Both Anderson's Town and the mill site were abandoned, but the Grinter ferry was soon back in operation. [2] The Grinters then built a second, more substantial cabin higher up on the north bank, well above the flood level.

As the years passed, military and civilian traffic on the ferry steadily increased. The Delaware Indian town of Secondine was established by James Secondyne, or Quar-cor-now-ha, to the east of the Grinter property across a small ravine or creek that may still be seen on the east side of 78th Street. Stores, including a trading post operated by the Chouteau family, and a blacksmith shop operated by Issac Mundy for the Delaware, were built on the Grinter side of the creek. In 1849 James C. Grinter, a younger brother of Moses, came to Kansas. He assisted as ferryman until 1855, and married Anna Grinter's sister Rosanna Marshall. A post office called Delaware, the first in what is now Wyandotte County, was established in 1850 with Indian trader James Findlay as Postmaster. As names (and spelling) were apparently somewhat flexible in the mid Nineteenth Century, it should perhaps be noted that the Grinter ferry, the Military ferry, Delaware, the Delaware ferry, Delaware Crossing, Secondine, and Secondyne all refer to the same small community.

Moses Grinter was authorized to open a trading post with the Delaware on April 20, 1855, and continued to operate it until October of 1860.[3] The Kansas Pacific Railroad reached Secondine from Wyandott in April 1864, and was extended to a point opposite Lawrence by November. A Secondine Station was established, and was located about 100 yards southeast of the Grinter house. Depressions in the ground where the tracks were laid were still visible in 1963. Despite the arrival of the railroad, the ferry remained in use throughout the years of the Civil War, hastening the crossing of troops and supplies from Fort Leavenworth to the Battle of Westport on October 23, 1864.

The first bridge across the Kansas River, the Southern Bridge connecting Wyandott to Shawnee Town, had been built in 1858 some seven or eight miles downstream from the Grinter ferry. This apparently did not affect the ferry greatly, as the two crossings served travelers on different routes. But in 1867, a railroad bridge across the Kansas River at Wyandott was completed, and the ferry was becoming obsolete after nearly forty years of operation. It was also in 1867 that the Delaware finally gave in to continuing pressure and sold their reservation in Kansas, moving to Indian Territory in what is now Oklahoma the following winter. The town of Secondine soon disappeared, its departure hastened by the removal of the station to Muncie a mile further east. By 1870, the Grinter ferry, unlike several other ferries further upstream, was absent from the official map of Wyandotte County that was published in that year.

Moses R. Grinter died on June 12, 1878, at the age of 69. He was buried in the Grinter Chapel cemetery a quarter mile to the north of his house on ground that he and Anna had donated to the Methodist Episcopal Church South ten years before. Anna Marshall Grinter died June 28, 1905, at the age of 85.

[1] Accounts of this event vary, some saying that Grinter was in the Army at the time, others saying that that he was a civilian in Army employ, and some suggesting that he came from Kentucky specifically to operate the ferry.
[2] The Delaware Baptist Mission at Anderson's Town survived the flood, but the abandonment of the town eventually led to the mission being relocated to near the present 110th Street and State Avenue.
[3] When closed on October 24, 1860, Moses Grinter's account book showed $14,134.13 owed to him by his Delaware customers.

History of Wyandotte County
By Murrel Bland

About 2,000 years ago, primitive Indians who were hunters and gatherers lived in what is now Wyandotte County, Kansas. Anthropologists believe that the confluence of two rivers— the Kansas and the Missouri— was a significant factor in attracting these Indians.

In 1825, the federal government moved the Shawnee Indian tribe to Wyandotte County. The area had been under control of Spain and later France. However, the United States acquired the area as part of the Louisiana Purchase in 1803.

In 1830, the federal government moved the Delaware Indian Tribe to Wyandotte County. Then in 1843, the Wyandotte Indians came here from Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

The Wyandotte Tribe took an active part in community affairs. The chief, William Walker, became the first provisional governor of the Kansas-Nebraska Territory in 1854. Most of the Indians accepted U.S. citizenship. A few moved to Indian territory in Oklahoma. Today the official home of the Wyandotte

ANNIE MOSES GRINTER

Tribe of Oklahoma is in Wyandotte, Okla.

The first permanent white settler in Wyandotte County was Moses Grinter. He built Grinter House in 1857 which is now a state historical site which overlooks the Kansas River. Grinter's wife, Annie Marshall Grinter, was the daughter of a Delaware Indian woman and a French Indian trader. They married in 1836.

Grinter was chosen by Col. Henry Leavenworth to operate the ferry across the Kansas River. Col. Leavenworth, who had established a military post, needed a ferry to link various military outposts that stretched from Ft. Snelling, Minn., to Ft. Gibson, Okla. These military posts were necessary to protect the stream of traders and travelers heading down the Santa Fe Trail and to preserve peace with the Indians.

Grinter started operating the ferry in 1831. Travelers, both civilian and military, paid 50 cents a person or $2 a wagon to cross the river.

The town of Wyandot was incorporated in 1858. It was located in what now is the downtown area of Kansas City, Kansas. Wyandotte County was incorporated in 1859. However, it was not soon enough for the county to have delegates at the convention which drafted the Kansas Constitution.

Convention officials, although they met in the City of Wyandot, held that Wyandotte County had not been formed when the Kansas Territorial Legislature met on Feb. 11, 1859 to establish the convention. Wyandotte County, the smallest county in Kansas with 155.7 square miles of land, was made up from portions of Leavenworth and Johnson counties.

Wyandotte County continued to grow in its early days. By 1870, it had more than 10,000 people. It was during this period that Kansas City, Kansas, became a railhead and received more than 120,000 head of cattle its first year.

By the 1880s, population had grown to about 20,000. A real estate agent led in the effort of consolidate. In 1886, the cities of Wyandot, Armourdale, Armstrong and Kansas City, Kansas, were consolidated into one city— called Kansas City, Kansas. In 1890, the city had a population of more than 54,000 and more than 73,000 in 1900.

In 1909 the City of Argentine became part of Kansas City, Kansas. The City of Rosedale was added in 1922. At that time the population of Wyandotte County was about 115,000. . .

Industry has always been important to Wyandotte County. Railroads and the stockyards can trace it roots to the 1870s. In the early 1900s, several meat-packing houses were established near the banks of the Kansas River. Many immigrants from Slavic nations came here to work in the packing plants.

Most of the original white settlers were of English and Irish descent. In the late 1870s and the early 1880s, many black persons came to Wyandotte County. They were called the "Exodustors" who migrated from southern states after the Civil War.

The railroads brought Mexicans to Wyandotte County.

DELAWARE ALLOTMENTS IN WYANDOTTE COUNTY

Allotment Listings and Maps

A Portion of the Delaware Reserve of the Area to the North of Moses Grinter's Ferry (Map by Harry Hanson)

This map is a portion of the Delaware Reserve showing roughly the area to the north of Moses Grinter's Ferry at the Delaware Crossing on the Kansas River in what is now Kansas City, Kansas. The area is in Range 24 East. The area covered by the map north of Parallel Avenue is in Township 10 South. The area south of Parallel Avenue is in Township 11 South. The map was drawn by Harry Hanson, one of the previous owners of the Grinter Place. This map, on page 16 of Faye Louis Smith Arellano's Delaware Trails: Some Tribal Records 1842-1907, was made by Harry Hanson, a former owner of the Grinter Place.

A Selection of Allotments of Delaware Lands in Kansas under the Treaty of May 1860 (As found in Faye Smith Arellano, Delaware Trails, pp. 26-64)

The allotments described herewith can be found on the map just below the listing.

The names we cite are from the 1862 Delaware Allotments, with some added 1866 allotments. We selected the names to match the area of the Hanson Map (above) that shows the area to the north of the Delaware Crossing on the Kansas River. That map is a good base for our purpose in that it includes section numbers, some road or street names, and certain Delaware features. The total number of allotments, included the 1866 additions, was 1182. The allotments that we show in the map comprise about ten percent of the total number of allotments. Each entry contains, in the order presented, the allotment number, the name of the person, the part of the pertinent section, the legal description of the allotment--including the section number, the township south, the range east--the age of the person, and the number of acres of each tract.

Sections consist of 640 acres of land. Thus, a half-section is 360 acres, a quarter section is 160 acres, and an eighth of a sections 80 acres, the intended acreage of each allotment. Most allotments are in one tract, but some are in two parts because of terrain features, the result being that the total allotment was about 80 acres. As an example of how this breaks down, take the first allotment below, which is No. 6, for Angeline Jonneycake. If one looks at the complete listing of allotments, it can be seen that Angeline's tract was not isolated from the remainder of the family's allotments, but those they were simply outside the scope of the map. This is not the case for most other allotments in the map area. In point of fact, the map entries tend to show the clustering of family allotments. The location of the allotments shows in general where the families had lived previously and shows that at least some choice was given. To continue, the next segment of Angeline Jonneycake's allotment is the legal description, which is W/2 SW/4 33-10-24. An expansion/explanation of that description is that her land was the west one-half of the southeast quarter of Section 33, Township 10, Range 24 East, the equivalent of 80 acres. Clear as mud, right? Actually, once you look up a couple of entries of the allotment map, the system should become clear to you. Angelina's age is 10 and the total acreage is 80 acres.

An offset between the section for Townships 10 and 11 South for the cross-index map does not appear in the Hanson map. The only area affected is the allotments in Township 10 South which may not be exactly as depicted in the map above. However, the Hanson map may be correct as the county was re-surveyed at some later point in time. Most likely, however, Mr.. Hanson drew a very good map but forgot to show the offset because it was mostly irrelevant to what he was trying to show. One item of interest in Township 10 South is White Church. (The map was prepared by Martin Weeks.)

The Delaware were the first people who settled the entire section of Wyandotte County north of the Kansas river. They did not move to Wyandotte County until October, 1830, and occupied all the land west of the Missouri line and north of the Kansas river. This included the area now called the Muncie area (originally called Delaware, later Secondine and much later Muncietown, shortened to Muncie.)

> In January of 1831, Moses R. Grinter (a 21-year old Kentuckian) began operating a Kansas river ferry, from a site on the north bank within the Delaware reserve, 3-4 miles above and across the river from the Chouteaus' trading post (Four Houses near Bonner Springs, formerly called "Tiblow" for Henry Tiblow) and the Shawnee Methodist Mission. The present day location of Grinter's ferry is approximately 78th and K-32 Highway across from the old Grinter home. (By the Grinter Home is the "Military Road" from the ferry to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.) Moses Grinter was licensed for the ferry by the government.
> 1833: Jotham and Eleanor Richardson Meeker have arrived in this area, bringing with them a printing press purchased in Cincinnati, Ohio. It is set up at the Shawnee Baptist Mission and is the first printing press in Kansas. (Kansas was then Indian Territory)
> By 1839, new and improved education is becoming a sincere interest. Horace Mann, a Massachusetts educator, has pioneered new systems and methods which have improved and broadened the standards of public schooling. He has established the first state normal school in the US at Lexington, Mass in 1839. There he instituted new and improved programs of giving teachers professional training. Until Mann's reforms were introduced, state public schools had many weaknesses. One of his early changes was to introduce a central authority for high schools. The curriculum and methods of teaching are revised. A minimum school year of six months is now established. Most helpful to Mr. Mann is Noah Webster's dictionary, published in 1828, which spells and defines words of the English language in a uniform manner that all seem to agree with.

In 1843, the Wyandot Indians emigrate to Wyandotte County, Kansas. Among them are the Armstrong's, Barnett's, Walker's, and Splitlog's, to mention but a few. July 1, 1844, John M. Armstrong opened a school for Wyandots, supported by their money from a fund provided by the 1842 treaty. White children are to be admitted free of charge. On July 26, 1853 at the Wyandotte Council House a convention of "citizens of Nebraska Territory" was held. "A large collection of the habitants of Nebraska" including John M. Ainsworth, Cyprian Chouteau, and Moses Grinter attended. William Walker (member of the Wyandot nation) was elected provisional Governor and Abelard Guthrie (married to Wyandot member Nancy Quindaro Brown) was appointed the delegate to Congress.

The telegraph lines were completed to Leavenworth via Wyandot on January 25, 1859 and the Pony express service began April 1859 starting from St. Joseph, Missouri and across Kansas toward San Francisco and back.

1860: Reports were that the Shawnee Manual Labor school had been conducted so badly for the past few years, with Alexander Soule Johnson's leadership, that it was failing to accomplish its objective. The children were neglected and illness prevailed. The council asked that the children be sent to District schools instead of the labor school, and that the council be paid $500 each to defray the expenses of sending them to District schools and to Ohio to school

Hannah Hewitt has long held an interest in education of our young people. When Wyandott High School was begun March 4, 1861, Hannah and her son, Lansing, went by carriage to visit the school and gain ideas for a school in Farmer. This was successful and September 26, 1861, classes began in a one-room frame house located across Loveland Mill Road from "Pleasant Grove Baptist Church" (present NE corner of 55th and Kansas Avenue). This school is known as "The Farmer School". Stephen Perkins, Edward A Pedigo, and Dr. Richard Hewitt are the first school board. Hannah is teaching until a schoolmaster can be found. There are seven students: Lansing P. Hewitt, John, William, and Anoise Goddard, Lucinda and Marry Farrell, and John Stephen Perkins. [Annotation: Turner was a community with no official name from 1856 until 1859. When the first post office was established in 1859, it was dubbed “Farmer.” In 1879, it was renamed Turner. Mrs. Brooks researched that and can’t prove it; but she’s relatively sure how Turner got its name. “There was a railroad yard in the Argentine; and it sent railroad cars to the Farmer train platform to turn around,” she said. “‘Take ‘er down and turn ‘er around,’ they’d say. That’s the most likely way that Turner was named. I believe that because railroading was really flourishing then.” That circular platform was in front of the train station that stood on Kansas at 55th, in Turner's main downtown area. Turner was annexed by Kansas City, Kansas, between late 1965 and early 1966; but the name stuck. - Railroad workers agree with Mrs. Brooks. However, Jeanie Turner, states that her father was an engineer who laid out the roads of the newly formed town and it was named in his honor. Article in the Wyandot Herald, May 22, 1879 says Turner is the youngest town in the County.] [Annotation: Farmer was a post office until September 23, 1879, when Robert M. Hester changed the name to Turner.] [See pages 100-101 in book.) The Farmer School (later District #8) hired this 1862-63 school term, Henry A. Saviers, as schoolmaster. He lives approximately near the present 27th and Metropolitan area. Henry will receive $35.00 per month.

There was a school near the Grinter home where the Grinter, White and Ainsworth children attended but the feeling in Munceytown was that there was a need for a schoolhouse closer to home. An organizational meeting was held with Jacob Maegly, Hugh Wren, and Hugh Reed appointed as the first school board. A Schoolmaster was hired named William Walker from Wyandot and school began November 17, 1862 (this became District #5). A one room frame house has been built on an acre of land owned by Ebenezer and Rebecca Zane. The Zanes gave formal deed to this property February 7, 1865 for $1.00 and the provision that this ground be used "for a school house forever."

In the fall of 1868, with eight students needing to attend school, a quick building was put together on the NE Section 33, Township 11, Range 24 for the purpose of providing education for these children. Ann Giswiger was hired to teacher. The school board is Gottlieb Everhart - Michael Mesh - Joseph Scheutz and their decision was to pay her $20 per month and furnish room and board, letting her live with Joseph and Anna Scheutz. Permanent land for the school District #21 was purchased from Edward and Anne B. Earle, who live in Worchester County, Mass. on August 6, 1873 for $45.00. District #21 is called the "Hester School."

January 4, 1869 the Shawnee Township was organized setting aside the land that is in Wyandotte County but lies south of the Kansas river as a separate township from Wyandot Township. The first election was held at the Junction School, junction of the Wyandotte and Shawnee Road with the Shawnee and Kansas City Road.

Towns/cities/communities in this area: 1869 - Farmer, Junction, Oak Grove, Lovelace, and Hester.

September 11, 1870: Seeing a need for education for black children in the area, John Gibbs organized organized and built on the northwest corner of present Key Lane and Gibbs Road a birch wood school house. He hired a black teacher, Benjamin Franklin Rose from Westport. The school was named the "A. J. Lewis School". This is the closest school for the white children but are not happy in the predominately black school. The white families met, appointed a school board, and authorized the purchase of "one acre more or less of land for $800 and built a brick school and fenced the premises with a good plank fence." This is located at a grove of stately Oak Trees west of the border of John's Gibb's property (present 53rd Street) and was named "Oak Grove School District #32," November 11, 1873. John Gibbs moved the A. J. Lewis School to the Gibbs & Payne Addition NE Section 30, Township 11, Range 25.

The Wyandotte Commercial Gazette carried an article April 16, 1868 stating, "The people of School District #16 near Junction intend to put up a fine school house this season worth 2 or 3 thousand dollars." Land given by Mr. Mattney, the teacher is Ella Kingscott.

Muncie School District #5 passed a school tax on March 28, 1868 for funds needed to keep the school in good order.

A wagon load of pupils travel to District #2 (Kerr/Roosevelt/Eugene Ware) from Muncie District #5 to participate in Master Brown's Spelling Bee. District #2 won but it was a lot of fun.

[Annotation: The following information was excerpted from "History and Growth of Wyandotte County Educational System," a four-page typewritten paper forwarded to the Board of Education offices in June, 1969, when the office of County Superintendent of Schools was closed. "The first school to bear the name "Muncie" was located at 61st and Riverview. This was District #5. In the year 1898, a second Muncie was built at the present site, 65th and Riverview. This was District #43. The two schools were about a mile apart known ad Old and New Muncie Schools. The original building at 65th and Riverview was a one-room building. The first teacher was Mr. Day. In 1918, District #5 became Lindbergh and District #43 remained Muncie. In 1924 one room was added at District #43. In 1938 a four-room brick building was built. In 1951, the first addition of the upper building was built. In 1960 eight classrooms and an office was built. January 1, 1967: became a part of the Kansas City, Kansas Public Schools as a result of votes of Washington USD #201 patrons to attach to USD 500."]

Many of our District students have continued on and completed high school at the Wyandotte County Common School or Wyandott High School, Wyandot City. Getting to and from school is a challenge as it must be done either by horseback, carriage, or railroad. It is good news to hear of the opening of the Olathe Academy in 1876 in Olathe, Kansas. "It is of the Junior College type and will be of use to our young scholars."

Mrs. Mary See is the Junction School District #16 teacher with 67 pupils.

The area and School District #13 west of Muncie has been called "Stony Point" since approximately 1857 when the school was first started for the children of Moses and Anna Grinter. The school District Boundaries have been set for some time and District #5 and #13 have divided into District #43 (which was developed in 1891 to shorten the walking distance of these two huge districts).

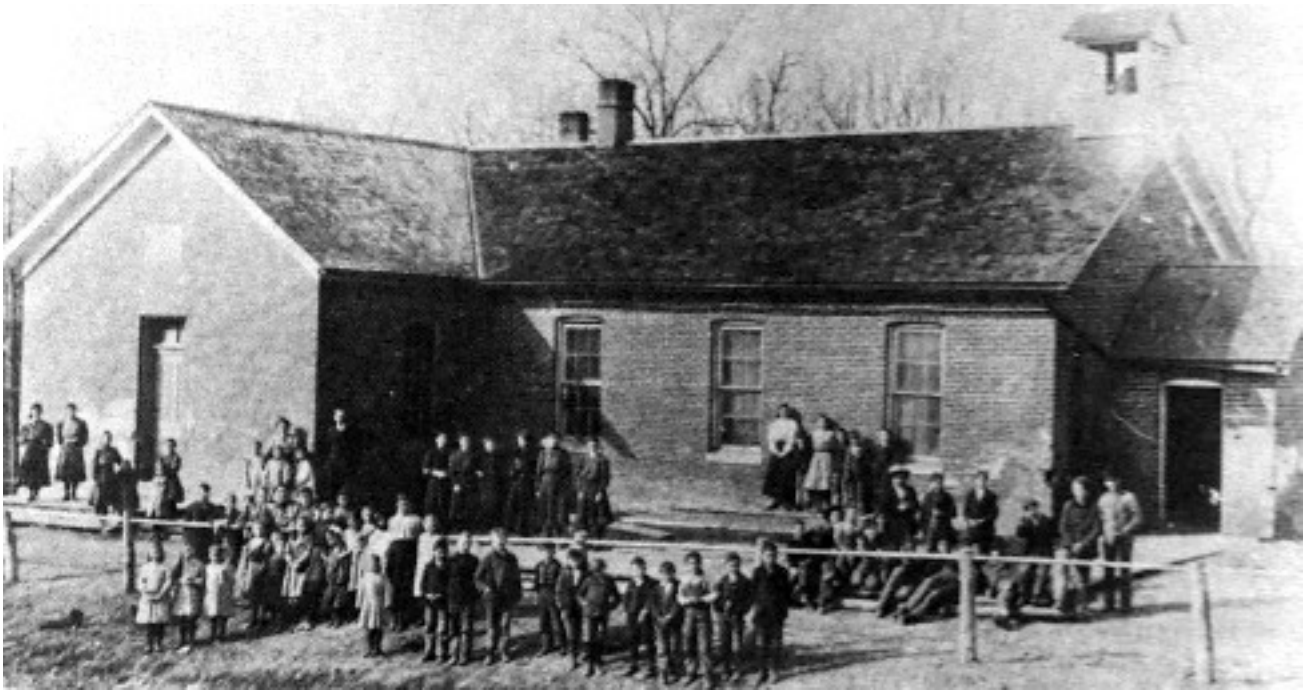
Wyandotte Herald: April 10, 1879 - "Where is Muncie"? All of that tract of country north of the Kansas River to the Parallel Road, between Muncie Bluff's and Secondine (Stony Point).

A number of Muncie students plan to take advantage of the new Wyandott Academy which opened September 15, 1879 to continue their education. It is located on the corner of 7th and Armstrong.

District #19 (Carlisle School) has been in existence for some time before 1868 but our families have not been involved because of the virtually underdeveloped land between them and the Farmer Community. This School is located in Section 18, Township 11, Range 25 and to date Bernard Speaker is the only resident that we are acquainted with. The Santa Fe involvement and advertisement encouraging young farmers to settle the land and till the soil we are experiencing an influx of young couples into this Section. The 1880 election for District #19 School Board has John O'Conner as Director, George Frey as Treasurer, and Hen Boeke as Clerk.

In District #21, a new one room school was completed in 1880 and this year the new teacher, M. L. Hudley is teaching.

School Districts #5 (Muncie) and #13 (Stony Point) have been experiencing some problems. The Districts are so large and the distance so far for the children to travel to either school that the feeling is that a new District should be begun in the center section. The two superintendents called a general Community meeting with the County Superintendent of Schools for the purpose of this division. The result of this meeting was the organization of District #43 - "New Muncie". Distict #5 is now called "Old Muncie" Lindbergh retained the District #5 number.



Junction, District #16, is growing in enrollment. A petition was made to the County Superintendent and the Junction School Board in 1894 to change the District boundary. The petition was allowed and the change was made.

From another prospective: The first free public school in Wyandotte county, or in the territory of Kansas for that matter, was opened July 1, 1844, and John McIntyre Armstrong was the teacher. The building was frame with double doors, and but a few years since stood on the east side of Fourth street, between State and Nebraska avenues in the Wyandotte part of Kansas City, Kansas. It was sometimes, but erroneously, called the Council House. Mr. Armstrong built it himself and commenced teaching on the date named. The council of the Wyandot Nation met in it during vacations, or at night. The expenses of building the school were met out of the fund secured by the Wyandot treaty of March, 1842. The school was managed by directors appointed by the council, the members of which were elected annually by the people. White children were admitted free. Mr. Armstrong taught until 1845, when he went to Washington as a legal representative of the nation, to prosecute their claims. The Rev. Mr. Cramer, of Indiana, succeeded him; then Robert Robitaille, chief of the nation; next the Rev. R. Parrott of Indiana. Mrs. Lucy B. Armstrong taught there from December, 1847, to March, 1848. Afterwards Miss Anna H. Ladd, who came with the Wyandots in 1843, assisted. Mrs. Armstrong was teaching the school at the time of her husband's death, which occurred at Mansfield, Ohio. while on his way to Washington to prosecute Indian claims, in April, 1852. The school was closed in the old building April 16, 1852; resumed in Mrs. Armstrong's dining-room; removed the next winter to the Methodist Episcopal church three quarters of a mile west of her house, and left without a home when that structure was burned by incendiaries April 8, 1856. This is the history of the first free school ever taught in Kansas." ("History of Wyandotte County Kansas and its people" ed. and comp. by Perl W. Morgan, Chicago, The Lewis publishing company, 1911.)

The Stony Point South Elementary School was part of USD 201; attached January of 1967 to the Kansas City, Kansas Public Schools (USD 500). Its location was at 150 So. 78 Street, and a new Stony Point Elementary School is presently at that location as well. . The picture directly below (courtesy of Mr. Jim Converse) is of the Stony Point School, 1869-1913. The school would have been Stony Point at that time (as there were no north and south schools. This school was of importance to many present Kansas Delaware as this is where their ancestors went to school. For example, some the descendants of Willaquenaho and William Marshall, including the children of their daughter, Mary Jane Marshal) and her spouse, Moses Read Grinter, and Willahoquenaho's and William Marshall's daughter Rosanna Marshall, and her spouse, James C, Grinter. The grandmother (Martha "Mattie" DeFries) and father (Walter "Walt" Frederick Hahn) of your Editor, Thomas "Swiftwater" Hahn (and the ancestors of the Technical Editor (Christopher "Chris" Hahn). Christian Hahn was the trustee of the school. Gerald McCollister, spouse of Kansas Delaware Myrtle (Hahn) McCollister was the teacher here about 1907. Many other Kansas Delaware Families, such as the Grinter's and the Defries's went to school here. The school is only about a mile north of the Grinter Place and a half mile north of the Grinter Chapel Methodist Church.

Wyandotte Gazette 1860 - July 1888. KANSAS CITY GAZETTE 17 July 1888

This folder provides a brief history of Wyandotte County as it relates to the Grinter, Defries, Honeywell, and other families associated with the Lenape-Delaware Indians in Kansas. It is not a Wyandotte County web site per se. For ease of reading, I have made a few minor changes. Additionally, some items have not been extracted in full; that is, we have not included extraneous matter not of interest to the purpose of this site. We are striving to make notes on the placing of some of the personalities of interest to us and placing those persons in their family contexts. We welcome anyone with additional to or differing information from this site. Submit these to martinweeks@cox.net and/or swiftwater@lenapedelawarehistory.net . So far we have published items from 1860 through June 1888. The color red indicates that the a person was a Kansas Delaware.

The Editor appreciates very much the hard work of Martin "Marty" Weeks in making the extracts from microfilm and in providing the extracts to this site. There may be more entries in the near future. We are striving to place some of the personalities of interest to us in their family contexts and have made an index to some of those names. Time permitting, those from 1888 will be added.

13 October. Railroad Meeting - At a meeting of the citizens of Wyandotte County, held at the Post Office in Wyandotte City, on Monday evening, October 8th, pursuant to a call signed by "many citizens," James R. Parr was called to the Chair and Thomas J. Barker and R. B. Taylor were chosen Secretaries. The following named gentlemen were unanimously elected to the Territorial Railroad Convention, to assemble at the city of Topeka, on the 17th instant. The following named gentlemen were unanimously elected said delegates [among other]: Gov. Wm. Walker, Silas Armstrong, A. Guthrie, Moses Grinter*.

1863

21 February. Successful Expedition by Loyal Indians - The following letter, with the treaties mentioned it it, and papers were received at the Indian Bureau recently: Delaware Agency, Jan. 29th, 1863 Sir: On or about the 1st of September last, a company of Delaware and Shawnee Indians, numbering 96 - 70 Delawares and 26 Shawnees - left Kansas on an expedition south-west from Kansas, under the leadership of Ben. Simon, a Delaware Indian.

11 April . Thomas A. Grinter vs. Martha A. Grinter. Divorce granted.

2 May. Fielding Johnson, Esq., of Quindaro, agent of the Delaware Indians, made us a call yesterday. From him we learn that a gang of thieves, some thirty in number, crossed the Kaw river at Delaware crossing in Wyandott County, on Saturday evening last, and proceeded to rob inhabitants of that section of their horses. They took some nine that he had already heard of. At one place, a man refused to unlock the stable door, and they knocked him down with a fence rail, when his terrified wife, unable to find the key, brought them a wrench, with which they pried open the door and took off his horses. The thieves, he says, are inaugurating a reign of terror. Such facts as these call loudly upon our military authorities to follow up their orders with severest penalties known to military law. If not, the whole country will have to be given up to the outlaws. Journal Commerce, May 2nd.

29 August . Kansas Invaded by Gambleites - Lawrence Burned! - 134 Citizens Murdered - Two Millions of Property Destroyed (From: Leavenworth Conservative) At five o'clock yesterday morning, Quantrile entered Lawrence with a band of bushwhackers, variously estimated at from two to five hundred in number.

5 September. Recruiting. Wm. H. Grinter of Munsie Town has been appointed Lt. in the 5th Regt. Indian Brigade to assist in recruiting a company of Delawares for that command. Lt. E. T. Vedder is also engaged in the same regiment. Capt. Converse has established his headquarters in this place. This will afford the Delawares an opportunity to enlist and form a company of their own men, belonging to the regular and legitimate organization - the Indian Brigade are now in active force. [Note: William Henry Harrison Grinter is the son of Moses Read Grinter and Annie (Marshall) Grinter.]

12 September. At the Delaware Baptist Mission Chapel, September 6th, by Rev. J.[ohn] G.[ill] Pratt, assisted by Rev. J. Ketchum, Deacon William Adams, of Delaware Reservation, to Kate Woodfill of Wyandotte.

17 October. Jennison's Regiment - Authority has been granted to me to recruit a regiment of Cavalry - the Fifteenth! It will be raised for the protection of Kansas, and destruction of Bushwhackers and Rebels. This regiment will be armed with Sharpe's rifles, revolvers, and sabres. Persons recruiting for this regiment will report to me by letter or at my headquarters on this city, the number of men recruited, that subsistence and transportation may be furnished them. C. B. Jennison Office Shawnee Street, corner of Main, Leavenworth.

24 October. Secondine. Comparatively few of our readers, we presume, are aware that there is a place within fifteen miles or less of this City, which has been and probably may again be known by the euphonious name of Secondine. We confess that we had, during the six years of our acquaintance in the country, remained in blissful ignorance of this interesting fact. We were only enlightened in regard to the matter during our visit to the railroad on Wednesday. On our return we made a brief call at "Delaware Crossing," as we have been accustomed to hear it called, and in the course of a conversation with Moses Grinter, were informed by that gentleman, that they formerly had a Post Office there, the regular mail from Independence to Fort Leavenworth, taking that route, and that the office was named after a Chief of the Delaware Indians, the bravest and noblest of his tribe, whose name heads this article.

> Mr. Grinter also gave us some interesting facts relative to the career of Jim Secondine, a son of the old chief, after whom the Post Office was named, and a worthy son of a worthy sire. He was with Fremont in one of his expeditions across the Rocky Mountains, and at one time saved the gallant Pathfinder's life, when he must have otherwise have fallen by the hand of a savage for. Fremont had fired his last shot, and was in a defenseless condition, as a burly savage sprang upon him like a tiger from his lair, and would inevitably have thrust him through with his spear, had not the noble Delaware seen the peril of his pale-faced leader at a glance, and come promptly to his rescue. He knocked the weapon from the hand of the savage, and slew the would-be murderer of his friend on the spot. Lieut. Fremont secured the spear which had been wielded against his life, took it east with him on his return, and had it manufactured into rings, jewelry, and keepsakes of various kinds, by which to remember his faithful companion and friend, the sharer of his hardships and privations, and the savior of his life.
> These trinkets, or some of them, he gave to his wife, and at a subsequent period, when Fremont and Jessie [Fremont] together passed through this country, on their way to California, they took especial care to pay a visit to Secondine, when a most affecting meeting took place between Fremont and his friend, and Mrs. Fremont exhibited to the noble Delaware these mementos of his fidelity and courage, and asked him if he knew of what they were made. Secondine's reply showed that he at least suspected that they were made from the shaft he had turned aside when aimed at the life of her husband.
> We cannot give these incidents in the exact language in which Mr. Grinter related them, or clothe them with a tithe of of the interest with which his account surrounded them. But we give some of the main facts in uncomely drapery, but still with so near an approach to accuracy as to justify, as we opine, the conclusion that the name Secondine, euphonious and of easy pronunciation as all must admit it to be, is peculiarly appropriate to the locality where lived the great Chief of the Delawares, and his brave and gallant son, the savior of the life of the greatest and best of Chiefs of the Pale-faces, and who is now at the head of an enterprise which is calculated to again bring into notice and render of no little importance; the place where repose the bones of the honored red men, whose virtues we have here briefly alluded to, and whose name we would fain see re-inscribed on our country's records as designating the first important station, Post Office and town, on the Union Pacific Railway, Eastern Division, west of beautiful Wyandotte.

Will not the people of the locality referred to, when a new Post Office shall be established in their midst, ask of the powers that be, that its name be Secondine? Will not the Postmaster General grant such reasonable request? And will not Gen. Fremont, Sam Hallett & Co. and all others interested, unite with us in giving to the railroad station, and the delightful town which must grow up around it, the euphonious, the romantic and talismanic name of SECONDINE?

26 March. That frightful disease, the small-pox, has broken out in Eudora, Douglas county. It was taken there by a company of Delaware Indians. - Times.

3 September. Company G, 15th Kansas volunteers are stationed at Mound City.

24 September. Excitement Along the Border - Jennison Takes the Field

To the Editor of the Times: Entire train from the South captured and the escort killed. No prisoners taken. The enemy are principally Cherokee Indians, known to number two regiments of infantry and one battery of artillery, cavalry unknown, but considerable. Capt. Ledger, of the Sixth Kansas, was killed in charging the rebel battery, with twelve men. He fell within fifteen feet of the guns. Stragglers are arriving at the Mission constantly. - Bourbon county is now included in Col. Jennison's district. He takes the field today in person. Trouble certainly ahead.

7 January. One of the rumors we have had on the street this past week , was that Capt. [probably Thomas A.] Grinter had been killed. Another that a man had been found lying dead in the road near Splitlog's mill. A third was that Col. Gilliford had shot a black man who was trying to steal his horses in the night and that the darke had lain there dead between his barn and the road in sight of passers-by, for nearly two days. We have made inquiries, and are satisfied that there is not a word of truth in either of the stories. [Note: Capt. Grinter is probably Thomas A. Grinter, the son of John Hill Grinter, the son of the immigrant John Grinter. Thomas A. Grinter married second Emily Stevens.+]

25 February. Married. In Wyandotte County, on the 23d inst., by Rev. Mr. Bowles, Captain T. A. Grinter, to Miss Emily H.+, eldest daughter of Sylvanus Stephens. The printer was generously remembered, for which the parties will accept our thanks.

3 February. While canvassing for fruit trees in this county, in a conversation with Mr. J. C. Grinter on the depredations of the borer, he stated that when he planted trees he marked his ground off with white hickory stakes, and after the trees were planted the stakes remained. So long as they were in the ground not a borer was to be seen in one of his trees, but since they have rotted they are troublesome. Mr. Grinter is going to try the experiment again. It is a well known fact that the borer will attack a hickory and eat it up as soon as it dies, no matter whether it is standing or laying on the ground. It will cost nothing to try the experiment, and if successful it is worth remembering. It is also said to be a fact, that the finer the fruit the more troublesome are the pests, for instance, they will eat up a Yellow Bellflower, while a Jenneting by the side of it will not be touched. J. W. Blachly [Note: J. C., that is, James C. Grinter, the son of Francis Grinter, and the brother of Moses Read Grinter of Wyandotte county.]*

31 March. Delaware Lands - We commend the following letter to the serious consideration of the citizens of Wyandotte County:

Editor Gazette. - A movement in high official quarters, is said to be in progress, to have the treaty made with the Delaware Indians two years ago, ratified, or another one negotiated, whereby the diminished reservation of that tribe will go into the hands of the company who are constructing the railroad from Kansas City to Fort Leavenworth. This would be a clear speculation for that company, the subscriptions to and endowments of that enterprise being already sufficient to build and equip the road. The whole profits of the speculation would therefore go into the private pockets of a few individuals and out of the pockets of the farmers who will become the purchasers of this land. Never was there a more wicked scheme for "fertilizing the rich man's field with the sweat of the poor man's brow" than this monopoly of the public lands by railroad corporations.

Wyandotte county has done more for the State of Kansas than any other county within her boundaries, and has been treated with less liberality. She is the garden of the State, as beautiful as Heaven and as fertile as Eden. But she needs artificial facilities for communication with the rest of the State. Two, if not three bridges are essential to her prosperity. The Delawares are willing to sell their lands for two dollars and fifty cents per acre. Through the exertions of your Senators and Representative in Congress a treaty could be negotiated with this tribe by which the county of Wyandotte might be enabled to purchase a sufficient quantity of these lands, or all of them, the profits arising from the sale of which would build the three necessary bridges and grade the roads to the bridges. The county should be authorized to issue bonds bearing at least six per cent per annum, in favor of the Indians, and any surplus arising out of the sale of their lands after making the improvements indicated should be used for the redemption of the bonds Let me suggest that your people meet in county convention, say Saturday the seventh of April, and express their views on the subject and apprise their Senators and Representative in Congress of their wishes. Very respectfully your friend, ABELARD GUTHRIE

21 April. New Settlers - The land office of the Union Pacific road in this city is doing a land office business in settling up the state. They are locating on their choice lands in small communities a great many settlers. Their policy is to sell small tracts to actual settlers, and are finding this spring an unprecedented demand from heads of families for small parcels of lands. The Delaware Reserve lands comprise some of the best lands in the State. Mr. Bartholomew, Land Commissioner, is an agreeable and pleasant gentleman, and is always willing to give all the information possible, to settlers and others desiring land.

1 September. The Neutral Lands - From Mr. Ross, one of the head men of the Cherokee nation, we, for the first time, gather some reliable information, which we have been unable to secure from any other source, relative to the treaty with the Cherokee Indians. The treaty was ratified by the Senate on the last day of the session. Under its provisions, the Cherokees relinquish their right to the neutral strip, twenty-five miles wide and fifty miles long, or eight hundred thousand acres. The land is to be surveyed and thrown into the market the same as other Government land, and settlers thereon are to be protected in their homesteads. The Secretary of the Interior may, however, if he sees fit, sell those lands in a bulk, for a sum not less than $800,000; but in that event, those who actually settled there previous to the 4th of July, 1869, shall have the privilege of buying their land, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, for 1.25 per acre. Under the railroad grant, our company is to have each alternate section of the land for ten miles on each side of the road, with the privilege of supplying the deficiency, if any exist - on account of more than each alternate section being taken up by settlers. - Fort Scott Monitor.

22 September. Delaware Reserve Lands - The Lawrence Journal says that at a late meeting of the Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad E D, it was determined to immediately re-appraise these lands, and that then they are to pass into the hands of R. M. Shoemaker & Co. in settlement for the building of the main line to Fort Riley and the Leavenworth branch. It may be to the interest of persons residing or desiring to locate on the reserve, to purchase while the land office of the company is yet open and which is not to be closed, as we are informed, until the new appraisement is made, and division had among the parties respectfully interested in them. After that time purchases will have to be made from individuals who may decline to consider parties who have settled upon the lands and made improvements without having purchased.

2 March. Delaware Reserve Lands - We learn through several sources that it is the intention of the railway company to sell the Delaware Reserve Lands at auction to the highest bidder, commencing on the first and second day of April Next and giving settlers the preference, so far as to allow them to take their claims at the appraised value; and such as are not prepared to pay down for the same, can purchase the scrip of the Company, and thereby have time to make payments; the scrip being good with the Company in payment for the land. We shall be please to see some such arrangement whereby all parties can justly receive that which is right and proper, and harmony and union of action bro't about in such a manner as will develop the resources of our country. We advise all the settlers to remain on their claims, and purchase of the Company, if they are prepared to make payments, or can do so by having time. These lands are valuable, and have a wide reputation all over the country; and being on or near the great through line of Railway, and always convenient to the best markets, they will ever remain valuable. There is no risk in investing in them when title is secured. - (Oskaloosa Independent.)

9 March. We learn, says the Bulletin, that treaties have been completed with all the Kansas tribe of Indians for their removal to the Indian country. A treaty has also been concluded with the Cherokee Indians of this State, modifying the treaty of July 6th, so as to allow the tribe to sell what is known as the Neutral lands - comprising about 800,000 acres, to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company.

4 May. Dead Body Found - On the 28th day of April, near Mr. Grinter's, at the mouth of Turkey creek, near this city, the dead body of a man was found. On his person was a white linen handkerchief marked B. Burns; also a medal marked "Magnus Dei." Of Irish descent, five feet seven inches in height - weight about one hundred and twenty pounds, twenty-five or thirty years old, black curly hair, and was dressed in a half-sack coat, red and white shirt, and striped brown pants.

18 May. Immigrants - A large number of immigrants passed through this city this week who intend settling in this and adjoining counties of Kansas. Soon the Indians will be removed, then look out for an unparalled immigration to Wyandotte County. Where in the State, is there a county more inviting to immigrants than Wyandotte?

15 June. Married - By Rev. D. Dickinson of Wyandotte, on the 12th of June, 1867, at the residence of the bride's father, in Johnson county, Kansas, Mr. James F. Grinter+ of Wyandotte county, and Miss Sarah A. Stevens+ of Johnson county.

25 April. From the Indian Country. - Advices from the Indian Territory at the south of Kansas, state that the Delawares have arrived at their new homes and are much pleased with them. They are busy in building their cabins, plowing, fencing, &c. The Cherokees received them cordially into their country, and their prospects for the future seem very encouraging. They are located on the Verdi Gris and the Little Verdi Gris, and have bought out the improvements of a number of Cherokees who mostly are located below the Delaware.

12 September. Big Potato - James Grinter left a sweet potato at Buesche's store one day this week, which weighed four pounds and three quarters.

24 October. White Church Meeting. We mentioned in the Gazette last week, that a Republican meeting would be held at the White Church, in the Delaware Reserve, near the Ketchum Farms, on Monday evening the 12th inst. Luckily we had come prepared for all emergencies, with our lamps trimmed and burning, two pounds of candles, and a splendid cold-chicken supper. So we made tables of some smoothly-cut stumps, wagon seats &c., looked after the wants of the inner man, and Capt. Thomas Grinter for Chairman and Dr. Lucas for Secretary, Mr. Newman for the first speaker and an audience of about seventy-five or a hundred people we opened our meeting.

24 October. Republican County Convention - The Republican County Convention met in accordance with the Call of the Central Committee, at Dunning's Hall, in this city, on Monday, October 19th, at 2 p.m. H. W. Cook, Dr. E. Fitzgerald and Thomas A. Grinter were appointed a committee on permanent organization. The committee on permanent organization reported the names of Alfred Gray for President, and W. H. Grinter for Secretary, and they were unanimously elected as such. After the nomination of candidate [sic] for Representative in the two districts, the county convention again came to order, and after listening to speeches from Messrs. Cook, Cobb, and Dutton, proceeded to elect a County Central Committee, consisting of two members from each voting precinct, as follows: Washington's, Dr. D. P. Lucas, Thomas A. Grinter. Muncie, H.F. Reid, W.[illiam] H.[enry] Grinter.

20 January. Death of Tau-ro-mee, Chief of the Wyandottes

10 February. Legal Notice. Attachment and garnishee process before John C. Grinter, J[ustice of the P.eace], Wyandotte County, State of Kansas.

30 June. We had the pleasure of a call from Isaac Johnnycake,+ one of the head chiefs of the Delaware Nation, who is at present on a business visit among us. He reports the tribe well satisfied with their new location.

27 October. Church. Dedication - We learn that the new Methodist church, at Secondine, in this county, known as "Grinter's Chapel," will be dedicated Sunday, Nov. 13th. Rev. Wm. M. Rust, of St. Louis will officiate on the occasion. The church is a large frame, substantially built, situated about a quarter mile from the station. The membership at this time is about 40, Rev. Thos. C. Downs, pastor. A large attendance is expected from all parts of the county, and ample arrangements have been made for the comfort of those attending. Mr. M.[oses] R.[ead] Grinter, a resident of this section for about 40 years, has been one of the prime movers in this worthy enterprise, and its successful accomplishment is due in great measure to his efforts.

1 December. Supper and Concert at Secondine - Mr. Editor - Happening to be in the Secondine neighborhood on Friday evening the 25th - a friend invited me to go with him to Grinter Chapel where Prof. Moss was to meet his singing class, that evening. Accepting the invitation, we went, and found the Professor and his class of young ladies and gentlemen already engaged in singing. After listening a while to their performance, we felt ourselves amply repaid for our walk, and concluded that the Professor was master of his business, and that he had his class pretty well drilled, considering that they had only one quarter's tuition.

21 September. From the Prairie - Mr. Jacob Bartles+ has rented his farm to Mr. Swift, of Quindaro, and proposes to move down into the Indian Country. He was down there recently putting up a new saw mill and on his return brought back a young deer.

4 January. Pocketbook Lost - Between my residence in Wyandotte Township and that of J. F. Timmons, on the night of January 1st, 1872, containing one note against W. H. H. Grinter, for two hundred and fifty dollars, payable to J. L. Conklin, three notes against Stephen Briggs, payable to W.[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison] and John C. Grinter, school orders of District No. 13, numbers 6 and 7, payable to James C. Grinter, school order number 5, same district, payable to Will S. Jones, one note against John Lynch, payable to John C. Grinter, one joint note against W. R. Latta and F. S. Bigham, payable to James C. Grinter, and various other valuable paper, and about one hundred seventy five dollars in greenbacks. A liberal reward will be paid for the recovery of the said pocketbook and its contents. N. B. All persons are hereby cautioned against purchasing any of the above named notes or papers, as I shall take measures to stop the payment of them John C. Grinter, Wyandotte Township, January 31, 1872.

25 January. White Church Festival - At last came a dispatch "supper," is ready. Se we moved out in "solid column" and carried everything before us, arriving at the door, we presented our tickets to Mr. John C. Grinter, who very politely invited us to "pitch in - western. for eat, drink, and be merry. Well, he was obeyed to the letter. Mr. Editor, you should have seen John C. as he attended to his duties at the door. He smiled and talked (John can talk some, you know) and bowed showing the ladies where to find good places, and pushing the boys out of the way, and doing the very best he could to make every one feel good. The festival would have been minus considerable of John C. had been kicked over by an unruly cow before starting for White Church.

21 March. Isaac Journeycake the well known chief of the Delawares, is about to return to his farm near Wyandotte. It is likely that many of the Delawares will follow him out of the [Indian] Territory [in present Oklahoma].

28 March. Township Nominations - The following are the nominations on the People's Ticket for Wyandotte Township: Trustee, W.[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison] Grinter.

27 June. Fourth of July, '72 for Wyandotte County, on the Broad Gauge Plan! - Go ring the Bells and Fire the Guns, and Fling the Starry Banner Out! - Speeches, Music, Bells, Cannon, Fun, Dinner &c. - Enough for All Who Come! - Programme, Committees, &c ... That Mayor J. S. Stockton be President and the following persons for Vice Presidents. [The list includes J.[ohn] G.[ill] Pratt+, Moses Grinter, J. C. Grinter.

12 June. Wheat - W. H. H. Grinter, of Secondine, commenced cutting his wheat on Wednesday. The prospect is that the crop will be above average.

22 August. Election - Capt. Thomas A. Grinter followed Mr. Betts, speaking about 20 minutes in favor of the election of Mr. Greeley. Capt. Grinter admitted that President Grant was an able General and entitled to great credit for what he had one in them field. But he claimed that as the war was over it was statesmanship rather than generalship that we now need at the head of affairs, and insisted that Greeley was far ahead of Grant in statesmanship

18 July. Farmers in Council. The Meeting at White Church - Capt. T[homas] A. Grinter was the next speaker called for.

He said that it had not been his intention to speak. but thought that there was abundant reason why the farmers should come together and take counsel together in regard to their interests. He said that they did not wish to take ground in opposition to other trades and professions, but it was certainly their duty to look after their own interests.
We had several invitations to dinner, but accepted only two of them. We divided our time between Mrs. Betton's spread and that of Mrs. John C. Grinter, they being located near together, and if the occasion had been a State Fair. and a large premium had been offered for the best dinner, we would be willing to risk something that one of these ladies would have taken the prize.
8 August. Second Meeting of Farmers - Capt. T.[homas] A. Grinter was called for, but excused himself.
10 October. Farmer's Public Meeting - A meeting of the farmers of Wyandotte County. Kansas and those directly interested in farming pursuits on October 14 at White Church was called by R. P. Clark, Chairman Thomas A. Grinter, Secretary.
17 October. Farmers' Meeting at White Church - Committee of Nominations: Delaware Township - T.[homas] A. Grinter. Wyandotte Township J. C. Grinter

29 May. Arrangements for the Fourth - On arrangement included J. C. Grinter.
12 June. Wheat - W.[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison] Grinter, of Secondine, commenced cutting his wheat on Wednesday. The prospect is that the crop will be above the average.
4 December. Wyandotte County Sunday School Association - Suggestions upon the plan of organization were then made by Thos. Grinter. Thomas Grinter elected President.
The Festival - The festival given by the people of [School] District No. 37, on the occasion of the dedication of their new school house, near the residence of James F. Simmons, about a mile and a half from Edwardsville, on Saturday night last, was, as we learn from several persons who were present, a very pleasant and enjoyable affair. [Did the school have a name?] The Edwardsville Glee Club sang a number of excellent pieces, in their usual fine style, Miss Flora Cook, of this city, playing the accompaniments on the organ. Miss Cook also played and sang several beautiful songs, as also did Miss Belle Grinter+, the entire portion of the entertainment being such as to win the hearty applause of the audience.

28 May. Married - Mooney - Grinter At the residence of the bride's parents, in Wyandotte county, May 20th, 1875, by Rev. Wm. Smith, Mr. Robert T. Mooney+ and Mary E. Grinter+.
11 June. Meeting at White Church - A mass meeting was held at White Church, on Saturday last, to consider the destitution in the county, and the best method of relief. Judge R. P. Clark was chosen chairman and D. W. Grinter, secretary. [Note: D. W. Grinter is probably Daniel W. Grinter, son of Samuel Grinter, son of John Grinter. Dan Grinter would be the nephew of Moses Read Grinter and James C. Grinter].
25 June. Isaac Journeycake - We learn from the Coffeyville Courier. that the murderer of Mr. Journeycake is a half-breed Cherokee, by name of Calvin Coker. Coker and some friends had been drinking it seems, and seeing Journeycake accompanied by Daniel Anderson, a colored man, going by got on their horses and met them. Coker told Mr. J. to ride outside of the road as he wished to talk with him. Journeycake replied that if he had anything to say he could ride along the road and say it. Coker then struck at him with a revolver and at the same time caught hold of him and fired one shot but missed his aim. Both men fell from their horses and as Journeycake attempted to raise up Coker fired again, striking the victim in the breast and killing him instantly. The funeral took place on the following Tuesday, and was conducted by the Masonic fraternity, of which the deceased was an honored member, and was largely attended. Mr. Journeycake was born i n the year 1809 and was consequently 56 years old. He has by his honorable conduct endeared himself to every member of the tribe, and at the time of his death enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He was a member of the Delaware Council and has been for many years the official tribal Interpreter.
9 July. Married - Honeywell-Myers. In Prairie township, Wyandotte county, Kansas, July 3d, 1875, Mr. E. M. Honeywell + to Miss Nora Myers, both of Wyandotte County.
10 September. Farmer's Picnic - The farmer's picnic held in James C. Grinter's grove, near Secondine, last Saturday, was a very pleasant affair. Thos. A Grinter was President and J. F. Timmons Secretary. Speeches were made by J. Stockton, D. B. Hiatt, M. L. Thompson, Dr. M. B. Lyons, and Capt. T. A. Grinter. A bountiful dinner, fine vocal and instrumental music, and a sociable time generally, were among the [text to be entered. Editor]

17 September. We had the pleasure on last Sunday of visiting, in company with Capt. Wilcox, the Secondine Sunday School, held in Grinter's Chapel, on the bluff, about a mile north of Moses Grinter's house on the K [and P?] railroad. The chapel is a neatly-built little church situated in a pleasant grove on the hill, and the school is composed of the children and adults of the neighborhood, some of them coming from adjoining school districts, and belonging to different religious denominations. There were present, we should judge, about fifty teachers and scholars. Mr. Akin is superintendent and Mr. Hilliard, secretary. The venerable Moses Grinter was present, also his son W[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison], James Grinter, a brother of Capt. Thomas [Grinter], and several others of the name, among the younger members of the school ... The exercises of the Sunday school, and the organization of the Township association having been got along with invitations to dinner seemed in order, and they were numerous and pressing. It was decided, however, to go with Mr. Stevens, and draw upon his son-in-law Capt. T.[homas] A. Grinter for entertainment, it being desirable to consult him, as President of the County Association, in regard to the arrangements for the annual meeting in October. We found the Captain pleasantly situated in an ancient log house, but with a handsome new frame building early ready to move into. Capt. Grinter has an excellent farm, with several hundred choice apple trees, just coming into bearing, a large number of grape vines, blackberry and raspberry bushes, &c. and soil that produces corn, wheat, buckwheat, the various grasses, and musk melons, Irish and sweet potatoes &c. in the greatest profusion so that, as may be supposed, we fared well when we reached his domicile, although it was hard work to get there, on account of the roughness of the road. And that leads us to say, in closing, although it is not strictly connected with Sunday schools or County S. S. associations that Wyandotte, has the roughest and impracticable roads of any, and this so to be. [?] The county authorities ought to see that at least two good roads are built through the county, running east and west and then the people of the different road districts should see that their local roads are kept in better order.

1 October. S. S. Picnic - We learn that the Sunday School which meets in Grinter's Chapel, in Delaware township, will have a picnic party in the grove near the chapel on Saturday night of next week. A pleasant time is anticipated, and the friends of Sunday Schools in the vicinity are cordially invited.

8 October. Republican County Convention ... The following committees were appointed, viz: On credentials - W.[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison] Grinter.

31 December. A Reunion of Brothers Editor Gazette: - Some fifty years ago there was seen a tall, athletic man wending his way to the then wilderness of what is now Wyandotte County. He shouldered his pack away back in Logan County Kentucky, to make himself a home, and on the banks of the Kaw he pitched his tent, drove his stakes, and reared a numerous and respectable family, that has been instrumental in giving tone and stability to society in the community in which they reside. As the traveler passes up the Kaw valley, behind the iron horse, he is early reminded where our venerable friend drove his stakes, by the view of a large brick dwelling looming up (at the old Delaware Ford) in all its pristine glory. The occupant, our friend, Moses Grinter, was agreeably surprised by the arrival of his brother . The brothers had not met until now for over a quarter of a century. The 22d inst. witnessed the reunion of all four brothers, with members of their families as far as possible, and a more pleasant day and agreeable assembling of kinfolk is seldom met with in a life time. There was the aged with silver locks, middle-aged and the young, and one could no help being impressed with the truth of John Quincy Adams' remark while minister of England just before our second war with that country, that the young men should get married and raise up sons to fight our battles, it being beautifully illustrated in the Grinter family; for there were at least forty-five present, young and old, and not half told at that. The day passed off very agreeably. In the evening the young people had a pleasant party, and since, festival has followed festival. The last reunion will take place tomorrow, the 28th, with James C. Grinter, and will close with festivity and the departure of the visiting brother to his home in Atlanta Ill. In all human probability this will be the last time they will meet on earth. May God in His infinite mercy, bring them all to re-unite around the Great White Throne above, where parting is no more.

14 January. The Country Ahead - Mr. English and the Rev. Mr. Warren conducted Capt. Grinter to the chair, who, after a few appropriate and well-timed remarks, awaited the pleasure of the meeting.

11 February. From Secondine - School District No. 13 Wyandotte Co., Kan., January 31st. 1876 - [To the] Editor Gazette - On order to prohibit whispering in my school I propose to have published the name of each student who would not whisper during the month of January, 1876. I found it to be very nearly a success. Some of the students kept the "faith," and most of them kept it for three weeks, some indeed up to the 27th inst. Please insert the following names in your paper: James R. Ford, Bailey B. Defries+, Robert Eakins. [I would never have made it. Editor]

5 May. Proceedings of the Republican County Central Committee - Committee met pursuant to roll call, April 29th, 1876, at 1 o'clock p.m. At roll call, the following members were present: C. E. Wilcox, W. J. Buchanan, R. E., B. Grafton, D. Abbott, R. M. Gray, L. C., A. W. Kelly, Wm. Grinter.+ [William Grinter is probably the brother of Moses Read Grinter.]

10 August. Commissioners ... John C. Grinter was appointed Treasurer of Wyandotte township to fill vacancy caused by the death of Henry Burgard, and the appointment previously made, of Larkin Washer, for that position was rescinded.
26 October. Edwardsville - J. C. Grinter is having a good comfortable tenant house built on his farm now occupied by Jno. Benedick. H. C. Wilson has the contract for building it.
2 November. Wyandotte Township - The mass meeting called at Kerr's precinct, for Saturday, Oct. 27, at 2 p.m., organized by electing Thos. Grinter as chairman, and John Purtee as secretary. After reading of the financial report of C. H. Carpenter, township Trustee, the following nominations for township officers were made: Trustee, C. H. Carpenter, Treasurer, John C. Grinter.
16 November. Township Officers - Wyandotte Township - Treasurer, John C. Grinter

4 January. Proceedings of the Greenback County Committee - On motion, the following persons were chosen to act as full committee for 1878. Delaware, James C. Grinter
25 January. William Burgess was arrested last Saturday morning on charge of taking a revolver of John Grinter's and Monday, on confession, was sentenced by Judge Hovey to confinement in the County jail for twenty days.
22 February. White Church Items - Asa Ford has rented Cy Ketchum's+ farm. Milton Thorpe has sold his farm for $2,000 and has purchased 80 acres on the prairie, of Lewis Ketchum+, for $2,000 and 20 acres from John Silar.
8 March. Edwardsville Items. Mr. J. C. Grinter shipped one hundred and fifty barrels of apples to Messrs. Clemens, Cloon & Co., Kansas City, on Tuesday
29 March. As previously announced, the White Church Lyceum met the Grinter Debating Club in joint discussion last Thursday night. Question, Resolved, That conscience is a true guide to duty. Speakers on the affirmative were D.[aniel] W. Grinter, S. Stevens, T. H. Grinter, John Grinter and - Murphy. Negative, R[ezin?] Wilcoxin, Worth English, A. W. Lamingham, and L. D. Crotchett. Judges Messrs. Wm. Grinter, Akin and Murphy. The rule reads as follows: "The judges shall give reasons for their decision." The judges decided in favor of the affirmative, but when requested to give reasons, they failed to do so; so the W. C. [White Church] boys claim the discussion, and we think the large audience present will bear them out in their rights.
5 April. The Grinter-White Church joint debate took place Thursday evening. Judge English was chosen chairman and Messrs. Frank Bigham, David Taylor and Asa Ford were selected as judges. The question debated was "Resolved, That capital punishment should be abolished." The affirmative was defended by D. Abbott, W. English, L. D. Crotchett, John Hacker and John Kelly; the negative by D. W. Grinter, T.[homas] A. Grinter, J. F. Grinter, J. W. Murphy and S. Stephens+. The judges gave a decision in favor of the affirmative. The third and final joint discussion will be held at White Church on the evening of the eleventh of April, in the church building. Question for debate, "Resolved, That the right of suffrage be extended to all female persons over twenty-one years of age." Affirmative, White Church Lyceum, Negative, Grinter Lyceum.
19 April. The White Church-Grinter joint debate took place last Thursday evening at W.[yandotte] C.[ity], pursuant to adjournment. Robert T. Mooney was called at the chair, and Messrs. W. M. English, John Humphreys and I. Drake were appointed as judges. The question debated was so amended as to read: "Resolved, That there should be no discrimination on account of sex, in the exercise of the elective franchise in the U. S. of America." Affirmative - R.[ezin?] Wilcoxen, L. D. Crotchett, W. English, John Hacker, and D. Abbott. Negative - D.[aniel] W. Grinter, J. F. Grinter, J. W. Murphy, S. Stephens, and T.[homas] A. Grinter. Decision in favor of the negative.
26 April. Statement of Claims and Accounts - Allowed by the Board of County Commissioners of Wyandott County, Kansas at the regular April session, A.D. 1878. . . N. T. Defries for repairing approaches to Elkins and McGraw bridges - 11.00. [Is Nathan "T" Defries possibly Nathan F. Defries, son of William T. Defries and brother of Audley Paul Defries?] has four acres of wheat that averages over five feet in height.
31 May. White Church Items. There will be a Fourth of July celebration, this year, at Grinter's Chapel. Mr. R. Wilcoxen

14 June. Death of an Old Citizen - Moses R.[ead] Grinter died at his residence at Secondine in this county, on Wednesday, June 12th, aged 69 years and 3 months. He was apparently in good health up to Monday afternoon, when he was found, lying prostrate in his dooryard, stricken with an attack of paralysis of the brain. He was brought in the house and placed in bed, where everything possible was done for him, but he gradually sank, remaining speechless from the time he was brought into the house, and passed away about ten o'clock Wednesday morning. Mr. Grinter was the oldest settler in Wyandotte county, having come here in 1829. He was known all over the county, was universally respected as an upright citizen and an honest man. His death will be mourned by a large circle of friends. The funeral took place Thursday afternoon and was very largely attended.
The Fourth at Grinter's - Our national anniversary will be celebrated in the handsome grove near Grinter's school house, by a basket picnic, under the auspices of the Grinter Debating Club. The programme will include an address by Hon. S. A. Cobb. All are cordially invited. The following is the order of exercises:

27 September. School began a week ago last Monday in the Timmons school District, and Mr. Frank Grinter is the teacher.
11 October. Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Grinter went to Atchison to attend the Synod last Thursday.
25 October. Mr. Ed. Defries+ has just finished raising a fine large corn crib. Mr. John Grinter has purchased a handsome parlor ornament in the way of an organ.
1 November. Mr. John Grinter, after two trials has succeeded in completing a well, by curbing as he proceeded downward. Mr. James Defries is planting his engine opposite the store. He proposes to attach a pair of corn burs to the power and to put up two sheds or houses of some sort. This will give Stony Point a corn mill.
15 November. The New Township Officers. Wyandotte Township Clerk - D[aniel] W. Grinter.
22 November. Mr. Defries's corn mill is now in operation and its busy hum gives Stony Point quite a business air. W. D. Allen died on Sunday night at the residence of his late father-in-law Moses Grinter. Mr. Allen was a highly respected citizen, and much esteemed by all who knew him. He was in the 34th year of his age, and had, for three consecutive years, served as teacher. On Tuesday a meeting was held at the school house to organize a Literary Society. R. [obert] T. Mooney was elected President, T. Jacks, Vice President; W.[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison] Grinter, Secretary; J. F. Grinter Treasurer; D.[aniel] W. Grinter, J. Mitchum, and C. J. Smith were appointed on the executive committee.
29 November. James Defries+ wishes to notify the citizens of Stony Point and vicinity, that the regular grinding days will be Fridays and Saturdays. Quite a pleasant social gathering was held at Mr. J. F. Grinter's on Sunday last, to keep fresh in their memories the birthday of Miss Mary and Mr. Frank Stephens.
6 December. Mr. James Defries wishes all to know that he can make as good a meal, and as much of it, as any one in the county.

3 January. Mr. James F. Grinter made us a short but pleasant call Thursday. He allowed us to ornament our subscription book with his name. Mr. R.[obert] T. Mooney came in with a drove of sixty-four splendid porkers one day last week. He disposed of them to Plankinton & Armour. Mr. R.[obert] T. Mooney, Esq., is engaged in remodeling the machinery of the mill. Mr. Mooney is a resident of our County, and ranks among the leading mill-wrights of the west.
17 January. John C. Grinter "bounced" the train here on Tuesday, and made a flying trip to Leavenworth.
7 February. Mr. Mooney has been, and is still engaged in fitting up the Pomeroy mill
A child of Mr. Mooney swallowed two needles last Wednesday. His mother removed one with her finger but the other stuck crosswise in its throat, causing such pain as not to allow it to close its mouth for about eight hours. It is thought the needle passed out towards the outside of the neck. The child plays around now as usual.
28 February. White Church. Solomon Ketchum+ has bought a wild and beautiful pony of Mr. Cook. Sol. is breaking him in to ride.

16 July. Edwardsville Items . Mr. John Grinter, of Grinter's Chapel, was in our town last Sunday evening. Your correspondent knows what brought him here, but will not say.
18 July. Come to Eakin & Grinter's for No. 1 shoes and boots at bedrock prices. A team belonging to Jas. C. Grinter ran away last week. Damage was slight.
26 September. County Personals - John G.[ill] Pratt, of Maywood, Wyandotte county, was born in Mass., in 1814 and moved to Wyandotte county April 2, 1837. Soon after this he established a Baptist mission among the Delaware Indians and at a later period he was appointed agent for this tribe. It has been stated that Mrs. Pratt has never visited either Wyandotte or Leavenworth, while living in the vicinity of their present residence (15 miles from those cities) in the past 42 years. Mr. Pratt informed me that this was a mistake, as Mrs. Pratt makes frequent visits to both of those cities. Mr. Pratt is a very quiet, modest unassuming gentleman, one of the kind of men who wear well and yet, I am sure, one with whom it would be dangerous to meddle. He wears no whiskers and looks at least fifteen years younger than he really is. Mr. Pratt is about five feet seven inches tall and weighs about 150 pounds. He is at present engaged in farming.
Logan Zeigler+, settled at Wyandotte, Kansas, 1829 .
17 October. Republican Convention. Delaware - W.[illiam] H.[Henry] H.[arrison] Grinter.

16 January. Those having "drive wells" on their premises met at Eakin & Grinter's store, last Friday, at ten o'clock p.m. and organized themselves into a club to fight the royalty of $10 on each pump or well claimed by certain persons upon the process of getting water. They have determined to carry the question into the Courts if need be.
30 January. Claims against Wyandotte County - D[aniel] W. Grinter, same - 8.0
6 February. Township Elections. Justices - Wyandotte Township - J. D. Husted, J. F. Grinter. Quindaro Township - Constables - Rezin Wilcoxen+

5 March. Pomeroy. Jimmy Grinter was in town on Wednesday. He reports everything serene in the vicinity of Timmon's school house
19 March. Pomeroy. Lewis Ketchum, and wife, took the train here last Tuesday, bound for the Indian Territory on a visit.
7 May. Immigration Society. The Wyandotte County Immigration Society met at Voss's Hall on Saturday at 2 o'clock p. m., and formed a permanent organization by the election of James T. Johnson as President, Hon. Sanford Haff .... The following Township Committees were also elected: Wyandotte - Thomas A. Grinter. Mr. Jas. Grinter is indisposed, and attended by Dr. Murphy.
23 July. Edwardsville. Frank Eakin and J. C. Grinter will go into business at Perryville, Kansas.
6 August. There was a Sunday school picnic at Grinter's School house, Stony Point, on Saturday, July 31. Speaking by the local talent. A good time generally. We put in a day visiting John C. Grinter and vicinity this week. And if our readers want to see the finest country in Kansas, they would do well to take the same trip. They will find J. C.'s latch string out and he will show them sights in farming that will do them good. Mr. Grinter is a god honest democrat, but from the way he pointed out the farms belonging to his republican neighbors, and the need of praise he gave them for their thriftiness, we judge him to be either very liberal toward his political opponents or unusually well pleased with their early education and their manner of farming.
August 27. James Grinter, of Perryville came down last Saturday to visit his parents. Republican Primaries. The returns of the election of Thursday evening, as far as heard from are as follows: Delegates - Delaware - J. M. Shores, McDowell, W.[illiam] H.[enry] Grinter.
September. Republican Nominations. The Republican County Convention assembled in Dunning Hall on Saturday August 28th and was called to order by H. L. Alden, chairman of the central committee. Mr. Eli Teed was chosen temporary chairman who appointed the committees as follows: On credentials - R. D. Speck, T. C. Foster, Wm. H.[enry] H.[arrison] Grinter, W. L. McKenzie.

1 April. Wyandotte County Delinquent Tax List Delaware Township - S. [Solomon?] Ketchum W/2 of SW/4 of Sec. 3, T. 11, R 23 Amt - 80 acres -$25.40. R D McCamish E/2 of E/2 of SE fractional quarter of Sec. 36, T 11, R 23 - 38.8 acres -Amt - $79.90
7 May. Edwardsville - H. C. Wilson has employed S. Etter as sawyer for his mill. He will move the mill to J. C. Grinter's farm for a few days. and will saw a large amount of lumber for hi during the summer.
15 July. Louis Ketchum brought to the mill his half of forty acres of wheat one day this week. It brought him the munificent sum of three dollars.

16 September. Hon. W. R. Wagstaff - [Names supporting Wagstaff for judge includes J. C. Grinter.]
25 November. Pomeroy - Sylvania Lodge No. 9 Knights of Pythias elected officers on Saturday night. J. D. Mudeater, C. C., S. W. Ketchum, V. C.
2 December. James C. Grinter, Esq., says that in some parts of Wyandotte county the grub has destroyed many acres of wheat. The sudden and severe frosts of the past few weeks have not injured the wheat as much as we feared. It contained so much sap that a sudden check was liable to injure the tender plant.
16 December. Sol Ketchum, son of Lewis Ketchum, of Wyandotte county, was robbed of $140 in gold while traveling on the Fort Scott road. Sol says that he would know the fellow if he should ever meet him again. He would like to meet him too. Sol will sleep with one eye open next time.
23 December. White Church - Mr. Sol Ketchum is up from the Indian Tr. visiting friends. He reports everything in a flourishing condition.
30 December. Suc-Quindaro - Historical and Descriptive Sketches of Quindaro Township, White Church, Six Mile, Pomeroy, and Quindaro as a City, a Racy Sketch by Our Pomeroy Correspondent. White Church so named for the old Delaware church which still survives, was first [the township, not the church] started in 1869 by the late W. English, who had invested largely in real estate in the vicinity and Mr. Samuel McMillen . . . Among the oldest citizens of the burg . . . Dan Grinter. Quindaro Township - . . . The line between the old Wyandotte and Delaware reservations crosses the township, passing near the residence of W. R. Malott known as the old Isaac Journeycake place.

6 January. A colored man by the name of Israel Johnson stole a horse from Joseph Thatcher near White Church last week. Judge Hovey commissioned Thacher as a special constable and put him on track. The thief and horse were both overhauled in Leavenworth County and the boy, who is only sixteen years of age, now lies in our county jail. His age is all that saved him from summary trial by the vigilantes. Mr. John C. Grinter interceded for him.
27 January. Armstrong - The following officers were nominated at the township convention held at Armourdale Jan. 21st: . . . justice of the peace ... John C. Grinter
10 February. White Church - Mr. Daniel Grinter is very low with pneumonia. Dr. Newton is attending him. Solomon Ketchum leaves for Vinita. I. T., on Friday, Feb. 10.
17 February. Mr. S. C. Ketchum return to the [Indian] Territory last week, and just before leaving subscribed for the GAZETTE in order to keep posted in regard to Wyandotte county. Township Officers - Quindaro Constable. R.[ezin] Wilcoxen ... Wyandotte Justices of the Peace, John C. Grinter.
31 March. [Listing of Court Cases] John C. Grinter vs. Wm. Fletcher et al.
2 June. Delaware Indians trading extensively at Independence, and are said to be good cash customers.
23 June. The Delawares - Rev. William Adams+ formerly of Wyandotte County, a Delaware Indian, and now living in the Cherokee Nation, called at our office yesterday. From him we learn that the Delawares have secured comfortable houses and in comfortable circumstances. The Baptist church has a membership of 230, having two hours of worship. Their schools are well intended. Herding stock and farming are about equally divided. Mr. Adams says herding and raising stock is on the increase even the boys are not satisfied without a whip and a pony. A considerable majority of the Cherokees are opposed to dividing the lands they think it too soon to agitate the question. Mr. Adams would not commit himself on the question of United States Courts in the territory. "Oklahoma Payne" they have no use for - he knows better that to come into their territory. Crop prospects are good and fruit will be plentiful. [NOTE: "Oklahoma Payne" was David Payne, an early promoter of white settlement in Oklahoma. He led a group known as the "Boomers" which promoted white settlement. Payne County, Oklahoma, where Stillwater is located, is named after David Payne. There are several articles in the Gazette opposed white squatters in the Indian Territory and the editors generally took a position opposing that white settlement.]

Of the Delawares the great part of the old settlers are dead. Mr. Charles Journeycake is still living with his family on Lightning Creek. The Connors are all dead. One of the Sarcoxie family is left. "Delaware Charley" is still living and sticks to the customs of his forefathers. He dresses in Indian style but is shrewd enough to possess a good form. He and Captain Jackson live on the extreme northwest corner of the Cherokee Nation. There the "wild ones" have their temple and worship the Great Spirit in truly ancient style. There are forty or fifty of that class. They exert considerable influence upon the younger members of the tribe who often go there out of curiosity. When the Delawares left Wyandotte county they numbered 900, now, at roll call only 750 are reported.

4 August. Republican Convention . . . The County Central Committee was chosen by precincts and wards as follows: Delaware - W.[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison] Grinter

25 August. Democratic Convention - The following were elected delegates to the Emporia Convention: Alternates - D.[aniel] W. Grinter. The committee on credentials reported the following as having been elected members of the County Central Committee: Newton - D. W. Grinter.

5 January. Mr. J. A. Reams and Miss Henrietta Defries of White Church were married on December 30 1882 by J. Grinter esq. The attendants were Phil Lemmon and Miss Mary Stevens+, also D.[aniel] B. Defries and Miss Nannie Grinter.

19 January. Edwardsville - Hon. J. F. Timmons came down from Topeka on Friday of last week. [The term "down" from Topeka is interesting. Kansas City is downstream from Topeka on the Kansas River.] F. Eakin and family of Perry are visiting J. C. Grinter's.

16 February. Our friend the Honorable James Findley Timmons, Democratic member of the [Kansas] Legislature, is in a state of bewilderment. [Whatever that means!]

2 March. Married - At the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Grinter of White Church, Mr. H. A. Stephens and Miss Nannie Grinter were united in marriage on Tuesday evening, February 27, at 7:30 o'clock. Rev. O. D. Allen, of Parkville, pronouncing the ceremony. After receiving congratulations the guests numbering over one hundred sat down to a bountiful supper. The bride was attended during the service by Miss Stephens and Miss Doyle English, of White Church; the groom's best men were J. C. Grinter. of Edwardsville, and C. J. Smith, of Wyandotte. [NOTE: Henry Stephens and Nannie Grinter were the parents of Annie Stephens, an early Grinter family researcher.]

11 May. Pomeroy Items - Simon W. Ketchum+ and wife came in from Indian Territory on Tuesday. Simon passed the winter in Florida searching for the fountain of youth. His many friends in this section fully hope that he may soon fully regain it. [NOTE: He may have been one of the original "Snow Birds" I hope that he found the Fountain of Youth there. I did! Editor]

8 June. Jurors for July Term - A double panel of twenty-four jurors was drawn for the July term of the district court as follows: James F. Grinter, Thomas A. Grinter of Wyandotte Township.

22 June. On Tuesday, June 19, Wm. McCamish, of Muncie, commenced cutting wheat.

5 October. A pleasant party was attended at Mr. Grinter's, on Tuesday evening, in honor of Lincoln [?] who commences teaching at No. 43, next Monday. [NOTE: Probably a misprint. The name should be Linton rather than Lincoln.]

19 October. Bright Little Tiblow - Tiblow, a bright little village fifteen miles west of Wyandotte, on the Union Pacific R. R., is attracting the attention of passers by as a suburban town for residences, on account of its commanding appearance and beautiful building sites. It was named after Henry Tiblow, a Delaware Indian, who was well know to the early settlers of Wyandotte county as an intelligent and affable man, with a pleasant word for all. Situated on the banks of the Kansas River, Tiblow became first known as a exchange station for the Southern Overland Stage Co., on the military road from Ft. Leavenworth to Fort Scott, and also as a camping ground for U. S. troops and freight trains en route to and from Ft. Scott and the south. A store and tavern were established at Tiblow's Ferry during the [Civil] war, which afterward burned to the ground, and no efforts were made to rebuild, them until about 1869, when the demand for a store again arose, to supply wood choppers and railroad tie makers with the necessities of life.

16 November. County Correspondence, Maywood - Mrs. J. H. Bartles+ is up from Indian Territory, visiting at Mr. J.[ohn] G.[ill] Pratt's, and is also receiving medical attention from Dr. Brock of Leavenworth, for some throat trouble from which she is suffering. [She was a daughter of Charles Journeycake and a former daughter-in-law of John Gill Pratt.]

23 November. County Correspondence, Stony Pointers - Perkinsville (formerly Stony Point) - The most noted personage is Squire Grinter, who deals out justice with an impartial hand. Thomas Grinter, the fruit man, picked over 300 bushels of apples from his orchard this fall. Mr. R.[obert] T. Mooney is building a large two-story residence for James Grinter, Jr., and James Defries and Mr. Johnson are erecting one for Mrs. Allen. Linton Grinter, teacher at District No. 34, was at home over Sunday. William A.[sher]Defries+, who has been attending the medical institute for a lame limb, returned home Saturday, gently improved. [NOTE: He was a son of Audley P. Defries and Mary Jane Grinter, daughter of Anna

Marshall and Moses Grinter. William A. Defries later lost a leg, perhaps as a result of the above mentioned affliction.]
14 December. Stony Pointers - James Grinter and James David, two of our expert Nimrods, left for an extended hunt in Indian Territory. R. T. Mooney, the noted hunter and trapper, succeeded in catching three fat beavers recently. Mrs. James Cooley of Glenwood, Johnson county is visiting her father James Grinter, Sr. Mrs. R.[obert] T. Mooney pleasantly entertained a large number of friends and family at a turkey roast on Thanksgiving. Rev. Lewis of White Church, who has been holding a protracted meeting at Grinter's Chapel this past week, will be assisted by Rev. . . . of Wyandotte, during continuance of the same. Will Grinter, our veteran hunter, after faithfully pursuing a duck several days succeeded in capturing it on last Thursday in time for supper. [NOTE: James David was the spouse of Harriett/Henrietta Grinter, a daughter of James C. Grinter and a nice of Moses Read Grinter.]
Maywood Chips - Mr. Ely Honeywell+, one of our oldest citizens, has gone to see if there is any wealth stored up in the mountains of Oregon for him. Mr. John Deister has so remodeled and worked over his residence that we can scarcely believe our eyes when we pass that way.
21 December. From Muncie Town - D. G. Grinter's health is rapidly improving under treatment of a Kansas City physician. Stony Point - A valuable mule belonging to R. T. Mooney was badly lacerated on the forelegs and shoulders last Sunday while attempting to jump a barb wire fence and getting entangled in the same.
28 December. Stony Point - Master Charley Stevens of Chicago, Ill., is visiting his uncles, Messrs. James and Thos. Grinter. Linton Grinter, and James Moore Sr., and wife, started last Sunday for an extended visit to Russellville, Logan Co., Ky. [The names Stevens and Stephens seem to represent the same families with different spellings. It was common for newspaper items of the day to spell the names incorrectly. Based on other data, it appears that "Stephens" was the more commonly used. James Grinter and Thomas A. Grinter were sons of John Hill Grinter, the son of John Grinter, and the brother of Moses Read Grinter. It appears that James Grinter's wife, Sarah Stephens, and Thomas A. Grinter's wife, Emily Stephens, were sisters, probably making Charley the son of a brother of Sara or Emily. According to the 25 February 1865 extract, Emily was the daughter of Sylvanus Stephens, so, Charley Stephens might have been his son, or, the son of his yet unknown brother. Linton Grinter was the son of Thomas A. Grinter and Emily H. Stephens.] Linton Grinter closed his school at Pleasant Grove, until after New Year's, and is spending his vacation at home. Mr. Sidney Smith, Mrs. Sue Grinter+, and James Moore, and wife, started last Sunday for an extended visit in Russellville, Logan Co., Ky.

11 January. Mrs. Honeywell and Judge Hollingsworth went down to Wyandotte on business for the former. Quite a serious accident occurred to Mr. Honeywell the other morning which resulted in a very fine sleigh; while driving to the depot at this point his sleigh upset and threw him out. His horse taking fright ran off, and before she could be caught, had completed the destruction of the sleigh.
18 January. Stony Point. James Defries visited his daughter in Allen county this week. R[obert] T. Mooney spent week before last in Indiana on a business visit.
8 February. Stony Point. Mr. Daniel Grinter has purchased a team and will engage in tilling the soil the coming spring. Mssrs. W.[illiam] H.[enry] Grinter and James Defries were delegates to the congressional convention at Wyandotte. A boarder registered at the house of Mr. Oscar Newman+ last Wednesday who will now and forever wear petticoats, also one at Mr. Merna Stevens, last week, who will vote in twenty-one years. [This is a birth announcement for Jennie Newman, a daughter of Annie Defries Newman, who was a daughter of Mary Jane Grinter and Audley Paul Defries.]
15 February. Township Elections. Wyandotte Township - Justice of the Peace - John C. Grinter. Quindaro Township - Justice of the Peace - R.[ezin] Wilcoxen.
7 March. Mr. Oscar Newman moved on his farm, situated on the Reidy Road, last Thursday which was recently vacated by Mr. Wm. Mounger. The newly organized literary society at Muncie schoolhouse discussed the question. - Resolved, that the morals of the present generation are degenerating" last Friday night. Mr. R. T. Mooney went to Humboldt, Allen County, last week on a business trip. Mr. Porter into the house on Mrs. Defries farm, vacated by Oscar Newman. [Mrs. Defries, that is Mary Jane Grinter, was the widow of Audley Paul Defries, who died 27 July 1882. Oscar Newman is her son-in-law, the spouse of her daughter, Anna Elizabeth Defries.]
Stony Point . Mr. James Defries is erecting a dwelling for Postmaster Woods of Muncie Town. Mrs. James Grinter and Mrs. Oliver have been on the sick list but are convalescing. Mssrs. Wm. and Charles McCamish+ of Burlington, Coffey County, are circulating among friends this week. Mr. Sidney Smith and Mrs. Sue Grinter returned home last Thursday from an extended visit in Kentucky. Messrs. John C. Grinter, Thos. Noland, Wm. Mounger and R. T. Mooney, were in attendance at the Grand Lodge, at Lawrence. Mr. Thos. Grinter is preparing to ship his apples to Kansas City.

4 April. Stony Point and White Church. John Grinter, Jr., has rented his farm for five years to R.[obert] T. Mooney. R. T. Mooney is having "Crystal Palace" plastered, preparatory for occupancy by the general benedict [?] L. W. Whitson.
9 May. Stony Point. Mr. Linton Grinter closed his school at Hazel Grove last Tuesday. Rev. O. D. Allen of Platte county, Mo., preached at the Maywood church last Sunday, and visited Mr. John C. Grinter's. Mrs. Jams and Thomas Grinter last Wednesday, on an extended visit with relatives in Gaylord, Smith county.
20 June. Delegates to the Republican County Convention. Township - Delaware W. Grinter, Jas. Defries.
15 August. Stony Point. Mr. Jas Defries is preparing for another big wheat crop, but not as large as last year. Mr. R. [obert] T. Mooney is building a wheat granary for Mrs. Defries. Esq. Grinter is as usual at his post, but needs a white plug to complete the faith canvass. [What does this mean?] There is to be a Sunday school picnic at Grinter's chapel on the 22nd inst., all schools are invited. Refreshments are to be on the grounds, no intoxicating liquors are allowed. Come with a song and joyous heart. Mr. Will Grinter has captured his stolen boat, "Old Black Bob," and is boat riding half the time.
22 August. We had the pleasure of dining a few days ago with our good democratic friend, John C. Grinter, who resides in the western part of Wyandotte township. Mr. Grinter lives in the garden spot of Wyandotte Co., as all must admit who will go with home over his productive fields, and will stand in his front yard and beautiful country which surrounds his farm. Mr. Grinter, besides having the fine farm, has the name of unbounded hospitality, which his wife does her full share to sustain.
29 August. Mr. T.[homas] A. Grinter says that we may expect a hard winter and he advises farmers to lay up for their own use one or two hundred pounds of corn extra. It may be needed and is the safest kind of insurance in the world.
17 October. John Grinter, J., expects to start for California soon. Mr. Thomas Grinter celebrated his 57th birthday and Mr. David Taylor his 48th birthday last Saturday, at the Grinter residence. Several friends and relatives were present. The table was a fairly creaking under the weight of god things which Mrs. G. had prepared for the occasion. Everyone present expressed the wish that Mssrs. Grinter and Taylor might love to be a hundred years old and have a birthday inner every year.
28 November. Married. In a copy of the Ventura (California) Signal we notice the following: "On 18th June at the residence of the bride's parents on Ventura avenue, by Justice Hammer, Mr. E. M. Honeywell+ to Miss Susie Garret+."
19 December. Stony Point . B. B. Defries says he is lie [sic] unto the old woman, with flaxseed, he has help at hand. It's a boy. John W. Grinter, who was intending to emigrate to California, had to abandon the journey, in account of the health of his wife, but still intends going in the spring. Prospects of Stony Point future's prosperity are as follows: ... Hogs, there has been considerable taken off to market. Mr. Mooney has a lot of nice ones. W.[illiam] H.[enry] Grinter has some he intends to put in at Philadelphia. James F. Grinter also has a good drove. John H. Grinter, Esq., has a nice lot. Jas Defries has one he thinks will tip the beam at four fifty. Cattle, there are some being fatted. Sheep, James C. Grinter has the only drove. Fowls, Mrs. Martha Allen has a drove of one hundred and forty-five, holding for the spring markets. Stony Point is a country village of a store and a school house and one or two residence. Like all other cities it was once it its infancy ... Court convenes whenever called by Justice of the Peace John C. Grinter, Esq.

9 January. Death of Nody Wilcoxen+. It is not often that the sympathies of an entire community go out towards a sufferer and later to the bereaved family, as in the case of which we take liberty to say a few words. Miss Nody, daughter of Rezin and Melinda Wilcoxen of White Church, had, during her short life, continuously been an invalid. She was the youngest of the household, was petted and caressed by the family and by neighbors but not spoiled. She acquired, at home, an education, was a great reader, skilful in mathematics and other branches; she acquired a vast fund of useful information withal gave evidence of great piety. But the stern reaper could not be stayed. At a few months less than sixteen years, on December 20th, she closed her eyes forever, and tenderly the frail body was prepared for burial. On the 22nd, Rev. Sherman of Wyandotte, conducted the funeral services and the loved one of the community was laid to rest in the Grinter cemetery. But her memory and her beautiful life remain.
23 January. Mr. Robert T. Mooney met with quite a serious accident, while assisting in digging a grave; one of the workmen in the act of pitching a shovel of earth came very near severing the thumb of his left hand. Little Maud, the daughter of John W. and Ida Grinter, is lying very low with diphtheria. James C. Grinter has been very low in the last month with inflammatory rheumatism. W. A. Defries has his wonderful four-horse sleigh very near completion. Oscar Newman was visiting his mother-in-law last Sunday. [She was Mary Jane Grinter Defries, daughter of Anna Marshall Grinter and Moses Grinter, and the spouse of Audley Paul Defries. Oscar Newman was married to her daughter, Anna Elizabeth Defries.] Bailey Defries is going to move near Edwardsville. Mr. Thomas Grinter has sold six hundred bushels of apples at seventy-five cents per bushel. Mr. W. H. McCamish+ has moved back to his farm. He hails from Coffey County. H. S. Hilbert has been circulating with friends during the holidays. He looked as of yore behind his cob pipe. He gave Mr. Will Grinter a call, and said the turkey was just splendid. Mrs. Polly Defries and daughter, Miss Lulu, are visiting among relatives

13 March. We understand that W.[illiam] H.[enry] H.[arrison] Grinter argues that as under democratic domination [a] p. m. [postmaster] was appointed, so now, as an act of comity, a republican should be selected. This, however, would be a great strain on the party which has watched and waited for a quarter of a century for an easy way to make a living.

8 May. Stony Point. Mr. Galloway, of Illinois, has rented Mrs. Allen's farm. [Mrs. Allen may be Martha Vashtie Grinter Allen Kirby the daughter of Moses Grinter and Anna Marshall.] Mr. James Defries, Jr., of Cameron, Mo., has been visiting relatives here for some time. John Grinter, Jr., has moved to Vinita, Indian Territory. "Cam" Grinter has purchased a team and started to farming. W. A. Defries is canvassing for books in Coffey county. [He is probably William Asher Defries, son of Audley Paul Defries and Mary Jane Grinter. Does anyone know what this entry means?] Wm. McCamish, a former resident of the county, but recently of Coffey County, has moved back to his farm. John C. Grinter, R. T. Mooney, and L.[inton] E. Grinter are improving their farms by setting out large orchards. Mr. Stephens, formerly of White Church, has moved to Stony Point, and is erecting a wagon shop nearly opposite the school house. [This may be Henry A. Stephens, the husband of Nannie Hill Grinter, daughter of Frances Catherine Grinter. "Doc" Young and family of Russellville, Ky., visited Mrs. Young's uncle, John C. Grinter, and other relatives in these parts, a short time ago and have gone to Barbour county to relocate. John C. Grinter and R. T. Moony, each have fine fields of wheat, the best we have seen in this county, although as a general rule, wheat is almost a total failure in this part as in other parts of the county. Quite a number of real estate transfers have been made this spring, among which are the following: Mr. Fowler to James F. Grinter, 80 acres; John Gable to L. E. Grinter, 40 acre

24 April. L.[inton] E. Grinter and Misses Annie and Ida Grinter, of Muncie, made our school and the scribe a pleasant visit last.

14 August. Republican Central Committee. On Friday, August 7th, the following were elected ad the central committee: Delaware - W. H. Grinter.

25 September. Stony Point. Mr. Linton Grinter's wheat crop made twenty-two and one-third bu. Per acre. Mr. John W. Grinter was up from Indian Ter. He reports fin e crops. W. A. Defries and family are visiting relatives of Stony Point and vicinity. He hails from Kentucky. J. L. Defries is preparing for a trip to Mrs. Norris, his daughter's, in southern Missouri.

10 August. Important Sale. The final transactions in the sale of 617 4-10 acres of land by W.[illiam] H.[enry] H. [arrison] Grinter et al. to the Riverside Investment and Improvement company were completed Monday. This tract of land lies a short distance west of Muncie station on the hills and consisted largely of wood land. This added to the property already owned by the Riverside company makes in all some 800 acres, which they intend to beautify and improve. Lying as it does on a fine plateau overlooking the Kaw Valley and being abundantly supplied with springs and streams, it can be made into one of the finest parks in the west. It lies nearly opposite the town of Quivira on the south side of the river and it may be expected that the important developments in this part of the country will take place in a very short time. The price paid for the Grinter tract was $100 per acres. List of Real Estate Transactions included: W. H. H. Grinter to H. F. Robinson, land in 29, 11, 24 . . . 36,000.

16 December. Distressing Accident W. H. H. Grinter Shot through a Mistake - He Shoots Slayer and Then Drops Dead. The people of this city were shocked to learn Monday that W. H. H. Grinter, one of the best and favorably known citizens of the county had been accidentally killed while on on a hunting expedition in Southwest Missouri. The deceased, his brother C. R. Grinter, and James Grinter, a cousin, were hunting in Ozark County, Mo., near Rockbridge, having been in that neighborhood for something over three weeks. Another party of hunters from the vicinity of Ft. Scott were hunting in the same locality.

Saturday morning between 8 and 9 o'clock both parties were out hunting. The deceased was on a hillside in a crouching position imitating the call of a turkey. It is supposed that W. H. Racqua, the man who shot him hearing the noise, and seeing a dark object in the brush fired three buckshot from his gun taking effect on Mr. Grinter's head, neck, and shoulder. Mr. Grinter immediately sprang to his feet and fired both barrels of his gun at Racqua, who was approaching, killing him instantly. His brother, who ran towards him on hearing the shots, heard Mr. Grinter say, "You shot me and I'll kill you." These were his last words; he died a few moments after his brother reached him. A coroner's jury rendered a verdict that each man came to his death by the other's hand, through mistaking each other for game. The remains were brought to Swigley's undertaking rooms Monday where they were prepared for burial on the following day.

In Memoriam. The friends and relatives paid the last tribute to all that was earthly of W. H. H. Grinter Tuesday afternoon, and all that is left them now is the recollection of the fine character and noble example of the citizen, neighbor and kinsman, who came to his untimely end in such a tragic manner. W. H. H. Grinter was the son of Moses R. and Anne Grinter, who came to tine territory in 1832. He was born on November 1st, 1841 and is said to have been the first white child born in the county. At the time of his death, he was entering his 47th year. His early life, and in fact all of it, except the period spent in the army, was passed in this county.

On September 1st, 1863, he enlisted in Company E, 15th Kansas cavalry for three years, or during the war. He held the rank of orderly sergeant until peace was declared. On July 1st, 1865, he was discharged by special order No. 176 to accept the commission of First Lieutenant of his company. as a reward fore meritorious conduct. He was commissioned by Sam'l. J. Crawford, who was the governor of Kansas at that time. Since that to me he has been engaged in farming, and by industry and frugality had a amassed a very smug fortune, having been one of the owners of the Riverside tract near Muncie until recently, when it was purchased by a wealthy syndicate of which he was a member at the time of his death. Since the death of his father, in 1878, he and his widowed mother [Anne Marshall Grinter] and sister have been living together, he never have been married.

Mr. Grinter was quiet and unostentatious in his manners, and although very popular with all classes of people he never sought his own personal advancement. He was well informed on all topics of general interest and was public spirited to ah high degree. He was an earnest advocate of all that was been in all matters pertaining to the general welfare, and it went without saying that W. H. H. Grinter's moral support was always on the the side of the best men and measures. No higher tribute can be paid to any citizen. He was a man of fie physique, very fond of hunting, and one of the surest and quickest marksmen in the country.

He was interred at the cemetery near his old home. Rev. G. J. Warren of Gallatin, Mo., Rev. Mr. White of White Church and Rev. J. McCormer of this city officiated at the obsequies. The funeral arrangements were under the direction of H. S. Swingley, were very complete in every detail. The pall bearers were John Caskey, J. H. Coleman, C. F. Gilford, John Barger, Henry Sheley and M. R. Conlier. In the death of W. H. H. Grinter his family and the community have suffered an irreparable loss, and worse of regret for his tragic fate and sympathy for his family are on every lip.

6 January. Edwardsville. At a shooting match held Saturday last in Williamson's grove, Jim Grinter, Jim Malone, Henry Wilson, and Jack Brown, were the lucky shots.

13 January. Edwardsville. Jim Grinter is now papa and the way in which he "set 'em up" to the boys plainly told that he was highly honored with his new position. It is a bouncing boy. Letters of Administration granted to John Caskey on December 31, 1887, W. H. H. Grinter Estate.

27 July. That Vicious Cow Again. Mrs. J. F. Timmons [Maria Jane Grinter Timmons, dau. of James Grinter] of Edwardsville, who is visiting friends in this city was attacked by the vicious cow that ranges along Barnett Street from Sixth to Eighth Streets. Tuesday night Mrs. Timmons had occasion to go with her friend on an errand to that portion of the city. Near the corner of Seventh and Barnett streets, they encountered the cow. The savage brute unexpectedly attacked Mrs. Timmons, knocking her down and bruising her considerably. Springing to her feet quickly Mrs. Timmons made her escape before the animal could strike her a second time. The cow attacked Mrs. Lou Barnard a few weeks ago an account of which was published in the Gazette at the time. The cow has attacked several persons at different times and yet she is allowed to run at large. The people living in the vicinity are anxious to have this dangerous animal off the street.

Grinter, who for a long term of years has been a member of the central committee, and a staunch republican, which were adopted. WHEREAS, Since the last annual meeting of the Wyandotte county republican committee, we have lost by death one of our most valued members, who, for many years, assisted us by his counsel and work, W. H. H. Grinter. Be it RESOLVED, That in the death of Mr. Grinter the republican party has lost an able and efficient worker, the county one of its valued citizens, and his family a true son and brother. After the adoption of the resolution, Mr. G .U. S. Hovey, of White Church, made a brief speech eulogistic of Mr. Grinter, calling attention to the fact that he was the first white child born in the county, and at the breaking out of the war he threw aside the traditions of his family and espoused the cause of the republican party and did valiant service for the country and his party, both on the battlefield and in the walks of a private citizen
7 September. The M. E. Conference. At the morning session of the annual conference of the M. E. church south this morning, H. C. Kirby and J. D. Austin were admitted to the conference on trial, and A. J. Lawless was readmitted. F. A. White and C. A. Kirby were elected to deacons' orders, and will be ordained at the morning services next Sunday. In the evening the bishop announced that he had decided to divide the conference into two districts for the convenience of the ministers in their work, with a presiding elder for each district, Bishop Hendrix then announced the following appointments: Kansas City Circuit – H. C. Kirby.
14 September. Muncie and Stony Point. J. F. Timmons sold two teams belonging to Frank Worthington and Bill Marks Monday to satisfy a chattel mortgage. Thos. Grinter reports about only one-half a crop of apples this year, and will only have about 3,000 bushels off of 900 trees. Oscar Newman is building a new residence on his farm north of Stony Point. J. F. Grinter's cellar under his house, which he started seven years ago, when he built his house, is nearing completion. If you want to get into trouble just ask "Shanghai" about his cellar.

5 October. After an absence of three weeks visiting friends and relatives in Eastern Arkansas, Rev. Kirby has returned with renewed health to resume his year's labors on the Kansas City (Wyandotte) circuit. The circuit will be held as it was last year until further notice is given. Hon. J. F. Timmons has returned from the reunion at Columbus. He had a splendid time. And reports the show to have been immense. He says is overwhelmingly Republican and that many of the brigade comrades from Illinois, Indiana and other states report the mechanics in all the railroad and other shops as against the Mills bill, and all for Harrison.

12 October. J. F. Timmons has returned from his extended trip in Ohio well pleased with the country and people, and especially with the great boom for Harrison in that state. From his remarks, one would infer that he had been converted from a Democrat to a full fledged Harrison man. J. F. Timmons has built a new tenement house on his farm

2 November. Miss Bettie Grinter who had been visiting her brother, J. C. Grinter, will leave in a few days for her home in Kentucky. Stony Point. Mr. W. A. 16 April. Stony Point. Mr. George Grinter and James Mooney have returned from Sedalia, Mo., where they have been attending school.

23 April. The Wyandottes. I remember once riding out from Quindaro with Charles Ketchum, prominent Delaware – and it hardly seems possible, but Quindaro was in 1857 a larger and more flourishing place than Wyandotte. As late as 1858 I used to ride up there of a Sunday morning to get Uncle Menser to shave me…. But I started to relate my interview with Ketchum. He told me that in the old days, when the Delawares were driven from their homes by that fierce Indian confederacy, the Five Nations, the Wyandottes, who had long before felt their vengeance, gave them a piece of their blanket to sit upon, and that in return the Delawares had now given them a piece of their blanket; but the simple Indians had learned some of the ways of civilization during the lapse of years, and it seems to me that there was a substantial monetary consideration connected with the last transfer. At any rate I have always understood that the Wyandottes paid the Delawares for the land. Mr. Ketchum said that that the Delawares called the Wyandottes "Uncle" and in turn addressed by them as "Grandfather." I doubt that he had ever read the fascinating "Leatherstocking" tale, but the story, as he told it, sounded familiar. I only know that when our ways parted we dismounted from our horses and, seated on a moss-grown log, he filled my ears with Indian lore until nearly sundown.
14 May. Stony Point. Mrs. Baxter Grinter of Kansas City, Mo., spent last week visiting at the home of her father-in-law. Mr. T. A. Grinter of this place. The Sunday schools of Wyandotte township will hold their annual meeting on the second Sunday in June at Grinter's chapel, beginning at 10 o'clock a.m.

14 January. A Pioneer Dead. Thomas A. Grinter, and old and highly respected citizen of Wyandotte County Thomas A. Grinter, an old and highly respected citizen of Wyandotte County, succumbed after a short illness to that dreaded disease, pneumonia, early Sunday morning. Mr. Grinter was 57 years of age. His remains were interred in the Grinter cemetery near Stony Point Monday.
10 March. Farmer Grinter Robbed. A. G. [Ambrose] Grinter, an old and highly respected farmer living near White Church, reported to Sheriff Peterson last Friday that his house had been burglarized that night. The thieves forced an entrance digging up the earth found over $500 in gold. They then made their escape without arousing the family from their peaceful slumbers. The robbery was not discovered until this morning. Mr. Grinter lost no time coming to this city to notify the sheriff. The robbery is unquestionably the work of some one who is familiar with the premises and the eccentricities of Mr. Grinter who has but little faith in banks as is shown from the fact that he buried such a large amount in the ground.

The Grinter Robbery – The Sheriff Finds the Stolen" Money in a Hen's Nest.

A. G. [Ambrose] Grinter's gold has been found. As stated in Saturday's Gazette, Mr. Grinter reported to the police that his cellar had been entered by thieves on the previous night and over $500 of his gold was stolen. Sheriff Peterson placed Deputy March on the case and he came back from White Church Saturday night with just $710 more than when he started. Of this $600 was $20 pieces, $45 in silver, and the balance in $10 and $1 gold pieces. Mr. March and Grinter went to the home of the farmer, where they found a grief-stricken family. Mr. Grinter stated to the sheriff that it was the savings of his life. On the train Mr. Grinter gave the sheriff the history of the money,, some of which he claimed had been in his possession for over fifty years. He was positive that it was all gold that he had hid in his cellar. But the more he was questioned, the more he became confused, and at last declared that he did not have the least idea how much money he had saved.

The story of the search and the finding of the money is as follows:

> When they arrived at Grinter's home the officer made an investigation of the cellar, which had been completely torn up, and found the lock was broken, showing that thieves had been there. He next surveyed the premises and in the orchard found an old can and shot bag which the old man positively identified as the ones which did services of a savings bank at the Grinter homestead. The articles, however, had the appearance of having been in the orchard for some time. After searching about the farm and every nook in the house, the sheriff almost gave up his task of finding the farmer's money and had almost come to the conclusion that the thieves really got it.
> He went back to the White Church depot, but fortunately missed the 2 o'clock train. The next was due at 5 o'clock. He returned to the house and began searching the barn. Deep under the hay in a manger he pulled out a box which had been used for the purpose of a chicken nest and to his surprise the dirt was loose. He dug up the earth about three inches and pulled out a can which contained just $710. When the money was viewed by the old man, he declared it was not his. He said he never saved silver, and that the officer should keep it. He was positive that his savings were stolen. Deputy Sheriff March brought the gold into the city and turned it over to Sheriff Peterson, who placed it in the bank for safekeeping.

21 April. Grinter Gets His Money. Sheriff Peterson Tuesday afternoon "shelled out" $710 in gold to John C. [should be Ambrose] Grinter. The money has been in charge of the officer since last January when it was found by under Sheriff March on Grinter's farm, and the latter refusing to accept it because it had been moved from the place where he thought he had hid it. He also claimed some one had stolen his money. Yesterday he concluded that it was his money and so he called for it. His memory served him quite well yesterday and he was able to recall the exact amount, how much each sack contained together with the denomination of each piece of coin 23 June. John Grinter Registers a "Kick". John Grinter, the well known farmer living a few miles west of the city, was in town Thursday. He paid his respects to the board of equalization and "kicked" until perspiration ran in rippling rivulets from his face, because his valuable tract of land had been assessed at $50 more than last year. County Clerk Bruce stated that Mr. Grinter was the first vigorous "kicker" that had made his appearance. John says every relative he had in the county was raised this year and for what he did not know. No change was made in his case.

28 July. The Muncie Dam, The Awards Made by the Condemnation Commissioners. The commissioners awarded damages for lands condemned as follows: Martha Kirby, $500 … Thomas Grinter, $1; James Grinter, $1.

22 December. Elected Officers. Delaware Lodge, No. 96, A. F. and A. M., of White Church, held their annual election of officers last Tuesday night. The following officers were chosen unanimously: … John Grinter, secretary.

29 December. Kansans in Town. W. E. Zeigler of Independence, and a prominent citizen of southern Kansas is in the city today. Mr. Zeigler is of the opinion that there will be some fun at Topeka during the next two weeks.

Savages – The Fertile Valleys of Utah Could Be Settled. [Excerpt from interview with Ex-Governor Tom Fletcher (of Kansas?)] – Did you ever think about this reservation system? Well, it is wrong – all wrong. There are tribes who have had the most careful attention and for whose civilization effort and money have been expended without stint for nearly 100 years, and they are still savages – we have not even got the blanket off them yet. The reservation system is the cause of the failure…. The squaw men, a kind of white men who cannot live in civilized communities, are the only whites they get acquainted with, and it is no wonder that, judging by they thus come in contact with, they regard the white man as unworthy to be emulated. [Followed by a flowery poem] The writer preached her funeral to a large and weeping congregation at the Stony Point Church, where we laid her away to rest till God shall call the immortalized body to again be the abode of the immortal soul. May God bless and comfort the hearts of the dear parents is our prayer. – Rev. J. H. Morgan, Piper, Kansas.

2 January. Yesterday the husband of Mary Grinter [apparently William Grinter], aged 25 years, who lives in the "Patch," was discharged from Bethany hospital where he had been nursing a broken leg. Last night Mrs. Grinter, for reasons thus far unknown, took a big dose of carbolic acid. The dose was sufficient to cause her to scream violently with pain, but not to kill. The neighbors brought Dr. C. M. Stemen to the woman's assistance and he promptly administered an antidote for the poison. Mrs. Grinter was then sent to the hospital where her husband had left but a few hours before.

Charles Blue Jacket Aids the Wyandotte County Historical Society in Locating a Grave of a Brother of Tecumseh's Near Argentine.

The visit of Charles Blue Jacket, the surviving chief of the Shawnees, by request of and as the guest of the Wyandotte County Historical Society, to locate the grave of a noted Shawnee Prophet, brother of Tecumseh, is an event of more than ordinary historical significance. His mission to this city is to locate the grave. The Prophet died and was buried near Shawnee springs south of Argentine many years ago. The noted Shawnee Chief met with the Historical Society this morning at Argentine and accompanied the members of this organization to the burial grounds, where the remains of the prophet rest. The exact spot is not known but the chief is positive that he will be able to locate the grave. Five generations of the Grinter family, descendants of the Delaware Indians, will also be in attendance. [Emphasis added] The passing of a people or a race is an incident in the world's history that the whites on the frontier have seen much of, and the remnants of tribes once powerful now living in the Indian territory, and from which they are being lowly squeezed, are worthy of the profoundest consideration. Wyandotte County is exceedingly rich in Indian history, three of the most noted tribes in all the records of the continent, the Wyandottes, the Shawnees, and the Delawares, making practically their last stand here.

Chief Charles Blue Jacket, our guest, is the son of George Blue Jacket, who signed the treaty of November 7, 1825, and August 8, 1831, and was interpreter to the Shawnee council in 1855. He is an educated man and handles the English language so that no one would suspect him of being chief of a tribe of Indians. He is tall, rather slender and wears short chin whiskers. He came to this section in 1832 from Ohio, where the main body of Shawnees was located. The father, George Blue Jacket, was a noted fighter in the war of 1812, and went with the crowd of Shawnees that fought with the British troops. Chief Blue Jacket was never much of a warrior. He has participated in nearly every treaty made by the government within the last forty or fifty years. Blue Jacket has been married three times and is the father of twenty-three children. His three wives were Shawnees. The first and second are dead, while the third is living a happy life with the chief and their children at Blue Jacket station in the Indian territory.

Part of the Shawnoes, as they were originally called, lived in Missouri and part in Ohio. The treaty of 1825 moved them all to the west line of the state of Missouri. Their land extended from the Missouri line west to Fort Riley along the south bank of the Kansas river 120 miles, south to Council Grove, and then back to the place of beginning, making a tract equal to fifty miles square, taking in the counties of Morris, Wabaunsee, Douglas and Johnson. For this tract of land they ceded to the United States certain lands in Ohio and Missouri. They also received from the government $829,000. Against this treaty the Wyandottes protested claiming that the land in Wyandotte and Johnson counties had first been ceded to them. The Shawnees remained, however, in possession of the land, sharing the Wyandotte hunting and fishing grounds, and they always lived in peace. The Kansas land was conveyed to the Shawnees by deed May 11, 1844.

The Shawnees had their ancient home in the basin of the Cumberland river, and they played such an important part in the treaty of 1682 with William Penn that the Society of Friends took a special interest in them. Thomas Chalkley, a member of the London society of the denomination, who visited them in 1706, mentions among the peculiarities of the nation its custom of admitting women to its councils. He says: "In the council was a woman who took part in the deliberations of this council, as well as upon all important occasions." The interpreter informed him, as a reason for this, that "some women were wiser than some men, and they had not done anything for years without the council of this ancient, grave woman, who spoke much in this council." The Shawnees have a tradition that they came across the water, and they are the only tribe who claim they have European blood in their veins. The Iroquois made war on the Shawnoes, and the latter were badly scattered, some going to the Carolinas, and Florida, and others to "New Spain." They were reunited in 1786, and by treaty settled on the Ohio river at the mouth of the Little Miami. They later removed to Cape Girardeau, Missouri, from whence they came to Kansas. They seem never to have inclined much to war, and readily adopted the innovations of the whites. Tecumseh, however, was a Shawnee warrior, one of the few whose name and fame will live through all history. Another account says that a band of 500 Shawnee warriors gave the government a great deal of trouble in the early history of Indiana. When they were re-united in the valley of the Ohio, Father Marquette says "they were in such numbers that they seem as many as twenty-three villages in one district, and fifteen in another, lying quite near each other."

The first mission school among them in Kansas was established by the Rev. Thomas Johnson, a few miles south of Rosedale in 1829. Col. A. S. Johnson, for many years land commissioner of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, and now a retired citizen of Topeka, is a son of Rev. Johnson. Col. Johnson is supposed to be the first white child born in Kansas, but this is disputed by Mr. McCoy, who says a man named Boone was born at a date sooner at the Delaware agency west of Lawrence. In 1835 the scholars numbered twenty-seven, and the church congregation was composed of seventy-four Shawnees. In 1854 the school had one hundred pupils. The Rev. Johnson represented the Methodist conference of Missouri. In 1831 a Baptist mission was established among them by Rev. Isaac McCoy. The Shawnee Manual Labor School located a few miles south of Rosedale, played an important part in the white history of Kansas. The first Territorial legislature met at Pawnee near Fort Riley July 1st, 1855, and on the 4th adjourned to meet at Shawnee Mission. Here the white settlers, or rather the Missourians made our first code of laws, known as the Bogus Statutes. Their pastor, the Rev. Thomas Johnson was president of their Territorial council.

The Eastern Band of the Shawnoes, numbering about nine hundred souls, including white men who had intermarried in the nation. The white men were not more than twenty. The tribe then owned (1854) about 1,600,000 acres of land or about 1,700 acres each. They had good dwelling houses, well provided with useful and respectable furniture, which was kept in good order by the females, and they lived in the same manner and as well as the whites. They had an abundance of farm wagons, horses, oxen, carriages and buggies. They raised a great deal of corn, oats and some wheat. Their homes were of hewn logs, with shingle roof and stone chimneys, and were kept neat. There were some good mechanics among the younger ones. They had large meeting houses, and frequently held camp meetings, and there were some good lecturers in the tribe

And here we are at the end of a fine tribe of people, whose history beyond William Penn know one knows, but whose history since then has been carefully gathered by the whites who have pushed them out and supplanted them, and with almost the last one to guide a local Historical Society is engaged in the searching for the unmarked grave of a Prophet, famous among the Shawnoes, and whose bones lie with us. It is an interesting event, and a very clever tribute to those who have gone before, whose life is a mystery to men but not to Him who gave it.

DID NOT FIND THE PROPHET'S GRAVE. Word was received in Kansas City yesterday afternoon that Blue Jacket had located the grave of Shawnee Prophet a little over a mile directly south of Argentine, just at the foot of a hull and about fifty yards from a wagon road, but it was not so. Blue Jacket said that the ground and everything on it had been changed so much by the whites that no landmarks were left by which he could locate the grave, and the search had to be given up.

13 November. The Grave of James Swanic, a Delaware Indian Representative Uncovered. Workmen on the Hughes farm, one and three-quarter miles northeast of Edwardsville, unearthed a metallic coffin some time ago. They were plowing when they struck something that gave forth a metallic sound. They had heard that the place had been used once as an Indian burial ground and they removed the loose earth. Digging about one and one-half feet further they uncovered the coffin. They removed the head piece and through the glass could see the face of the dead man in a good state of preservation. In one hand a glove was held and a silk handkerchief laid across the coat. Several old settlers at once pronounced the grave that of James Swanic, a Delaware Indian who had been the tribe's representative at Washington. He died in 1849 at the national capital. He was 49 years old at the time of his death. His body was embalmed at Washington and placed in a sealed casket. It was brought to Kansas City by steamboat and buried at this place. The site of the grave was on a piece of rolling ground and the earth had washed so much that the casket was left only a few feet below the surface. The coffin was not disturbed, but was again covered with earth in its resting place.

Mrs. Bartles was one of the pioneers of Wyandotte county, and had lived here for the past forty years. She came to Kansas with her husband from New Jersey. They came up the Missouri River and landed at Quindaro in June, 1857. During the war her husband took an active part in suppressing the border of ruffians that invaded this section of the country at that time. He died in this city about seventeen years ago. Her two sons – Theodore and Jacob – enlisted and fought in the Federal army. Theodore died about nine years ago at the home where his mother died. Jacob is now located in Bartlesville, I. T. He arrived in the city from there several days ago.

Algonquian Language Family (Algic)

American Indian languages do not belong to a single Amerindian family, but 25-30 small ones....There are around 25 million native speakers of the more than 800 surviving Amerind languages. The vast majority of these speakers live in Central and South America, where language use is vigorous. In Canada and the United States, only about half a million native speakers of an Amerind tongue remain.
The Algonquian Language Family is known as 'Algic" to linguists. "Algonquian" or "Algonkian"' is the general term most often used by the Native Americans who speak them. Spoken in the northern US and Canada, the Algonquian language family includes. LENAPE - DELAWARE DICTIONARY

In 1889, Daniel G. Brinton and Frederick D. Stone of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania edited the contents of an anonymous MS. in the archives of the Moravian Church at Bethlehem, PA. This, with the additions they incorporated, became A Lenape - English Dictionary. Their consultant was Rev. Albert Seqaqkind Anthony, himself a Lenape, who was the assistant Missionary to the Delawares and "Six Nations" in Canada. For a while, we included all of this dictionary, but because we have a space (size) limitation of 50 megabytes on this web sites, we have eliminated this section. The American Amerind Foundation is the authority on this subject. The "Native Languages of America" site is a wonderful one and has so much to offer for all of us. We are grateful for the research of those responsible for the site. Editor

Native Languages of the Americas:
Lenape (Unami, Delaware, Lenni Lenape)

Language: Lenape, also known as Unami or Delaware, is an Algonquian language once spoken in New Jersey and Delaware. Today the language is spoken natively by only one elder, and will soon be lost; as with many dying Indian languages, though, there has been a resurgence in interest among some of the younger generation, and efforts to revive the language are underway. Two closely related languages are considered dialects of Lenape by some linguists, distinct Algonquian languages by others: Nanticoke or Southern Delaware, which was last spoken in the mid-1800's, and Munsee Delaware, which is still spoken by a few elders in Ontario.

People: The Lenni Lenape are often said to be extinct. This is not so; there are about 11,000 Lenape in Oklahoma, where they were sent by the US government (which only recently stopped incorrectly classifying them as Cherokees), and another 5000 in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, though they do not have federal recognition and their language has nearly disappeared. The Munsee Delaware, in Ontario and Wisconsin, consider themselves a distinct tribe.

Lenape Culture and History

As a complement to the information we have provided about the Lenape language, we would like to present our collection of indexed links about the Lenape people and various aspects of their society. The emphasis of these pages is on American Indians as a living people with a present and a future as well as a past. Lenape history is interesting and important, but the Lenape are still here today, too, and we have tried to feature modern writers as well as traditional folklore, contemporary art as well as museum pieces, and the issues and struggles of today as well as the tragedies of yesterday. Suggestions for new links are always welcome.

We are adding data to this section on a continuing basis. Some names may be duplicated. All spellings of names are included. Both Lenape and English versions are included, when available. Also, I am beginning to sort out similar names. At this juncture, all data are being added without substantive editing. There are discrepancies in the sources used, so use the information presented with some discretion. Names are Lenape-Delaware persons (either English or Lenape) unless otherwise noted. The term "Whom See" for an entry is being replaced by the full entry for both the English or Lenape version of the name. It takes up more space more work for the editor, but easier for the reader. Originally, I had tried to separate the different parts of the Lenape name by a hyphen, but now I am going back to the simpler form. For example, Wilaquenaho, rather than Wi-La-Que-Na-Ho or WiLaQueNaHo.

As explained in Lenape Nation on the Web, at one time there were both War Chiefs and Peace Chiefs. The peace chief, ruling when there was no war, was hereditary. The title of war chief could be bestowed on any brave warrior. After the white men came they helped to instigate the idea of having one principal chief over all. They were usually chosen from the chiefs of the Turtle Clan (totem group), the Lenape believing the Turtle to be the receptacle for the creation of man. In the 1800s, chiefs were chosen from local communities of family groups. This continued until the 1920s when chiefs were elected by the general membership of the Nation.

Munsee who were signers of treaties have been added. All Delaware--and Munsee who were signers --from the treaties have now been entered. Currently I am trying to find and document the sources for each entry. The symbol * by an entry means that I have something further to add to the entry such as a source, a date, or the checking of the spelling of a name. Editor

[Iroquois>Seneca] Some settled at Paxtang where they gradually merged with Sassoonan's (whom see) people, the Unami Lenape. (Lenape Nation on the Web) The following information is from an article titled "Chief Nemacolin--A Delaware Indian Headman" by Alma Irene King-Finney:

Nemacolin was born into the Lenape Nation; Unami (Turtle) Tribe and the Fish Clan. His father Chickoconnecon, Chief of the Fish Clan, married the daughter of Jacques Poynton (1643-1738) of Canada, and his Indian wife. They were married in 1714. Chickoconnecon moved his family back to America and settled on the Susquehanna River in Eastern Pennsylvania. This are is where Nemacolin was born in 1715 and grew up. He prepared to become Chief of the Fish Clan after his father. While living in this area, Nemacolin and his parents lived next door to Thomas Cresap and his family. The two families became good friends, and they remained so all of their lives. As the white settlers began to encroach more and more on the Indian lands, Nemacolin's family moved to what is now east of Uniontown, PA, while it was still a wilderness. By remaining friends with Thomas Cresap, Nemacolin and his father became good friends of George Washington. George was working for the State of Virginia under Gov. Dinwiddie, who organized the Ohio Land Company. This Company was claiming land along the Ohio River for Virginia. Chickoconnecon asked George Washington and Christopher Gist to please help him to receive money for his land that was taken away from him. This never happened. From Richard C. Adam's, The Delaware Indians, a Brief History, p. 42: Comanche Agency, Tex, January 1, 1857. The bearer of this letter, John Conner, a Delaware Indian, has been my interpreter for the last two years, and has been known to me for many years. I recommend him to the kindness of all Americans who may meet him. I know him to be a man of truth, honesty, and integrity. He has been on the frontier of Texas for nearly thirty years, and has rendered to the government's important services so much that the State of Texas has given him a league of land and made him a citizen of that State. I ask of all who may meet Mr. Conner a kind reception, and can assure them that the people of Texas, who know him, will appreciate it. The man who has devoted the best of his life in trying to make peace with the wild and warlike tribes on our frontier, who has often risked his life and lost his property, is certainly entitled to the kindness and respect of the people he has served so faithfully. I therefore ask that Mr. Conner may meet with the kindness that he so well deserves from all good citizens. John R. Taylor, Indian Agent, Texas Indians

Lonacona - He was the son of Nemacolin/Nenacolin, and grandson of the latter's father, Chickoconnecon (both of whom see). The following is from the article "Chief Nemacolin--A Delaware Indian Headman" by Alma Irene King-Finney, contributed by Mrs. Donnie Huckaby Donniehuck@aol.com wife of Sidney Don Huckaby 6th great-grandson of Chief Checochinican.

Lonacona (born before 1738 in Ft. Redstone) asked permission from his father to return to Maryland, as he had become good friends with Daniel Cresap, Thomas' oldest son, and wished to live near him in Rawlings, MD. Nemacolin gave his permission, and Lonacona took his Delaware wife and family back with Daniel. Thomas Cresap had named Lonacona George Washington Cresap to protect him from white violence. The town of Lonaconing, MD - south of Frostburg, MD - was named for Lonacona. Georges Creek was also named for him. Lonacona died around 1790 in the home of his friend Dan, and he is buried in the Cresap Cemetery in Rawlings, MD. Lonacona's daughter Teresa married William Workman of Mt. Savage, MD. Later, William moved his family to Kerens, WV.

McCoy, Reverend Isaac - A white man born near Uniontown, Fayette County, Pennsylvania 13 June 1784. A central figure in the history of the Indian Territory, mainly in Kansas-- from 1828 to 1842. He is considered by many to have been an advocate of the advancement of Native Americans. This view may not be held by all because he also introduced in 1824 a plan for the removal of Eastern tribes to the west of the Mississippi River. The Act of 26 May 1830 passed the Senate on 26 May 1830. In 1837 Rev. McCoy was sent by the Government to survey the Delaware lands. He started with his two sons and a small party, comprising several Delaware, on 16 August 1837. In 1842 he removed to Louisville, Kentucky, where he took charge of the Indian Mission Association. He remained in that position until his death in 1846. (William G. Cutler, History of the State of Kansas, "Indian History," Part 6)

Montour, Billy - Lenape name Hawdorowwatistie, received along with sixteen others, an equal share of a three-mile square on the Sandusky under Article 19 of the Treaty of 29 September 1817 at the Foot of the Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie River in Ohio. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 155)

Montour, William - William Montour, Captain Pipe, Isaac Hill, and Solomon Journeycake in the fall of 1829 left the Pipestone Reserve for Kansas with a party of about thirty Delaware. (Pratt)

Montour, Captain John - Captain John Montour, part Delaware, became a staunch leader of Delaware contingents on the side of the Americans. His father, Andrew Montour, son of Madame Montour, had been interpreter and liaison for George Washington with the Indians before the Revolution. Captain John Montour's war record includes serving with both the Virginia 13th Continental Regiment and the 8th Pennsylvania Regiment. Both of these units were formed from recruiting in western Pennsylvania in order to protect that frontier. Captain Montour was stationed variously at Fort Pitt, Fort McIntosh and Fort Laurens. A document found in the archives shows that John Montour signed receipt as follows while he was with the 8th Pennsylvania: "Received Augt 10th 1779 of Colo Brodhead one hundred fifteen dollars for services as an Interpreter & Warrior." (signed John Montour)

At one time, he led a coalition of more than 800 native Americans based at Fort Laurens in Ohio. In 1780-1781 he was captain of a company of Delawares. Although military records were destroyed in the burning of Washington by the British in 1814, names of some of these Delaware soldiers have survived. The Delaware Crossing Chapter of the Kansas Society of the Sons of the American Revolution has discovered 11 of the Delaware Indians who served with Captain John Montour from 15 June 1780 to 31 October 1781. Included with the dates of their service is the amount of pay for Privates Aleemen, Caylaylamind, Handutit, Hingwalupa, Pimeelaoughan, Quillpukamen, Shaughamek, Tawquatchee, and Captains Mahingwapoosses, Mawanapano and Nanawaland. At the end of his enlistment, each private received "6 dollars and 60/90ths" per month for a total of "108 dollars and 12/90ths". The captains received 40 dollars per month for a total of "649 dollars and 30/90ths" for 16 months and 7 days. (Submitted by Comptroller "Kes" Kesler of the Delaware Crossing Chapter, SAR)

Montour, Joseph - Chief Montour of Pennsylvania was a descendant of Teedyuscung (whom see). (Lenape Nation on the Web)

Timothy Crumrin, Historian for Conner Prairie, in the publication A Living History Museum, had this to say --in part--about the book. "By tracing the experiences of William Conner, his parents, and his brother John and his other siblings in this book, and by learning more of William's Delaware Indian Family, one can see much of the United States' early history unfold. By learning about the Conners, the reader learns about Native American/White interaction, the creation of middle America, and the insistent movement westward into new frontiers--no matter who had to be pushed out, or how." (Weslager: "Despite a misleading title, is an authentic account of the Delawares in Indiana and their role in the War of 1812. Thompson, however, made an error that Ferguson and others perpetuated. He mistakenly identified Mekinges (mother of the Delaware chiefs John and James Conner) as the daughter of Chief William Anderson.")

Trelease properly raises doubts that the Minisinks were a subdivision of the Delawares. He believes that the Delaware tribes were not really a tribe at all until well into the eighteenth century, and that at the time of White contact it was fragmented into thirty to forty autonomous communities. I fully agree with this conclusion. ")

TREATIES

[Need link to 1832 - 1855 Treaties. Editor.]

1661-1809 1814-1829 1832-1855 1856-Present

If you see any errors or know of any additional treaties or agreements between the Delaware and the United States or between the Delaware and other tribes or nations, send them to me, Tom Hahn, swiftwater@lenapedelawarehistory.net. Regarding errors in spelling, remember that some of the spelling may not be the same today as it was up to 200 years ago. Also, many personal names were variously spelled. Thanks to Kansas Delaware Cindy Gentry of Lawrence, Kansas for her generous assistance. Certain Munsee and Stockbridge Treaties have been included. The basic work on the treaties is now completed.

After one has read these treaties, he/she will understand better the statement made by Chief Red Cloud, Ogallala Lakota: They made us many promises. more than I can remember, but they never kept but one; they promised to take our land and they took it.

The country selected in the fork of the Kansas and Missouri River....shall be conveyed and forever secured by the United States, to the said Delaware Nation, as their permanent residence: An the United States hereby pledges the faith of the government to guarantee to the said Delaware Nation forever, the the quiet and peaceable possession and undisturbed enjoyment of the same. Treaty with the Delaware, 1829

Or, the statement made by Henry B. Whipple in "The True Policy to the Indian Tribes, ca. 1877": There is no page in our dealing with the Indians upon which we can look with pleasure.

And, the statement by Black Elk (1932) in Black Elk Speaks : Once we were happy in our country and we were seldom hungry, for the two-legged and the four-legged lived together like relatives, and there was plenty for them and for us.

TREATIES 1661-1809

TREATY BETWEEN THE DELAWARE AND MARYLAND, 1661

Chief Pinna of the Passyunk Lenape made a treaty of peace with Governor Phillip Calvert of Maryland. (Lenape Nation on the Web)

TREATY BETWEEN WILLIAM PENN AND THE DELAWARE, 17 SEPTEMBER 1682, PRESENT PHILADELPHIA

The Delaware signed this first treaty with the English under the Shackamaxon Tree at present Philadelphia with William Penn, the proprietor, called Onan by the Delaware. Delaware signers were Tamanend and three other chiefs, one of whom may have been Tishcohan pictured below. This was supposedly the only treaty between a white man and the Delaware that was never broken. (Cranor, Kik-Tha-Whe-Nund, p. 2)

William Penn

Once William Penn received his charter he realized--or at least was informed--that much of the land he wanted was held by Indians who would expect payment in exchange for a quitclaim to vacate the territory. The tribe he would have to deal with most often was the Delaware (Lenni Lenape), who had never been defeated militarily by the Swedes or the Dutch. Penn, not surprisingly, had no military ambitions; he even refused to fortify Philadelphia. Hence, the only practical and legal way to get their land and secure their friendship was a treaty. The treaty also demonstrated Penn's claim to the land to his investors, who would have been much less interested in the venture without clear title.

Penn and his agents began the process of buying land from the Native 'holders.. These holders were various Delaware chiefs, and not as legend has it the Iroquois. Despite the fact that this (mostly) New York State Confederacy of the 'Five Nations' had [allegedly] defeated the Delaware, they did not have the power the sell the land. As Francis Jennings points out, this misreading of the situation resulted from the fact that the Delaware played the role of peacemaker among various quarreling tribes. As Native women often mediated disputes, the Delaware held the position of the 'woman' in this arrangement. Europeans wrongly assumed that the 'woman' position signified a lack of rights and lack of power. However, they were correct in assessing that the Iroquois held the most power, though Penn thought that politics, at least dealing with Indians, were local so he favored the less militarily powerful Delaware. What is less assuredly myth--or fact--is whether Penn ever signed a 'Great Treaty' in 1682 at the village of Shackamaxon. As we have seen, for many Americans (and non-Americans such as Voltaire) this deed proved the most inspiring 'event' of Penn's life. Francis Jennings believes that Penn signed the treaty and never broke it, but that his less scrupulous successors destroyed the document, presumably so that they could renege on its provisions. We do know that Penn did buy much land, so must have made at least one such agreement, instituting what was known in Indian terminology as a 'chain of friendship'. And there do exist several references to this chain being made between Penn and the Delaware.

William Penn's Purchases from The Indians

Penn paid a total of 1,200 pounds for the land, which though a large sum, was probably fair for both sides. Penn took the advice of Dutch and Swedish colonists who had already set some parameters for treaty agreements These earlier settlers provided invaluable assistance in delineating who to contact, and who to pay for the land. On the other side of the 'covenant chain,' the Delaware had many years of negotiating such treaties, and were ready to sell their land to Penn, on their terms. Disease had decimated much of their population so they needed less of the land near Philadelphia, and at the time there was plenty of un-occupied space to the North and West of the (future) city. They worked with a complex arrangement of overlapping 'right's to use certain areas, and rights to dispose of these obligations. So Penn may have had to pay several times to the same holder in order to clear all claims. He was not 'duped' into paying several times for the same property.

Though Penn was generally fair in his purchases, he also had to be a shrewd businessman, especially as he competed with Lord Baltimore for territorial rights. He out-maneuvered Maryland agents in his purchases, thus insuring that his future city would not be largely subsumed by its southern neighbor. Penn had competitors to the North as well. And any northern land transactions meant tangling with New York State for land, and perhaps more importantly, trading rights with the Iroquois Confederacy. To secure new routes to the interior and more trade with the Five Nations, Penn tried to purchase a large piece of land on the Susquehanna River. Pennsylvania could then have a trading post closer to the Iroquois than was Albany. However, New York State merchants beat Penn to the punch by using their comfortable relations with the Confederacy to claim the land--as a 'gift' from the Iroquois nonetheless--before Penn.

The treaty of 1701 is both the first full treaty text that remains extant (there exist parts of earlier ones), and the last agreement brokered directly by Penn rather than his agents. As he had done before, Penn rewarded 'his' Indians. His policies helped make Pennsylvania, in the words of the missionary John Heckewelder, "the last, delightful asylum" for Native Americans. Penn's successors were much less fair and scrupulous in dealing with the Indians. While those who would argue that he essentially sought the same imperialistic goals, only in a kinder, gentler manner, may have a point, one must argue that this 'kindness' was relatively speaking, better than much of the outright hate and distrust that characterized Indian-White relations.

The Walking Purchase August 25, 1737
(From http://www.docheritage.state.pa.us/documents/walkingpurchase.asp)

Record Group 26: Records of the Department of State, Basic Documents, Indian Deeds, #35, "Deed of Nutimus, Teeshakommen, et. al.…to John Thomas and Richard Penn" August 25, 1737. Iron gall ink on parchment, 28 3/8"X 17 5/8".

Consistent with the Society of Friends' (Quakers) belief that all people are children of God and should be considered equals, William Penn attempted to treat Native Americans fairly. Although King Charles II had granted to Penn in 1681 the land that he called "Pennsylvania," Penn also purchased it from the indigenous people, acknowledging them as the rightful owners. He made his first purchase in 1682 and continued this practice in the following years. Many were for small tracts, some overlapping others.

William Penn's sons John and Thomas had inherited the colony's proprietorship, but had lived beyond their means and, like their father, had fallen into debt. In order to increase their income, they were selling land to European settlers even before they had purchased it from the Indians. Provincial Secretary James Logan, too, was selling land. In fact, he was one of Pennsylvania's largest land speculators. The demand for land was strong because of heavy immigration from Europe, and settlers were moving north into the area from southeastern Pennsylvania and west from New Jersey. Provincial officials believed that they needed to extend their authority and provide the institutions of government in these settlements. As a result, they considered it necessary to obtain a clear title from the Indians to the land in the upper Delaware and Lehigh River valleys.

To demonstrate their claim to the area, they showed to the leaders of the Delaware Indians a deed that they insisted indicated that William Penn had bought the land in 1686 but that he had not completed the purchase. Because these Delaware Indians with whom Logan and the Penn brothers spoke had moved there from New Jersey, they explained that they knew nothing about that purchase. They tried to secure help to resist the officials' claims from the Iroquois to whom they were subservient. However, Logan had prepared, and the Six Nations' leaders signed, a deed giving up the Indians' interest in the area. Without support from the Iroquois, the Delaware leaders therefore relinquished on August 25, 1737, the lands that the Penns and Logan wanted.

The next step was to measure the purchase and specify its boundaries. The deed indicated that the purchase extended from a point on the Delaware River near present-day Wrightstown, northwest into the interior "as far as a Man could walk in a day and half," a typical Indian measurement of space. Logan hired three men to "walk off," the area who were accompanied initially by several Indians. The "walk" ended well into the Lehigh River Valley, near what is now the borough of Jim Thorpe, formerly Mauch Chunk, at the foothills of the Blue Mountains. Instead of projecting the boundary due east, provincial surveyors drew the line at right angles to the Upper Delaware River, near the New York border.

The Delawares charged that the deal was a fraud. A reason for the Indians' ignorance of the 1686 sale is that it never happened. Logan could not produce an original copy of the deed, nor does the sale appear in the provincial land records. Also, because the Penns had sent scouting parties to clear the route and had recruited outdoorsmen to travel it, the area that the walk covered became half again to twice the distance that the Indians normally traveled a "day and half." Two of the three hired "walkers" were unable to maintain the fast pace and dropped out. The third eventually collapsed in near exhaustion. The Delaware early had withdrawn in disgust, complaining bitterly that the white men did not "walk fair." Consequently, the outraged Delaware refused to leave the land, whereupon, provincial officials called on the Iroquois to force them out. This they did in 1741, informing the Delaware that as a subject people they had no right to sell land in the first place and insulting them by calling them "women."

The deed and "Walking Purchase" that implemented it were revealing. Certainly, a Britisher prepared the document, but it included not only English legal terminology but also typical Indian phrases that showed their respect for elders and their way of calculating distances. More important is what they disclose concerning the attitude of the Europeans toward the Indians. William Penn's sons John and Thomas, as well as Logan indicated clearly that they had abandoned William Penn's policy of fairness toward the Indians. They seemed to have had no qualms about using one group of Indians to cheat another out of its land. Their action also demonstrated their short-sightedness. Although they achieved their immediate objectives of acquiring land in the upper Delaware and Lehigh River valleys from the Indians, they contributed to a later catastrophe by alienating the Delawares. Forced from their homeland, all but a few moved west where "the French welcomed them and promised them a chance for revenge." Not needing motivation but only the opportunity, as the French implemented their claims to the Allegheny and Ohio River valleys, during the early and mid-1750s the Delaware moved down the Susquehanna and ravaged Pennsylvania's frontier. They destroyed crops, burned barns and homes, carried off and killed many of the colonists. The Quaker Party in the provincial legislature charged, probably validly, that the Delawares' actions were the direct result of the "Walking Purchase."

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE, 17 SEPTEMBER 1778 , FORT PITT, [PITTSBURGH, PA]

Sept. 17, 1778. 7 Stat., 13.

Fort Pitt

(Source: http://www.fortpittmuseum.com/History.html)

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties) Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 3-5.)

Articles of agreement and confederation, made and entered into by Andrew and Thomas Lewis, Esquires, Commissioners for, and in Behalf of the United States of North-America of the one Part, and Capt. White Eyes, John Kill Buck, Junior, and Capt. Pipe, Deputies and Chief Men of the Delaware Nation of the other Part.[1778].

Article I.
That all offences or acts of hostilities by one, or either of the contracting parties against the other, be mutually forgiven, and buried in the depth of oblivion, never more to be had in remembrance.

Article II.
That a perpetual peace and friendship shall from henceforth take place, and subsist between the contracting parties aforesaid, through all succeeding generations: and if either of the parties are engaged in a just and necessary war with any other nation of nations, that then each shall assist the other in due proportion to their abilities, till their enemies are brought to reasonable terms of accommodation: and that if either of them shall discover any hostile designs forming against the other, they shall give the earliest notice thereof, that timeous measures may be taken to prevent their ill effect.

ARTICLE III.
And whereas the United States are engaged in a just and necessary war, in defence and support of life, liberty, and independence against the King of England and his adherents, and as said King is yet possessed of several posts and forts on the lakes and other places, the reduction of which is of great importance to the peace and security of the contracting parties, and as the most practicable way for the troops of the United States to some of the posts and forts is by passing through the country of the Delaware nation, the aforesaid deputies, on behalf of themselves and their nation, do hereby stipulate and agree give a free passage through their country to the troops aforesaid, and the same to conduct by the nearest and best ways to the posts, forts or towns of the enemies of the United States, affording to said troops such supplies of corn, meat, horses or whatever may be in their power for the accommodation of such troops, on the commanding officer's, &c, paying or engageing to pay, the full value of whatever they can supply them with. And the said deputies, on behalf of their nation, engage to join the troops of the United States aforesaid, with such a number of their best and most expert warriors as they can spare, consistent with their own safety, and act in concert with them; and for the better security of the old men, women and children of the aforesaid nation, whilst their warriors are engaged against the common enemy, it is agreed on the part of the United States, that a fort of sufficient strength and capacity be built at the expense of the United States, with such assistance as it may be in the power of the said Delaware Nation to give, in the most convenient place, and advantageous situation, as shall be agreed on by the commanding officer of the troops aforesaid, with the advice and concurrence of the deputies of the aforesaid Delaware nation, which fort shall be garrisoned by such a number of the troops of the United States, as the commanding officer can spare for the present, and hereafter by such numbers, as the wise men of the United States in council, shall think most conducive to the common good.

ARTICLE IV.

For the better security of the peace and friendship now entered into by the contracting parties, against all infractions of the same by the citizens of either party, to the prejudice of the other, neither party shall proceed to the infliction of punishments on the citizens of the other, otherwise than by securing the offender or offenders by imprisonment, or any other competent means, till a fair and impartial trial can be had by judges or juries of both parties, as near as can be to the laws, customs and usages of the contracting parties and natural justice: The mode of such trials to be hereafter fixed by the wise men of the United States in Congress assembled, with the assistance of such deputies of the Delaware nation, as may be appointed to act in concert with them in adjusting this matter to their mutual liking. And it is further agreed between the parties aforesaid, that neither shall entertain or give countenance to the enemies of the other, or protect in their respective states, criminal fugitives, servants or slaves, but the same to apprehend. and secure and deliver to the State or States, to which such enemies, criminals, servants or slaves respectively belong.

ARTICLE V.

Whereas the confederation entered into by the Delaware Nation and the United States, renders the first dependent on the latter for all the articles of clothing, utensils, and implements of war, and it is judged not only reasonable, but indispensably necessary, that the aforesaid nation be supplied with such articles from time to time, as far as the United States may have it in their power by a well-regulated trade, under the conduct of an an intelligent, candid agent, with an adequate salary, one more influenced by the love of his country, and a constant attention to the duties of his department by promoting the common interest, than the sinister purposes of converting and binding all the duties of his office to his private emolument: Convinced of the necessity of such measures, the Commissioners of the United States, at the earnest solicitation of the deputies aforesaid, have engaged in the behalf of the United States, that such a trade should be afforded said nation, conducted on such principles of mutual interest as the wisdom of the United States in Congress assembled shall think most conducive to adopt for their mutual convenience.

ARTICLE VI.

Whereas the enemies of the United States have endeavored, by every artifice in their power, to possess the Indians in general with an opinion, that it is the design of the United States aforesaid, to extirpate the Indians and take possession of their country: to obviate such false suggestion, the United States do engage to guarantee to the aforesaid nation of Delawares, and their heirs, all their territorial rights in the fullest and most ample manner, as it hath been bounded by former treaties, as long as they the said Delaware nation shall abide by, and hold fast the chain of friendship now entered into. And it is further agreed on between the contracting parties should it for the future be found conducive for the mutual interest of both parties to invite any other tribes who have been friends to the interest of the United States, to join the present confederation, and to form a state whereof the Delaware nation shall be the head, and have a representation in Congress: [Emphasis added.- Editor] Provided, nothing contained in this article to be considered as conclusive until it meets with an approbation of Congress. And it is also the intent and meaning of this article, that no protection or countenance shall be afforded to any who are at present our enemies, by which they might escape the punishment they deserve.

In witness thereof, the parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals, at Fort Pitt, September seventeenth, anno Domini one thousand seven hundred and seventy-eight.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE WYANDOT, DELAWARE, CHIPPEWA, AND OTTAWA 21 JANUARY 1785 , FORT M'INTOSH, NORTHWEST TERRITORY

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties) Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 6-8.)

Articles of a treaty concluded at Fort M'Intosh, Ohio Territory, the twenty-first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, between the Commissioners Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, of the one Part, and the Sachems and Warriors of the Wyandot, Delaware, Chippewa, and Ottawa nations of Indians of the other.

The Commissioners Plenipotentiary of the United States in Congress assembled, give peace to the Wiandot, Delaware, Chippewa, and Ottawa nations of Indians, on the following conditions:

ARTICLE I.
Three chiefs from among the Wiandot, and two from among the Delaware nations, shall be delivered up to the Commissioners of the United States, to be by them retained till all the prisoners. white and black, taken by the said nations, or any of them, shall be restored.

ARTICLE II.
The said Indian nations do acknowledge themselves and all their tribes to be under the protection of the United States and of no other sovereign nation.

ARTICLE III.
The boundary line between the United States and the Wiandot and Delaware nations, shall begin at the mouth of the river Cayahoga, and run thence up the said river to the portage between that and the Tuskarawas branch of Meskingum; then down the said branch to the forks at the crossing place above Fort Lawrence; then westerly to the portage of the Big Miami, which runs into the Ohio, at the mouth of which branch the fort stood which was taken by the French in one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two; then along the said portage to the Great Miami or Ome river, and down the south-east side of the same to its mouth; thence along the south shore of Lake Erie, to the mouth of the Cayahoga where it began.

ARTICLE IV.
The United States allot all the lands contained within the said lines to the Wiandot and Delaware nations, to live and to hunt on, and to such of the Ottawa nation as now live thereon; saving and reserving for the establishment of trading posts, six miles square at the mouth lf Miami or Ome river, and the same at the portage on that branch of the Big Miami which runs into the Ohio, and the same on the lake of Sanduske where the fort formerly stood, and also two miles square on each side of the lower rapids of Sanduske river, which posts and the lands annexed to them, shall be to the use and under the government of the United States.

ARTICLE V.
If any citizen of the United States, or other persons not being an Indian, shall attempt to settle on any of the lands allotted to the Wiandot and Delaware nations in this treaty, except on the lands reserved to the United States in the preceding article, such persons shall forfeit the protection of the United States, and the Indians may punish him as they please.

ARTICLE VI.
The Indians who sign this treaty, as well in behalf of all their tribes as of themselves, do acknowledge the lands east, south and west of the lines described in the third article, so far as the said Indians formerly claimed the same, to belong to the United States; and none of their tribes shall presume to settle upon the same, or any part of it.

ARTICLE VII.
The post of Detroit, with a district beginning at the mouth of the River Rosine, on the west end of Lake Erie, and running west six miles up the southern bank of the said river, thence northerly and always six miles west of the strait, till it strikes the lake St. Clair, shall be also reserved to the sole use of the United States.

ARTICLE VIII.
In the same manner the post of Michillimachenac with its dependencies, and twelve miles square about the same, shall be reserved to the use of the United States.

ARTICLE IX.
If any Indian or Indians shall commit a robbery or murder on any citizen of the United States, the tribe to which such offenders may belong, shall be bound to deliver them up at the nearest post, to be punished according to the ordinances of the United States.

ARTICLE X.
The Commissioners of the United States, in pursuance of the humane and liberal views of Congress, upon this treaty's being signed, will direct goods to be distributed among the different tribes for their use and comfort.

SEPARATE ARTICLE.
It is agreed that the Delaware chiefs, Kelelamand or lieutenant-colonel Henry, Hengue Pushees or the Big Cat, Wicocalind or Captain White Eyes, who took up the hatchet for the United States, and their families, shall be received into the Delaware nation, in the same situation and rank as before the war, and enjoy their due portions of the lands given to the Wiandot and Delaware nations in this treaty, as fully as if they had not taken part with America, or as any other person or persons in the said nations.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE WIANDOT, DELAWARE, OTTAWA, CHIPPEWA, POTTAWATIMA, AND SAC NATIONS, 9 JANUARY 1789, FORT HARMAR, NORTHWEST TERRITORY

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 18-23.)

Artist's Rendition of Fort Harmar
From Ohio History Central

Jan. 9, 1789. 7 Stat., 28. Proclamation, Sept. 17, 1789.

Articles of a Treaty Made at Fort Harmar, between Arthur St. Clair, Governor of the Territory of the United States North-West of the River Ohio, and Commissioner Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, for removing all Causes of Controversy, regulating Trade, and settling Boundaries, with the Indian Nations in the Northern Department, of the one Part; and the Sachems and Warriors of the Wiandot, Delaware, Ottawa, Chippewa, and Pottawatima and Sac Nations, on the other Part.

ARTICLE I.

Whereas the United States in Congress assembled, did, by their commissioners George Rogers Clark, Richard Butler, and Arthur Lee, Esquires, duly appointed for that purpose, at a treaty holden with the Wiandot, Delaware, Ottawa and Chippewa nations, at Fort M'Intosh, on the twenty-first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, conclude a peace with the Wyandots, Delawares, Ottawas, and Chippewas, and take them into their friendship and protection: And whereas at the said treaty it was stipulated that all prisoners that had been made by those nations, or either of them, should be delivered up to the United States. And whereas the said nations have now agreed to and with the aforesaid Arthur St. Clair, to renew and confirm all the engagements they had made with the United States of America, at the before mentioned treaty, except so far as are altered by these presents. And there are now in the possession of some individuals of these nations, certain prisoners, who have been taken by others not in peace with the said United States, or in violation of the treaties subsisting between the United States and them; the said nations agree to deliver up all the prisoners now in their hands (by what means so ever they have come into their possession) to the said Governor St. Clair, at Fort Harmar, or in his absence, to the officer commanding there, as soon as conveniently may be; and for the true performance of this agreement, they do now agree to deliver into his hands, two persons of the Wyandot nation, to be retained in the hands of the United States as hostages, until the said prisoners are restored; after which they shall be sent back to their nation.

ARTICLE II.

And whereas at the before mentioned treaty it was agreed between the United States and the said nations, that a boundary line should be fixed between the lands of those nations and the territory of the United States; which boundary is as follows, viz.--Beginning at the mouth of Cayahoga river, and running thence up the said river to the portage between that and the Tuscarawa branch of the Muskingum, then down the said branch to the forks of the crossing-place above fort Lawrence, then westerly o the portage on that branch of the Big Miami river which runs into the Ohio, at the mouth of which branch the fort stood that was taken by the French in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two, then along the said portage to the Great Miami or Omie river, and down the south-east side of the same to its mouth; thence along the southern shore of Lake Erie to the mouth of Cayahoga, where it began. And the said Wyandot, Delaware, Ottawa, and Chippewa Nations, for and in consideration of the peace then granted to them by the said United States, and the presents they then received, as well as of a quantity of goods to the value of six thousand dollars, now delivered to them by the said Arthur St. Clair, the receipt whereof they do hereby acknowledge, do by these presents renew and confirm the said boundary line; to the end that the same may remain as a division line between the lands of the United States of America and the lands of said nations, forever. And the undersigned Indians do hereby in their own names, and the names of their respective nations and tribes, their heirs and descendants, for the considerations above-mentioned. release, quit claim, relinquish and cede to the United States all the land, east, south and west of the lines above described, so far as the said Indians formerly claimed the same; for them the said United States to have and to hold the same in true and absolute property forever.

ARTICLE III.

The United States of America do by these presents relinquish and quit claim to the said nations respectively, all the lands lying between the limits above described, for them the said Indians to live and hunt upon, and otherwise to occupy as they shall see fit: But the said nations, or either of them, shall not be at liberty to sell of dispose of the same, or any part thereof, to any sovereign power, except the United States; nor to the subjects or citizens of any other sovereign power, nor to the subjects or citizens of the United States.

ARTICLE IV.

It is agreed between the said United States and the said nations, that the individuals of said nations shall be at liberty to hunt within the territory ceded to the United States, without hindrance or molestation, so long as they demean themselves peaceably, and offer no injury or annoyance to any of the subjects or citizens of the said United States.

ARTICLE V.

It is agreed that if any Indian or Indians of the nations before mentioned, shall commit a murder or robbery on any of the citizens of the United States, the nation or tribe to which the offender belongs, on complaint being made, shall deliver up the person or persons complained of, at the nearest post of the United States; to the end that he or they be tried, and if found guilty, punished according to the laws established in the territory of the United States north-west of the river Ohio, for the punishment of such offences, if the same shall have been committed within the said territory; or according to the laws of the State where the offence may have been committed, if the same has happened in any of the United States. In like manner, if any subject or citizen of the United States shall commit murder or robbery on any Indian or Indians of said nations, upon complaint being made thereof, he or they shall be arrested, tried and punished agreeable to the laws of the state or of the territory wherein the offence was committed; that nothing may interrupt the peace and harmony now established between the United States and said nations.

ARTICLE VI.

And whereas the practice of stealing horses has prevailed very much, to the great disquiet of the citizens of the United States, and if persisted in, cannot fail to involve both the United States of America and the Indians in endless animosity, it is agreed that it shall be put to an entire stop on both sides; nevertheless, should some individuals, in defiance of this agreement, and of the laws provided against such offences, continue to make depredations of that nature, the persons convicted thereof shall be punished with the utmost severity the laws of the respective states, or territory of the United States north-west of the Ohio, where the offence may have been committed, will admit of: And all horses so stolen, either by the Indians from the citizens or subjects of the United States, or by the citizens or subjects of the United States from any of the Indian nations, may be reclaimed, into whose possession so ever they may have passed, and upon due proof, shall be restored; any sales in market overt, notwithstanding. And the civil magistrates in the United States respectively, and in the territory north-west of the Ohio, shall give all necessary aid and protection to Indians claiming such stolen horses.

ARTICLE VII.

Trade shall be opened with the said nations, and they do hereby respectively engage to afford protection to the persons and property of such as may be duly licensed to reside among them for the purposes of trade, and to their agents, factors and servants; but no person shall be permitted to reside at their towns, or at their hunting camps, as a trader, who is not furnished with a license for that purpose, under the hand and seal of the Governor of the territory of the United States north-west of the Ohio, for the time being, or under the hand and seal of one of his deputies for the management of Indian affairs; to the end that they may not be imposed upon in their traffic. And if any person or persons shall intrude themselves without such license, they promise to apprehend him or them, and to bring them to the said Governor, or one of his deputies, for the purpose before mentioned, to be dealt with according to law: And that they may be defended against persons who might attempt to forge such licenses, they further engage to give information to the said

Governor, or one of his deputies, of the names of all traders residing among the, from time to time, and at least once in every year.

ARTICLE VIII.

Should any nation of Indians mediate a war mediate a war against the United States, or either of them, and the same shall come to the knowledge of the before mentioned nations, or either of them, there do hereby engage to give immediate notice thereof to the Governor, or in his absence to the officer commanding the troops of the United States at the nearest post. And should any nation with hostile intentions against the United States, or either of them, attempt to pass through their country, they will endeavor to prevent the same, and in like manner give information of such attempt to the said Governor or commanding officer, as soon as possible, that all causes of mistrust and suspicion may be avoided between them and the United States: In like manner the United States shall give notice to the said Indian nations, of any harm that may be meditated against them, or either of them, that shall come to their knowledge; and do all in their power to hinder and prevent the same, that the friendship between them may be uninterrupted.

ARTICLE IX.

If any person or persons, citizens or subjects of the United States, or any other person not being an Indian, shall presume to settle upon the lands confirmed to the said nations, he and they shall be out of the protection of the United States; and the said nations may punish him or them in such manner as they seem fit.

ARTICLE X.

The United States renew the reservations heretofore made in the before mentioned treaty at Fort M'Intosh, for the establishment of trading posts, in manner and form following; that is to say: Six miles square at the mouth of the Miami or Omie river; six miles square at the portage upon that branch of the Miami which runs into the Ohio; six miles square upon the Lake Sandusky where the fort formerly stood; and two miles square upon each side the Lower Rapids on Sandusky river, which posts, and the lands annexed to them, shall be for the use and under the government of the United States.

ARTICLE XI.

The post at Detroit, with a district of land beginning at the mouth of the river Rosine, at the west end of Lake Erie, and running up the southern bank of said river six miles; thence northerly, and always six miles west of the strait, until it strikes the lake St. Clair, shall be reserved for the use of the use of the United States.

ARTICLE XII.
In like manner the post at Michlimackinac, with its dependencies, and twelve miles square about the same, shall be reserved to the sole use of the United States.

ARTICLE XIII.
The United States of America do hereby renew and confirm the peace and friendship entered into with the said nations, at the treaty before mentioned, held at Fort M'Intosh; and the said nations again acknowledge themselves, and all their tribes, to e under the protection of the said United States, and no other power whatever.

ARTICLE XIV.
The United States of America do also receive into their friendship and protection, the nations of the Pattiwatimas and Sacs; and do hereby establish a league of peace and amity between them respectively; and all the articles of this treaty, so far as they apply to these nations, are to be made considered as made and concluded in all, and every part, expressly with them and each of them.

ARTICLE XV.
And whereas in describing the boundary before mentioned, the words, if strictly constructed, would carry it from the portage on that branch of the Miami, which runs into the Ohio, over to the river An Glaize; which was neither the intention of the Indians, nor of the Commissioners; it is hereby declared, that the line shall run from the said portage directly to the first fork of the Miami river, which is to the southward and eastward of the of the Miami village, thence down the main branch of the Miami river to the said village, and thence down that river to Lake Erie, and along the margin of the lake to the place of beginning.
Done at Fort Harmar, on the Muskingum, this ninth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine.
In witness thereof, the parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals.

Be it remembered, That the Wyandots have laid claim to the lands that were granted to the Shawanese, at the treaty held at the Miami, and have declared, that as the Shawanese have been so restless, and caused so much trouble, both to them and to the United States, if they will not now be at peace, they will dispossess them, and take the country into their own hands; for that country is theirs of right, and the Shawanese are only living upon it by their permission. They further lay claim to all the country west of the Miami boundary, from the village to Lake Erie, and declare that it is now under their management and direction

SEPARATE ARTICLE .Whereas the Wyandots have represented, that within the reservation from the river Rosine along the Strait, they have two villages which they cannot with any convenience remove; it is agreed, that they shall remain in possession of the same, and shall not be in any manner disturbed there.

SEPARATE ARTICLE. Should a robbery or murder be committed by any Indian or Indians of the said nations upon the citizens or subjects of the United States or any of them, or by the citizens or subjects of the United States or any of them, upon any Indian or Indians of the said nations, the parties accused of the same shall be tried, and, if found guilty, be punished according to the laws of the state, or of the territory of the United States, as the case may be, where the same was committed; and should any horses be stolen, either by the Indians of the said nations from the citizens or subjects of the United States or any of them. or by any of the said citizens or subjects from any of the said Indians, they may be reclaimed, into whose possession so ever they may have come; and, upon due proof, shall be restored, any sales in open market notwithstanding. And the parties convicted shall be punished with the utmost severity the laws will admit; and the said nations engage to deliver the parties that may be accused of their nations of either of the before-mentioned crimes, at the nearest post of the United States, if the crime was committed within the territory of the United States, or to the civil authority of the States, if it shall have happened within any of the United States.

August 3, 1795. 7 Stat., 49. Proclamation, Dec. 2. 1795.

Treaty of Greenville Flag

Fort Greenville

A Treaty of peace between the United States of America and the Tribes of Indians, called the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoes, Ottawas, Chipewas, Putawatimies, Miamis, Eel-river, Weea's, Kickapoos, Piankashaws, and Kaskaskias.

To put an end to a destructive war, to settle all controversies, and to restore harmony and a friendly intercourse between the said United States, and Indian tribes; Anthony Wayne, major general, commanding the army of the United States, and sole commissioner for the good purposes above mentioned, and the said tribes of Indians, by the Sachems, chiefs, and warriors, met together at Greenville, the head quarters of the said army, have agreed on the following articles, which, when ratified by the President. with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, shall be binding on them and the said Indian tribes.

ARTICLE I.
Henceforth all hostilities shall cease; peace is hereby established, and shall be perpetual; and a friendly intercourse shall take place, between the said United States and Indian tribes.

ARTICLE II.
All prisoners shall on both sides be restored. The Indians, prisoners to the United States, shall immediately be set at liberty. The people of the United States,, still remaining prisoners among the Indians, shall e delivered up in ninety days from the date hereof, to the general or commanding officer at Greenville, Fort Wayne or Fort Defiance; and ten chiefs of the said tribes shall remain at Greenville as hostages, until the delivery of the prisoners shall be effected.

ARTICLE III.
The general boundary line between the lands of the United States and the lands of the said Indian tribes, shall begin at the mouth of the Cayahoga river, and run thence up the same to the portage between that and the Tuscararas branch of the Muskingum: thence down that branch to the crossing place above Fort Lawrence; thence westerly to a fork of that branch of the great Miami river running into the Ohio, at or near which fork stood Loromie's store, and where commences the portage between the Miami of the Ohio, and St. Mary's river, which is a branch of the Miami, which runs into Lake Erie; thence a westerly course to Fort Recovery, which stands on a branch of the Wabash; then south-westerly in a direct line to the Ohio, so as to intersect that river opposite the mouth of the Kentucke or Cuttawa river. And in consideration of the peace now established; of the goods formerly received from the United States; of those now to be delivered, and of the yearly delivery of goods now stipulated to be made hereafter, and to indemnify the United States for the injuries and expenses they have sustained during the war; the said Indian tribes do hereby cede and relinquish forever, all their claims to the lands lying eastwardly and southwardly of the general boundary line now described; and these lands, or any part of the, shall never hereafter be made a cause or pretence, on the part of the said tribes or any of them, of war or injury to the United States, or any part of the people thereof. (Cession of particular tracts of lands) [This entry is not included at this time. The tracts are too numerous to be of interest to the general reader. The data may be entered in the future, time permitting.-Editor] (Cession of passages in certain places by the Indians. Editor] And the said Indian tribes will allow to the people of the United States a free passage by land and by water, as one and the other shall be found convenient, through their country, along the chain of posts herein before mentioned; [The details are omitted at this time.-Editor] And the said Indian tribes will also allow to the people of the United States the free use of the harbors and mouths of rivers along the lakes adjoining the Indian lands, for sheltering vessels and boats, and liberty to land their cargoes where necessary for their safety.

ARTICLE IV.

In consideration of the peace now established, and of the cessions and relinquishments of lands made in the preceding article by the said tribe of Indians, and to manifest the liberality of the United States, as the great means of rendering this peace strong and perpetual; the United States relinquish their claims to all other Indian lands northward of the river Ohio, eastward of the Mississippi, and westward and southward of the Great Lakes and the waters uniting them, according to the boundary line agreed on by the United States and the king of Great Britain, in the treaty of peace made between them in the year 1983. But from this relinquishment by the United States, the following tracts of land are explicitly excepted. 1st. The tract of one hundred and fifty thousand acres assigned to General Clark and his warriors. 2d. The post of St. Vincennes on the river Wabash, and the lands adjacent, of which the Indian title has been extinguished. 3d. The lands at all other places in possession of the French people and other white settlers among them, of which the Indian title has been extinguished as mentioned, in the 3d article; and the 4th. The post of fort Massac towards the mouth of the Ohio. To which several parcels of land so excepted, the said tribes relinquish all the title and claim which they or any of them may have. And for the same considerations and with the same views as above mentioned, the United States now deliver to the said Indian tribes a quantity of goods to the value of twenty thousand dollars, the receipt whereof they do hereby acknowledge; and henceforward every year forever the United States will deliver at some convenient place northward of the river Ohio, like useful goods suitable to the circumstances of the Indians, of the value of nine thousand five hundred dollars' reckoning that value at the first cost of the goods in the city or place in the United States, where they are procured. The tribes to which these goods are to be annually delivered, and the proportions in which they are to be delivered. are the following.

1st. To the Wyandots, the amount of one thousand dollars. 2d. To the Delawares, the amount of one thousand dollars. 3d. To the Shawanese, the amount of one thousand dollars. 4th. To the Miamis, the amount of one thousand dollars. 5th. To the Ottawas, the amount of one thousand dollars. 6th. To the Chippewas, the amount of one thousand dollars. 7th. To the Putawatimies, the amount of one thousand dollars. 8th. And to the Kickapoo, Weea, Eel-river, Piankashaw and Kaskaskias tribes, the amount of five hundred dollars each. Provided, That if either of the said tribes shall hereafter at an annual delivery of their share of the goods aforesaid, desire that a part of their annuity should be furnished in domestic animals, implements of husbandry, and other utensils convenient for them, and in compensation to useful artificers who may reside near them or with them, and may be be employed for their benefit, the same shall be at the subsequent annual deliveries be furnished accordingly.

ARTICLE V.

To prevent any misunderstanding about the Indian lands relinquished by the United States in the fourth article, it is now explicitly declared, that the meaning of that relinquishment is this: The Indian tribes who have a right to those lands, are quietly to enjoy them, hunting, planting, and dwelling thereon, so long as they please, without any molestation by the United States; but when those tribes, or any of them, shall be disposed to sell their lands, or any part of them, they are to be sold only to the United States; and until such sale, the United States will protect all the said Indian tribes in the quiet enjoyment of their lands against the citizens of the United States, and against all other white persons who intrude upon the same. And the said Indian tribes will acknowledge themselves to be under the protection of the said United States and no other.

ARTICLE VI.

If any citizen of the United States, or any other white person or persons, shall presume to settle upon the lands now relinquished by the United States, such citizen or other person shall be out of protection of the United States; and the Indian tribe, on whose land the settlement shall be made, may drive off the settler, or punish him in such a manner as they think shall fit; and because such settlements made without the consent of the United States, will be injurious to them as well as to the Indians, the United States shall be at liberty to break them up, and remove and punish the settlers as they shall think proper, and so effect that protection of the Indian lands herein before stipulated

ARTICLE VII.

The said tribes of Indians. parties to this treaty, shall be at liberty to hunt within the territory and lands which they have now ceded to the United States, without hindrance or molestation, so long as they demean themselves peaceably, and offer no injury to the people of the United States.

ARTICLE VIII.

Trade shall be opened with the said Indian tribes; and they do hereby respectfully engage to afford protection to such persons, with their property, as shall be duly licensed to reside among them for the purpose of trade, and to their agents and servants; but no person shall be permitted to reside to reside at any of their towns or hunting camps as a trader, who is not furnished with a license for that purpose, under the hand and seal of the superintendent of the department north-west of the Ohio, or such other person as the President of the United States shall authorize to grant such licenses; to the end, that the said Indians may not be imposed upon in their trade. And if any licensed trader shall abuse his privilege by unfair dealing, upon complaint and proof thereof, his license shall be taken from him, and he shall be further punished according to the laws of the United States. And if any person shall intrude himself as a trader without such license, the said Indians shall take and bring him before the superintendent or his deputy, to be dealt with according to law. And to `prevent impositions by forged licenses, the said Indians shall at least once a year give information to the superintendent or his deputies, of the names of the traders residing among them. Lest the firm peace and friendship mow established should be interpreted by the misconduct of individuals, the United States, and the Indian tribes agree, that for injuries done by individuals on either side, no private revenge or retaliation shall take place; but instead thereof, complaint shall be made by the party injured , to the other; By the said Indian tribes, or any of them, to the President of the United States,, or the superintendent by him appointed; and by the superintendent or other person appointed by the President, to the principal chiefs of the said tribes, or of the tribe to which the offender belongs; and such prudent measures shall then be pursued as shall be necessary to preserve the said peace and friendship unbroken, until the Legislature (or Great Council) of the United States, shall make other equitable provision in the case, to the satisfaction of both parties. Should any Indian tribes mediate a war against the United States or either of them, and the same shall come to the knowledge of the before-mentioned tribes, or either of them, they do hereby engage to give immediate notice thereof to the general or officer commanding the troops of the United States, at the nearest post. And should any tribe, with hostile intensions against the United States, or either of them, attempt to pass through their country, they will endeavor to prevent the same, and in like manner give information of such attempt, to the general or officer commanding, as soon as possible, that all causes of mistrust and suspicion may be avoided between them and the United States. In like manner, the United States shall give notice to the said Indian tribes of any harm that may be meditated against them, or either of them, that shall come to their knowledge; and do all in their power to hinder and prevent the, same. that the friendship between them may be uninterrupted.

ARTICLE IX.

Lest the firm peace and friendship now established should be interrupted by the misconduct of individuals, the United States, and the said Indian tribes agree, that for injuries done by individuals on either side, no private revenge or retaliation shall take place; but instead thereof, complaint shall be made by the party injured, to the other: By the said Indian tribes, or any of them, to the President of the United States, or the superintendent by him appointed; and by the superintendent or other person appointed by the President, to the principal chiefs of the said Indian tribes, or of the tribe to which the offender belongs; and such prudent measures shall then be pursued as shall be necessary to preserve the said peace and friendship unbroken, until the Legislature (or Great Council) of the United States, shall make other equitable provision in the case, to the satisfaction of both parties. Should any Indian tribes meditate a war r against the United States or either of them, and the same shall come to the knowledge of the before-mentioned tribes, or either of them, they do hereby engage to give immediate notice thereof to the general or officer commanding the troops of the United States, at the nearest post. And should any tribe, with hostile intentions against the United States, or either of them, attempt to pass through their country, they will endeavor to prevent the same, and in like manner give information of such attempt, to the general or officer commanding, as soon as possible, that all causes of mistrust and suspicion may be avoided between them and the United States. In like manner the United States shall give notice to the said Indian tribes of any harm that may be meditated against them, or either of them, that shall come to their knowledge; and do all in their power to hinder and prevent the same, that the friendship between them may be uninterrupted.

ARTICLE X.

All other treaties heretofore made between the United States and the said Indian tribes, or any of them, since the treaty of 1783, between the United States and Great Britain, that come within the purview of this treaty, shall henceforth cease and become void.

In testimony whereof, the said Anthony Wayne, and the sachems and war chiefs of the beforementioned nations and tribes of Indians, have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE, SHAWANOE, PUTAWATIMIE, MIAMI, EEL RIVER, WEAS, KICKAPOO, PIANKASHAW, AND KASKASKIA NATIONS, 7 JUNE 1803, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA TERRITORY

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 64-66)

June 7, 1803. 7 Stat., 74. Proclamation Dec. 26, 1803.

Articles of a treaty between the United States of America, and the Delaware, Shawanoes, Putawatimies, Miamies, Eel River, Weeas, Kickapoos, Piankashaws, and Kaskaskias nations of Indians.

Articles of a treaty made at Fort Wayne on the Miami of the Lake, between William Henry Harrison, governor of the Indiana territory, superintendent of Indian affairs and commissioner plenipotentiary of the United States for concluding any treaty or treaties which may be found necessary with any of the Indian tribes north west of the Ohio, of the one part, and the tribes of Indians called the Delawares, Shawanoes, Putawatimies, Miamies and Kickapoos, by their chiefs and head warriors, and those of the Eel River, Weas, Piankashaws and Kaskaskias by their agents and representatives Tuthinipee, Winnemac, Richerville and Little Turtle (who are properly authorized by the said tribes) of the other part.

ARTICLE 1st.
Whereas it is declared by the fourth article of the treaty of Greenville, that the United States reserve for their use the post of St. Vincennes and all the lands adjacent to which the Indian titles had been extinguished: And whereas, it has been found difficult to determine the precise limits of the said tract as held by the French and the British governments: it is hereby agreed that the boundaries of the said tract shall be as follow: Beginning at Point Coupee on the Wabash, and running thence by a line north seventy-eight degrees, west twelve miles, thence by a line parallel to the general course of the Wabash, until it shall be intersected by a line at right angles to the same, passing through the mouth of the White river, thence by the last mentioned line across the Wabash and towards the Ohio, seventy-two miles, thence by a line north twelve degrees west, until it shall be intersected by a line at right angles to the same, passing through Point Coupee, and by the last mentioned line to the place of beginning.

ARTICLE 2nd.
The United States hereby relinquish all claim which they may have had to any lands adjoining to or in the neighborhood of the tract above described.

ARTICLE 3rd.
As a mark of their regard and attachment to the United States, whom they acknowledge for their only friends and protectors, and for the consideration herein after mentioned, the said tribes do hereby relinquish and cede to the United States the great salt spring upon the Saline creek which falls into the Ohio below the mouth of the Wabash, with a quantity of land surrounding it, not exceeding four miles square, and which may be laid off in a square or oblong as the one or other may be found most convenient to the United States: And the said United States being desirous that the Indian tribes should participate in the benefits to be derived from the said spring, hereby engage to deliver yearly and every year for the use of said Indians, a quantity of salt not exceeding one hundred and fifty bushels, and which shall be divided among the several tribes in such manner as the general council of the chiefs may determine.

ARTICLE 4th.
For the considerations before mentioned and for the convenience which the said tribes will themselves derive from such establishments in is hereby agreed that as soon as the tribes called the Kickapoos, Eel River, Weas, Piankashaws and Kaskaskias shall give their consent to the measure, the United States shall have the right of locating three tracts of lands (of such size as may be agreed upon with the last mentioned tribes) on the main road between Vincennes and Kaskaskias, and one other between Vincennes and Clarksville for the purpose of erecting houses of entertainment for the accommodation of travellers. But it is expressly understood that if the said locations are made on any of the rivers, which cross the said road, and ferries should be established on the same, that in times of high water any Indian or Indians belonging to either of the tribes who are parties to the treaty shall have the privilege of crossing said ferry toll free.

ARTICLE 5th.
Whereas there is reason to believe that if the boundary lines of the tract described in the first article should be run in the manner therein directed, that some of the settlements and locations of land made by the citizens of the United States will fall in the Indian country-- It is hereby agreed that such alterations shall be made in the direction of these lines as will include them; and a quantity of land equal in quantity to what may thus be taken shall be given to the said tribes either at the east or the west end of the tract.

In testimony whereof. the commissioner of the United States, and the chiefs and the warriors of the Delawares, Shawanees, Pattawatimies, Miamis, and Kickapoos, and those of the Eel Rivers, Weas, Piankeshaws, and Kaskaskias by their agents and representatives Tuthinipee, Winnemac, Richeville, and the Little Turtle, who are properly authorized, by the said tribes, have hereunto subscribed their names and affixed their seals, at fort Wayne, this seventh day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and three, and of the independence of the United States the twenty-seventh.

[Signed for the United States] William Henry Harrison,

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE, 18 AUGUST 1804, VINCENNES, INDIANA TERRITORY

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties. Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 70-72)

A Treaty between the United States of America and the Delaware tribe of Indians.

Aug. 18, 1804. 7 Stat., 81. Ratified Jan. 21, 1805. Proclaimed Feb. 14, 1805.

The Delaware tribe of Indians finding that the annuity which they receive from the United States, is not sufficient to supply them with the articles which are necessary for their comfort and convenience, and afford the means of introducing amongst them the arts of civilized life, and being convinced that the extensiveness of the country they possess, by giving an opportunity to their hunting parties to ramble to a great distance from their towns, is the principal means of retarding this desirable event; and the United States being desirous to connect their settlements on the Wabash with the state of Kentucky: therefore the said United States, by William Henry Harrison, governor of the Indiana territory, superintendent of Indian affairs, and their commissioner plenipotentiary for treating with the Indian tribes northwest of the Ohio river; and the said tribe of Indians by their sachems, chiefs, and head warriors, have agreed to the following articles, which then ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be binding on the said parties.

ARTICLE 1.
The said Delaware tribe, for the considerations hereinafter mentioned, relinquishes to the United States forever, all their right and title to the tract of country which lies between the Ohio and Wabash rivers, and below the tract ceded by the treaty of Fort Wayne, and the road leading from Vincennes to the falls of Ohio

ARTICLE 2.
The said tribe shall receive from the United States for ten years, an additional annuity of three hundred dollars, which is to be exclusively appropriated to the purpose of ameliorating their condition and promoting their civilization. Suitable persons shall be employed at the expense of the United States to teach them to make fences, cultivate the earth, and such of the domestic arts as are adapted to their situation; and a further sum of three hundred dollars shall be appropriated annually for five years to this object. The United States will cause to be delivered to them in the course of the next spring, horses fit for draft, cattle, hogs and implements of husbandry to the amount of four hundred dollars. The preceding stipulations together with goods to the amount of eight hundred dollars which is now delivered to the said tribe, (a part of which is to be appropriated to the satisfying certain individuals of the said tribe, whose horses have been taken by white people) is to be considered as full compensation for the relinquishment made in the first article.

ARTICLE 3.

As there is great reason to believe that there are now in the possession of the said tribe, several horses which have been stolen from citizens of the United States, the chiefs who represent the said tribe are to use their utmost endeavors to have the said horses forthwith delivered to the superintendent of Indian affairs or such persons as he may appoint to receive them. And as the United States can place the utmost reliance on the honor and integrity of those chiefs who have manifested a punctilious regard to the engagements entered into at the treaty of Grenville [Greenville], it is agreed that in relation to such of the horses stolen as aforesaid, but which have died or been removed beyond the reach of the chiefs, the United States will compensate the owners for the loss of them without deducting from the annuity of said tribe the amount of what may be paid in this way. But it is expressly understood that this provision is not to extend to any horses which may have been stolen within the course of twelve months preceding the date thereof.

ARTICLE. 4.

The said tribe having exhibited to the above-named commissioner of the United States sufficient proof of their right to all the country which lies between the Ohio and White river, and the Miami tribe who were the original proprietors of the upper part of that country having explicitly acknowledged the title of the Delawares at the general council held at Fort Wayne in the month of June, 1803, the said United States will in future consider the Delawares as the rightful owners of all the country which is bounded by the white river on the north, the Ohio on the south, the general boundary line running from the mouth of the Kentucky river on the east, and the tract ceded by this treaty, and that ceded by the treaty of Fort Wayne, on the west and south west.

ARTICLE 5.
As the Piankishaw tribe have hitherto obstinately persisted in refusing to recognize the title of the Delawares to the tract of country ceded by this treaty, the United States will negociate with them and will endeavor to settle the matter, in an amicable way; but should they reject the propositions that may be made to them on this subject, and should the United States not think proper to take possession of the said country without their consent; the stipulations and promises herein made on behalf of the United States, shall be null and void

ARTICLE 6.
As the road from Vincennes to Clark's grant will form a very inconvenient boundary, and as it is the intention of the parties to these presents that the whole of the said road shall be within the tract ceded to the United States, it is agreed that the boundary in that quarter shall be a straight line to be drawn parallel to the course of the said road from the eastern boundary of the tracts ceded by the treaty of Fort Wayne to Clark's grant; but the said line is not to pass at a greater distance than half a mile from the most northerly bend of said road.
In witness thereof, the commissioner plenipotentiary of the United States, and the chiefs and head men of the said tribe, have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals
Done at Vincennes, the eighteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and four; and of the independence of the United States the twenty-ninth.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE WYANDOT, OTTAWA, CHIPAWA, MUNSEE, DELAWARE, SHAWNEE, AND POTTAWATIMA NATIONS, 4 JULY 1805, FORT INDUSTRY, OHIO

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 77-78.)

A treaty between the United States of America and the sachems, chiefs, and warriors of the Wyandot, Ottawa, Chipawa, Munsee, Delaware, Shawnee, and Pottawatima nations, holden at Fort Industry on the Miami of the lake, on the fourth day of July, Anno Domini, one thousand eight hundred and five.

ARTICLE I.
The said Indian nations do again acknowledge themselves and all their tribes, to be in friendship with, and under the protection of the United States.

ARTICLE II.
The boundary line between the United States, and the nations aforesaid, shall in future be a meridian line drawn north and south, to a boundary to be erected on the south shore of Lake Erie, one hundred and twenty miles due west of the west boundary line of the state of Pennsylvania, extending north until it intersects the boundary line of the United States, and extending south it intersects a line heretofore established by the treaty of Grenville

ARTICLE III.
The Indian nations aforesaid, for the consideration of friendship to the United States, and the sums of money hereinafter mentioned, to be paid annually to the Wyandot, Shawnee, Munsee, and Delaware nations, have ceded and do hereby cede and relinquish to the said United States for ever, all the lands belonging to said United States, lying east of the aforesaid line, bounded southerly and easterly by the line established by said treaty of Grenville, and northerly by the northernmost part of the forty first degree of north latitude.
ARTICLE IV.
The United States, to preserve harmony, manifest their liberality [Ha! Editor], and in consideration of the cession made in the preceding article, will, every year forever hereafter, at Detroit, or some other convenient place, pay and deliver to the Wyandot, Munsee, and Delaware nations, and those of the Shawanee and Seneca nations who reside with the Wyandots, the sum of eight hundred and twenty five dollars, current money of the United States, and the further sum of one hundred and seventy five dollars, making in the whole an annuity of one thousand dollars; which last sum of eight hundred and seventy five dollars, has been secured to the President, in trust for said nations, by the Connecticut land company, and by the company incorporated by the name of "the proprietors of the half million acres of land lying south of Lake Erie, called Suffer's Land, payable annually as aforesaid, and to be divided between aforesaid nations, from time to time, in such proportions as said nations, with the approbation of the President, shall agree.

ARTICLE V.
To prevent all misunderstanding hereafter, it is to be expressly remembered, that the Ottawa and Chippewa nations. and such of the Pottawatima nation as reside on the river Huron of Lake Erie, and in the neighborhood thereof, have received from the Connecticut land company, and the company incorporated by the name of "the proprietors of the half million acres of land lying south of Lake Erie, called Sufferer's Land," the sum of four thousand dollars in hand, and have secured o the President of the United States, in trust for the, the further sum of twelve thousand dollars, payable in six annual installments of two thousand each; which several sums is the full amount of their proportion of the purchases effected by this treaty, and also by a treaty with said companies bearing even date herewith; which proportions were agreed on and concluded by the whole pf said nations in their general council; which several sums, together with two thousand nine hundred and sixteen dollars and sixty seven cents, secured to the President, to raise said sum of one hundred and seventy five dollars annuity as aforesaid, is the amount of the consideration paid by the agents of the Connecticut Reserve, for the cession of their lands.

ARTICLE VI.
The said Indian nations, parties to this treaty, shall be at liberty to fish and hunt within the territory and lands which they have now ceded to the United States, so long as they shall demean themselves peaceably.

In witness whereof, Charles Jouett, esquire, a commissioner on the part of the United States, and the sachems, chiefs, and warriors of the Indian nations aforesaid, have hereto set their hands and sea. TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE.

POTTAWATIMIE, MIAMIE, EEL RIVER, AND WEA, 21 AUGUST 1805 AT GROUSELAND, NEAR VINCENNES, INDIANA TERRITORY

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 80-82.)

Grouseland is the beautiful Georgian mansion built by Governor Harrison in 1803-04 on a 300-acre farm. Stone for the foundation was quarried just a few miles to the north. The woodwork is solid walnut and a self-supporting curved stairway of cherry greets the visitor in the stately entrance hall. There are more than 20 rooms and 13 fireplaces in the mansion. During Harrison's governorship, the home was the focal point of the social and official life of the territory.

Aug. 21, 1805. 7 Stat 91, Proclamation, April 24, 1806, Articles of a treaty made and entered into, at Grouseland, near Vincennes, in the Indiana territory, by and between William Henry Harrison, governor of said territory, superintendent of Indian affairs, and commissioner plenipotentiary of the United States, for treating with the north western tribes of Indians, of the one part, and the tribes of Indians called the Delawares, Putawatimis, Miamis, Eel River, and Weas, jointly and severally by their chiefs and head men, of the other part.

ARTICLE I.
Whereas, by the fourth article of a treaty made between the United States and the Delaware tribe, on the eighteenth day of August, eighteen hundred and four, the said United States engaged to consider the said Delawares as the proprietors of all that tract of country which is bounded by the White river on the north, the Ohio and Clark's grant on the south, the general boundary line running from the mouth of Kentucky river on the east, and the tract ceded by the treaty of fort Wayne, and the road leading to Clark's grant on the west and south west. And whereas, the Miami tribes, from whom the Delawares derived their claim, contend that in their cession of said tract to the Delawares, it was never their intention to convey the right of the soil, but to suffer them to occupy it as long as they thought proper, the said Delaware have, for the sake of peace and good neighborhood, determined to relinquish their claim to the said tract, and do by these presents release the United States from the guarantee made in the before-mentioned article of the treaty of August, eighteen hundred and four.

ARTICLE II.

The said Miami, Eel River, and Wea tribes, cede and relinquish to the United States forever, all that tract of country which lies to the south of a line to be drawn from the north east corner of the tract ceded by the treaty of fort Wayne, so as to strike the general boundary line, running from a point opposite to the mouth of the Kentucky river, to fort Recovery, at the distance of fifty miles from the commencement on the Ohio River.

ARTICLE III.

In consideration of the cession made in the preceding article, the United States will give an additional permanent annuity to said Miamis, Eel River, and Wea tribes, in the following proportions, viz: to the Miamis, six hundred dollars; to the Eel River tribe, two hundred and fifty dollars; to the Weas, two hundred and fifty dollars; and also to the Putawatemies, an additional annuity of five hundred dollars, for ten years, and no longer; which, together with the sum of four thousand dollars which is now delivered, the receipt whereof they do hereby acknowledge, is to be considered as a full compensation for the land now ceded.

ARTICLE IV.

As the tribes which are now called the Miamis, Eel River, and Weas, were formerly and still consider themselves as one nation, and as they have determined that neither of these tribes shall dispose of any part of the country which they hold in common; in order to quiet their minds on that head, the United States do hereby engage to consider them as joint owners of all the country on the Wabash and its waters, above the Vincennes tract, and which has not been ceded to the United States, by this or any former treaty; and they do farther engage that they will not purchase any part of the said country without the consent of each of the said tribes. Provided always, That nothing in this section contained, shall in any manner weaken or destroy any claim which the Kickapoos, who are not represented at this treaty, may have to the country they now occupy on the Vermillion river.

ARTICLE V.

The Putawatimies, Miami, Eel River, and Wea tribes, explicitly acknowledge the right of the Delawares to sell the tract of land conveyed to the United States by the treaty of the eighteenth day of August, eighteen hundred and four, which tract was given by the Piankashaws to the Delawares, about thirty-seven years ago.

ARTICLE VI.
The annuities herein stipulated to be paid by the United States, shall be delivered in the same manner, and under the same conditions as those which the said tribes have heretofore received.

ARTICLE VII.
This treaty shall be in force and obligatory on the contracting parties as soon as the same shall have been ratified by the President, by, and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States.
In testimony whereof, the said commissioner plenipotentiary of the United States, and the sachems, chiefs, and head men of the said tribes, have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals.
Done at Grouseland, near Vincennes, on the twenty-first day of August, in the year eighteen hundred and five, and of the independence of the United States the thirtieth.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND DELAWARE, PUTAWATIMIE, MIAMI, AND EEL RIVER MIAMI, 30 SEPTEMBER 1809, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA TERRITORY

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties) Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 101-102.)

Sept. 30, 1809. 7 Stat., 113. Proclamation, Jan. 16, 1810

A treaty between the United States of America, and the tribe of Indians called the Delawares, Putawatimies, Miamies and Eel River Miamies.

James Madison, President of the United States, by William Henry Harrison, governor and commander-in-chief of the Indiana territory, superintendent of Indian affairs, and commissioner plenipotentiary of the United States, for treating with the said Indian tribes, and the Sachems, Head men and Warriors of the Delawares, Putawatame, Miami and Eel River tribes of Indians, have agreed and concluded upon the following treaty; which, when ratified by the said President, with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, shall be binding on said parties.

ARTICLE 1st.
The Miami and Eel River tribes, and the Delawares and Putawatimies, as their allies, agree to cede to the United States all that tract of country which shall be included between the boundary line established by the Treaty of Fort Wayne, the Wabash, and a line to be drawn from the mouth of the creek called Racoon Creek, emptying into the Wabash, on the south-east side, about twelve miles below the mouth of the Vermilion river, so as to strike the boundary line, established by the treaty of Grouseland, at such a distance from its commencement at the north-east corner of the Vincennes tract, as will leave the tract now ceded thirty miles wide at the narrowest place. And also all that tract which shall be included between the following boundaries, viz: beginning at Fort recovery, thence southwardly along the general boundary line established by the treaty of Greenville, to the intersection with the boundary line established by the treaty of Grouseland: thence along said line to a point from which a line drawn parallel to the first mentioned line will be twelve miles distant from the same, and along the said parallel line to its intersection with a line to be drawn from Fort Recovery, parallel to the line established by said treaty of Grouseland.

ARTICLE 2nd.
The Miamies explicitly acknowledge the equal right of the Delawares with themselves to the country watered by the White river. But it is also to be clearly understood that neither party shall have the right of disposing of the same without the consent of the other: and any improvements which shall be made on the said land by the Delawares, or their friends the Mohecans, shall be theirs forever.

ARTICLE 3rd.
The compensation to be given for the cession made in the first article shall be as follows, viz: to the Delawares a permanent annuity of five hundred dollars; to the Miamies a like annuity of five hundred dollars; to the Eel River tribe a like annuity of two hundred and fifty dollars; and to the Putawatimies a like annuity of five hundred dollars.

ARTICLE 4th.
All the stipulations made in the treaty of Greenville, relatively to the manner of paying the annuities, and the right of the Indians to hunt upon the land, shall apply to the annuities granted and the land ceded by the present treaty.

ARTICLE 5th.
The consent of the Wea tribe shall be necessary to complete the title to the first tract of land here ceded; a separate convention shall be entered into between them and the United States, and a reasonable allowance of goods given them in hand, and a permanent annuity, which shall not be less than three hundred dollars, settled upon them.

ARTICLE 6th.
The annuities promised by the third article, and the goods now delivered to the amount of five thousand two hundred dollars, shall be considered as a full compensation for the cession made in the first article.

ARTICLE 7th.
The tribes who are parties to this treaty being desirous of putting an end to the depredations which are committed by abandoned individuals of their own color, upon the cattle, horses, &c. of the more industrious and careful, agree to adopt the following regulations, viz: when any theft or other depredation shall be committed by any individual or individuals of one of the tribes above mentioned, upon the property of any individual or individuals of another tribe, the chiefs of the party injured shall make application to the agent of the United States, who is charged with the delivery of the annuities of the tribe to which the offending party belongs, whose duty it shall be to hear the proofs and allegations of either side, and determine between them: and the amount of his award shall be immediately deducted from the annuity of the tribe to which the offending party belongs, and given to the person injured, or to the chief of his village for his use.

ARTICLE 8th.
The United States agree to relinquish their right to the reservation, at the old Ouroctenon towns, made by the treaty of Greenville, so far at least as to make no further use of it than for the establishment of a military post.

ARTICLE 9th.
The tribes who are parties to this treaty, being desirous to show their attachment to their brothers the Kickapoos, agree to cede to the United States the lands on the north-west side of the Wabash, from the Vincennes tract to a northwardly extension of the line running from the mouth of the aforesaid Racoon creek, and fifteen miles in width from the Wabash, on condition that the United States shall allow them an annuity of four hundred dollars. But this article is to have no effect unless the Kickapoos will agree to it.

In testimony whereof, the said William Henry Harrison, and the sachems and war chiefs of the beforementioned tribes, have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals, at fort Wayne, this thirtieth of September, eighteen hundred and nine.

TREATIES 1814-1829

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE WYANDOT, DELAWARE, SHAWANOESE, SENECA, AND MIAMI, 22 JULY 1814, GREENVILLE, OHIO

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties) . Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 105-106.)

A treaty of peace and friendship between the United States of America, and the tribes of Indians called the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoese, Senecas, and Miamies.

THE said United States of America, by William Henry Harrison, late a major general in the army of the United States, and Lewis Cass, governor of the Michigan territory, duly authorized and appointed commissioners for the purpose, and the said tribes, by their head men, chiefs, and warriors, assembled at Greenville, in the state of Ohio, have agreed to the following articles, which, when ratified by the president of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, shall be binding upon them and the said tribes.

ARTICLE I.

The United States and the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoese, and Senecas, give peace to the Miamie nation of Indians, formerly designated as the Miamie Eel River and Weea tribes; they extend this indulgence also to the bands of the Putawatimies, which adhere to the Grand Sachem Tobinipee, and to the chief Onoxa, to the Ottawas of Blanchard's creek, who have attached themselves to the Shawanoese tribe, and to such of the said tribe as adhere to the chief called the Wing, in the neighborhood of Detroit, and to the Kickapoos, under the direction of their chiefs who sign this treaty.

ARTICLE II.

The tribes and bands abovementioned, engage to give their aid to the United States in prosecuting the war against Great Britain, and such of the Indian tribes as still continue hostile; and to make no peace with either without the consent of the United States. The assistance herein stipulated for, is to consist of such a number of their warriors from each tribe, as the president of the United States, or any officer having his authority therefor, may require.

ARTICLE III.

The Wyandot tribe, and the Senecas of Sandusky and Stony Creek, the Delaware and Shawanoes tribes, who have preserved their fidelity to the United States throughout the war, again acknowledge themselves under the protection of the said states, and of no other power whatever; and agree to aid the United States, in the manner stipulated for in the former article, and to make no peace but with the consent of the said states.

ARTICLE IV.

In the event of a faithful performance of the conditions of this treaty, the United States will confirm and establish all the boundaries between their lands and those of the Wyandots, Delawares, Shawanoese and Miamies, as they existed previously to the commencement of the war.

In testimony whereof, the said commissioners, and the said head men, chiefs, and warriors, of the beforementioned tribes of Indians, have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE WYANDOT, DELAWARE, SENECA, SHAWANOE, MIAMI, CHIPPEWA, OTTAWA, AND POTAWATIMIE, 8 SEPTEMBER 1815, SPRING WELLS, MICHIGAN

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, vol. II, pp. 117-118)

A Treaty between the United States of America and the Wyandot, Delaware, Seneca, Shawanoe, Miami, Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatimie, Tribes of Indians, residing within the limits of the State of Ohio, and the Territories of Indiana and Michigan.
Whereas the Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatimie, tribes of Indians, together with certain bands of the Wyandot, Delaware, Seneca, Shawanoe, and Miami tribes, were associated with Great Britain in the late war between the United States and that power, and have manifested a disposition to be restored to the relations of peace and amity with the said States; and the President of the United States having appointed William Henry Harrison, late a Major General in the service of the United States, Duncan M'Arthur, late a Brigadier in the service of the United States and John Graham, Esquire, as Commissioners to treat with the said tribes; the said Commissioners and the Sachems, Headmen, and Warriors, of said tribes having met in council at Spring Wells, near the city of Detroit, have agreed to the following Articles, which, when ratified by the Senate of the United States, shall be binding on them and the said tribes.

ARTICLE 1.
The United States give peace to the Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatimie, tribes.

ARTICLE 2.
They also agree to restore to the said Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatimie tribes all the possessions, rights, and priviledges, which they enjoyed or were entitled to, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eleven, prior to the commencement of the late war with Great Britain; and the said tribes, upon their part, agree again to place themselves under the protection of the United States, and of no other power whatsoever.

ARTICLE 3.
In consideration of the fidelity to the United States which has been manifested by the Wyandot, Delaware, Seneca, and Shawanoe tribes, throughout the late war, and of the repentance of the Miami tribe, as manifested by placing themselves under the protection of the United States by the treaty of Greenville, in eighteen hundred and fourteen, the said States agree to pardon such of the chiefs and warriors of said tribes as may have continued hostilities against them until the close of the war with Great Britain, and to permit the chiefs of their respective tribes to restore them to the stations and property which they held previously to the war.

ARTICLE 4.
The United States and the herebeforementioned tribes of nations of Indians, that is to say, the Wyandot, Delaware, Seneca, Shawanoe, Miami, Chippewa, Ottawa, and Potawatimies, agree to renew and confirm the treaty of Greenville, made in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, and all subsequent treaties to which they were, respectively, parties, and the same are hereby again ratified and confirmed in as full a manner as if they were inserted in this treaty.
Done at Spring Wells, the eight day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifteen, and of the independence of the United States, the fortieth.
In testimony whereof, they, the said commissioners, and the sachems, head men and warriors of the different tribes, have hereunto set their hands and affixed their seals.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE WYANDOT, SENECA, SHAWANESE, POTAWATOMEE, OTTAWA. AND CHIPPEWAY, 29 SEPTEMBER 1817, RAPIDS OF THE MIAMI RIVER, OHIO

Sept. 29, 1817. 7 Stat., 160. Proclamation, Jan. 4, 1819
[Synopsis: Under a treaty made at the Rapids of the Miami River in Ohio, the Delaware on the Sandusky River, Wyandot, Seneca, Shawanese, Potawatomees, Ottawas and Chippeway relinquished more land to the United States. Jeeshawau (James Armstrong) and Sanondoyourayquaw (Silas Armstrong) were Delaware who received tracts of land (perhaps on behalf of the Delaware tribe) near that of the Wyandot. Delaware signers of the treaty were Kithtuwheland (Anderson), Punchhuck (Captain Beaver), Tahungeecoppi (Captain Pipe), Clamatonockis, and Aweallesa (Whirlwind). Other Delaware who received tracts of land were Captain Pipe, Zeshauau (James Armstrong), Mahawtoo (John Armstrong), Sanowdoyeasquaw (Silas Armstrong), Teorow (Black Racoon), Howdorowwatistie (Billy Montour), Buck Wheat, William Dondee, Thomas Lyons, Johnny Cake, Captain Wolf, Isaac Hill, Tishatahoones (Widow Armstrong), Ayenucere, Hoomaurow (John Ming), and Youdorast.]

Articles of a treaty made and concluded, at the foot of the Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie, between Lewis Cass and Duncan McArthur, commissioners of the United States, with full power and authority to hold conferences, and conclude and sign a treaty or treaties with all or any of the tribes or nations of Indians within the boundaries of the state of Ohio, of and concerning all matters interesting to the United States and the said nations of Indians on the one part; and the sachems, chiefs, and warriors, of the Wyandot, Seneca, Delaware, Shawanese, Potawatomees, Ottawas, and Chippeway, tribes of Indians.

ARTICLE 1.

The Wyandot tribe of Indians, in consideration of the stipulations herein made on the part of the United States, do hereby forever cede to the United States the lands comprehended within the following lines and boundaries: Beginning at a point on the southern shore of lake Erie, where the present Indian boundary line intersects the same, between the mouth of Sandusky bay and the mouth of Portage river; thence, running south with said line, to the line established in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, by the treaty of Greenville, which runs from the crossing place above fort Lawrence to Loramie's store; thence, westerly, with the last mentioned line, to the eastern line of the reserve at Loramie's store; thence, with the lines of said reserve, north and west, to the northwestern corner thereof; thence to the northwestern corner of the reserve on the river St. Mary's, at the head of the navigable waters thereof; thence, east, to the western bank of the St. Mary's river aforesaid; thence, down on the western bank of the said river, to the reserve at fort Wayne; thence, with the lines of the last mentioned reserve, easterly and northerly, to the north bank of the river Miami of lake Erie; thence, down on the north bank of the said river, to the western line of the land ceded to the United States by the treaty of Detroit, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seven; thence, with the said line, south, to the middle of said Miami river, opposite the mouth of the Great Auglaize river; thence, down the middle of said Miami river, and easterly with the lines of the tract ceded to the United States by the treaty of Detroit aforesaid, so far that a south line will strike the place of beginning.

ARTICLE 2.

The Potawatomy, Ottawas, and Chippeway, tribes of Indians, in consideration of the stipulations herein made on the part of the United States, do hereby forever cede to the United States the land comprehended within the following lines and boundaries: Beginning where the western line of the state of Ohio crosses the river Miami of lake Erie, which is about twenty-one miles above the mouth of the Great Auglaize river; thence, down the middle of the said Miami river, to a point north of the mouth of the Great Auglaize river; thence, with the western line of the land ceded to the United States by the treaty of Detroit, in one thousand eight hundred and seven, north forty-five miles; then, west, so far that a line south will strike the place of beginning; thence, south, to the place of beginning.

ARTICLE 3.
The Wyandot, Seneca, Delaware, Shawnese, Potawatomy, Ottawas, and Chippeway, tribes of Indians accede to the cessions mentioned in the two preceding articles.

ARTICLE 4.
In consideration of the cessions and recognitions stipulated in the three preceding articles, the United States agree to pay to the Wyandot tribe, annually, forever, the sum of four thousand dollars, in specie, at Upper Sandusky: To the Seneca tribe, annually, forever, the sum of five hundred dollars, in specie, at Lower Sandusky: To the Shawnese tribe, annually, forever, the sum of two thousand dollars, in specie, at Wapaghkonetta: To the Potawatomy tribe, annually, for the term of fifteen years, the sum of one thousand three hundred dollars, in specie, at Detroit: To the Ottawas tribe, annually, for the term of fifteen years, the sum of one thousand dollars, in specie, at Detroit: To the Chippewa tribe, annually, for the term of fifteen years, the sum of one thousand dollars, in specie, at Detroit: To the Delaware tribe, in the course of the year one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, the sum of five hundred dollars, in specie, at Wapaghkonetta, but no annuity: And the United States also agree, that all annuities due by any former treaty to the Wyandot, Shawnese, and Delaware tribes, and the annuity due by the treaty of Greenville, to the Ottawas and Chippewas tribes, shall be paid to the said tribes, respectively, in specie.

ARTICLE 5.
The schedule hereunto annexed, is to be taken and considered as part of this treaty; and the tracts herein stipulated to be granted to the Wyandot, Seneca, and Shawnese, tribes of Indians, are to be granted for the use of the persons mentioned in the said schedule, agreeably to the descriptions, provisions, and limitations, therein contained.

ARTICLE. 6.
The United States agree to grant, by patent, in fee simple, to Doanquod, Howoner, Rontondee, Tauyau, Rontayau, Dawatont, Manocue, Tauyaudautauson, and Haudaunwaugh, chiefs of the Wyandot tribe, and their successors in office, chiefs of the said tribe, for the use of the persons and for the purposes mentioned in the annexed schedule, a tract of land twelve miles square, at Upper Sandusky, the centre of which shall be the place where fort Ferree stands; and also a tract of one mile square, to be located where the chiefs direct, on a cramberry swamp, on Broken Sword creek, and to be held for the use of the tribe.

The United States also agree to grant, by patent, in fee simple, to Tahawmadoyaw, captain Harris, Isahownusay, Joseph Tawgyou, captain Smith, Coffee-house, Running About, and Wiping stick, chiefs of the Seneca tribe of Indians, and their successors in office, chiefs of the said tribe, for the use of the persons mentioned in the annexed schedule, a tract of land to contain thirty thousand acres, beginning on the Sandusky river, at the lower corner of the section hereinafter granted to William Spicer; thence, down the said river, on the east side, with the meanders thereof at high water mark, to a point east of the mouth of Wolf creek; thence, and from the beginning, east, so far that a north line will include the quantity of thirty thousand acres aforesaid.

The United States also agree to grant, by patent, in fee simple, to Catewekesa or Black Hoof, Byaseka or Wolf, Pomthe or Walker, Shemenetoo or Big Snake, Othawakeseka or Yellow Feather, Chakalowah or the Tail’s End, Pemthala or John Perry, Wabepee or White Colour, chiefs of the Shawnese tribe, residing at Wapaghkonetta, and their successors in office, chiefs of the said tribe, residing there, for the use of the persons mentioned in the annexed schedule, a tract of land ten miles square, the centre of which shall be the council-house at Wapaghkonetta.

The United States also agree to grant, by patent, in fee simple, to Peeththa or Falling Tree, and to Onowaskemo or the Resolute Man, chiefs of the Shawnese tribes, residing on Hog Creek, and their successors in office, chiefs of the said tribe, residing there, for the use of the persons mentioned in the annexed schedule, a tract of land containing twenty-five square miles, which is to join the tract granted at Wapaghkonetta, and to include the Shawnese settlement on Hog creek, and to be laid off as near as possible in a square form.

The United States also agree to grant, by patent, in fee simple, to Quatawape or Captain Lewis, Shekaghkela or Turtle, Skilowa or Robin, chiefs of the Shawnese tribe of Indians residing at Lewistown, and to Mesomea or Civil John, Wakawuxsheno or the White Man, Oquasheno or Joe, and Willaquasheno or When you are tired sit down, chiefs of the Seneca tribe of Indians residing at Lewistown, and to their successors in office, chiefs of the said Shawnese and Seneca tribes, for the use of the persons mentioned in the annexed schedule, a tract of land to contain forty-eight square miles, to begin at the intersection of the line run by Charles Roberts, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twelve, from the source of the Little Miami river to the source of the Sciota river, in pursuance of instructions from the commissioners appointed on the part of the United States, to establish the western boundary of the Virginia Military Reservation, with the Indian boundary line established by the treaty of Greenville, in one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, from the crossings above fort Lawrence to Loramie's store, and to run from such intersection, northerly, with the first mentioned line, and westerly, with the second mentioned line, so as to include the quantity as nearly in a square form as practicable, after excluding the section of land hereinafter granted to Nancy Stewart.

There shall also be reserved for the use of the Ottawas Indians, but not granted to them, a tract of land on Blanchard's fork of the Great Auglaize river, to contain five miles square, the centre of which tract is to be where the old trace crosses the said fork, and one other tract to contain three miles square, on the Little Auglaize river, to include Oquanoxa's village.

ARTICLE. 7.

And the said chiefs or their successors may, at any time they may think proper, convey to either of the persons mentioned in the said schedule, or his heirs, the quantity secured thereby to him, or may refuse so to do. But the use of the said land shall be in the said person; and after the share of any person is conveyed by the chiefs to him, he may convey the same to any person whatever. And any one entitled by the said schedule to a portion of the said land, may, at any time, convey the same to any person, by obtaining the approbation of the President of the United States, or of the person appointed by him to give such approbation. And the agent of the United States shall make an equitable partition of the said share when conveyed.

ARTICLE. 8.

At the special request of the said Indians, the United States agree to grant, by patent, in fee simple, to the persons hereinafter mentioned, all of whom are connected with the said Indians, by blood or adoption, the tracts of land herein described:

To Elizabeth Whitaker, who was taken prisoner by the Wyandots, and has ever since lived among them, twelve hundred and eighty acres of land, on the west side of the Sandusky river, below Croghansville, to be laid off in a square form, as nearly as the meanders of the said river will admit, and to run an equal distance above and below the house in which the said Elizabeth Whitaker now lives.

To Robert Armstrong, who was taken prisoner by the Indians, and has ever since lived among them, and has married a Wyandot woman, one section, to contain six hundred and forty acres of land, on the west side of the Sandusky river, to begin at the place called

Camp Ball, and to run up the river, with the meanders thereof, one hundred and sixty poles, and, from the beginning, down the river, with the meanders thereof, one hundred and sixty poles, and from the extremity of these lines west for quantity.

To the children of the late William M'Collock, who was killed in August, one thousand eight hundred and twelve, near Maugaugon, and who are quarter-blood Wyandot Indians, one section, to contain six hundred and forty acres of land, on the west side of the Sandusky river, adjoining the lower line of the tract hereby granted to Robert Armstrong, and extending in the same manner with and from the said river.

To John Vanmeter, who was taken prisoner by the Wyandots, and who has ever since lived among them, and has married a Seneca woman, and to his wife's three brothers, Senecas, who now reside on Honey creek, one thousand acres of land, to begin north, forty-five degrees west, one hundred and forty poles from the house in which the said John Vanmeter now lives, and to run thence, south, three hundred and twenty poles, thence, and from the beginning, east for quantity.

To Sarah Williams, Joseph Williams, and Rachel Nugent, late Rachel Williams, the said Sarah having been taken prisoner by the Indians, and ever since lived among them, and being the widow, and the said Joseph and Rachel being the children, of the late Isaac Williams, a half-blood Wyandot, one quarter section of land, to contain one hundred and sixty acres, on the east side of the Sandusky river, below Croghansville, and to include their improvements at a place called Negro Point.

To Catherine Walker, a Wyandot woman, and to John R. Walker, her son, who was wounded in the service of the United States, at the battle of Mauguagon, in one thousand eight hundred and twelve, a section of six hundred and forty acres of land each, to begin at the northwestern corner of the tract hereby granted to John Vanmeter and his wife's brothers, and to run with the line thereof, south, three hundred and twenty poles, thence, and from the beginning, west for quantity.

To William Spicer, who was taken prisoner by the Indians, and has ever since lived among them, and has married a Seneca woman, a section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, beginning on the east bank of the Sandusky river, forty poles below the lower corner of said Spicer's cornfield, thence, up the river on the east side, with the meanders thereof, one mile, thence, and from the beginning, east for quantity.

To Nancy Stewart, daughter of the late Shawnese chief Blue Jacket, one section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, on the Great Miami river below Lewistown, to include her present improvements, three quarters of the said section to be on the southeast side of the river, and one quarter on the northwest side thereof.

To the children of the late Shawnese chief captain Logan, or Spamagelabe, who fell in the service of the United States during the late war, one section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, on the east side of the Great Auglaize river, adjoining the lower line of the grant of ten miles at Wapaghkonetta and the said river.

To Anthony Shane, a half blood Ottawas Indian, one section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, on the east side of the river St. Mary's, and to begin opposite the house in which said Shane now lives, thence, up the river, with the meanders thereof, one hundred and sixty poles, and from the beginning down the river, with the meanders thereof, one hundred and sixty poles, and from the extremity of the said lines east for quantity.

To James M'Pherson, who was taken prisoner by the Indians, and has ever since lived among them, one section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, in a square form, adjoining the northern or western line of the grant of forty-eight miles at Lewistown, at such place as he may think proper to locate the same.

To Horonu, or the Cherokee boy, a Wyandot chief, a section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, on the Sandusky river, to be laid off in a square form, and to include his improvements.

To Alexander D. Godfroy and Richard Godfroy, adopted children of the Potawatomy tribe, and at their special request, one section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, in the tract of country herein ceded to the United States by the Potawatomy, Ottawas, and Chippewas, tribes, to be located by them, the said Alexander and Richard, after the said tract shall have been surveyed.

To Sawendebans, or the Yellow Hair, or Peter Minor, an adopted son of Tondaganie, or the Dog, and at the special request of the Ottawas, out of the tract reserved by the treaty of Detroit, in one thousand eight hundred and seven, above Roche de Bœuf, at the village of the said Dog, a section of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, to be located in a square form, on the north side of the Miami, at the Wolf Rapid.

ARTICLE 9.

The United States engage to appoint an agent, to reside among or near the Wyandots, to aid them in the protection of their persons and property, to manage their intercourse with the government and citizens of the United States, and to discharge the duties which commonly appertain to the office of Indian agent; and the same agent is to execute the same duties for the Senecas and Delawares on the Sandusky river. And an agent for similar purposes, and vested with similar powers, shall be appointed, to reside among or near the Shawnese, whose agency shall include the reservations at Wapaghkonetta, at Lewistown, at Hog creek, and at Blanchard's creek. And one mile square shall be reserved at Malake for the use of the agent for the Shawnese.

And the agent for the Wyandots and Senecas shall occupy such land in the grant at Upper Sandusky, as may be necessary for him and the persons attached to the agency.

ARTICLE 10.

The United States engage to erect a saw-mill and a gristmill, upon some proper part of the Wyandot reservation, for their use, and to provide and maintain a blacksmith, for the use of the Wyandots and Senecas, upon the reservation of the Wyandots, and another blacksmith, for the use of the Indians at Wapaghkonetta, Hog creek, and Lewistown.

ARTICLE 11.

The stipulations contained in the treaty of Greenville, relative to the right of the Indians to hunt upon the land hereby ceded, while it continues the property of the United States, shall apply to this treaty; and the Indians shall, for the same term, enjoy the privilege of making sugar upon the same land, committing no unnecessary waste upon the trees.

ARTICLE 12.

The United States engage to pay, in the course of the year one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, the amount of the damages which were assessed by the authority of the secretary of war, in favor of several tribes and individuals of the Indians, who adhered to the cause of the United States during the late war with great Britain, and whose property was, in consequence of such adherence, injured or destroyed. And it is agreed, that the sums thus assessed shall be paid in specie, at the places, and to the tribes or individuals, hereinafter mentioned, being in conformity with the said assessment; that is to say:

To the Wyandots, at Upper Sandusky, four thousand three hundred and nineteen dollars and thirty-nine cents.

To the Senecas, at Lower Sandusky, three thousand nine hundred and eighty-nine dollars and twenty-four cents.

To the Indians at Lewis and Scoutashs towns, twelve hundred and twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents.

To the Delawares, for the use of the Indians who suffered losses at Greentown and at Jerome's town, three thousand nine hundred and fifty-six dollars and fifty cents, to be paid at Wapaghkonetta.

To the representatives of Hembis, a Delaware Indian, three hundred and forty-eight dollars and fifty cents, to be paid at Wapaghkonetta.

To the Shawnese, an additional sum of four hundred and twenty dollars, to be paid at Wapaghkonetta.
To the Senecas, an additional sum of two hundred and nineteen dollars, to be paid at Wapaghkonet.
ARTICLE 13.
And whereas the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars has been paid by the United States to the Shawnese, being one half of five years' annuities due by the Treaty of Fort Industry, and whereas the Wyandots contend that the whole of the annuity secured by that treaty is to be paid to them, and a few persons of the Shawnese and Senecas tribes; now, therefore, the commissioners of the United States, believing that the construction given by the Wyandots to the said treaty is correct, engage that the United States shall pay to the said Wyandot tribe in specie, in the course of the year one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, the said sum of two thousand five hundred dollars.
ARTICLE 14.
The United States reserve to the proper authority, the right to make roads through any part of the land granted or reserved by this treaty; and also to the different agents, the right of establishing taverns and ferries for the accommodation of travellers, should the same be found necessary.
ARTICLE 15.
The tracts of land herein granted to the chiefs, for the use of the Wyandot, Shawnese, Seneca, and Delaware Indians, and the reserve for the Ottawa Indians, shall not be liable to taxes of any kind so long as such land continues the property of the said Indians.
ARTICLE 16.
Some of the Ottawa, Chippewa, and Potawatomy tribes, being attached to the Catholic religion, and believing they may wish some of their children hereafter educated, do grant to the rector of the Catholic church of St. Anne of Detroit, for the use of the said church, and to the corporation of the college at Detroit, for the use of the said college, to be retained or sold, as the said rector and corporation may judge expedient, each, one half of three sections of land, to contain six hundred and forty acres, on the river Raisin, at a place called Macon; and three sections of land not yet located, which tracts were reserved, for the use of the said Indians, by the treaty of Detroit, in one thousand eight hundred and seven; and the superintendent of Indian affairs, in the territory of Michigan, is authorized, on the part of the said Indians, to select the said tracts of land.
ARTICLE 17.
The United States engage to pay to any of the Indians, the value of any improvements which they may be obliged to abandon in consequence of the lines established by this treaty.

ARTICLE 18.

The Delaware tribe of Indians, in consideration of the stipulations herein made on the part of the United States, do hereby forever cede to the United States all the claim which they have to the thirteen sections of land reserved for the use of certain persons of their tribe, by the second section of the act of congress, passed March the third, one thousand eight hundred and seven, providing for the disposal of the lands of the United States between the United States Military Tract and the Connecticut Reserve, and the lands of the United States between the Cincinnati and Vincennes districts.

ARTICLE 19.

The United States agree to grant, by patent, in fee simple, to Jeeshawau, or James Armstrong, and to Sanondoyourayquaw, or Silas Armstrong, chiefs of the Delaware Indians, living on the Sandusky waters, and their successors in office, chiefs of the said tribe, for the use of the persons mentioned in the annexed schedule, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions, provisions, and limitations, as is hereinbefore provided for the lands granted to the Wyandot, Seneca, and Shawnese, Indians, a tract of land, to contain nine square miles, to join the tract granted to the Wyandots of twelve miles square, to be laid off as nearly in a square form as practicable, and to include Captain Pipe's village.

ARTICLE 20.

The United States also agree to grant, by patent, to the chiefs of the Ottawas tribe of Indians, for the use of the said tribe, a tract of land, to contain thirty-four square miles, to be laid out as nearly in a square form as practicable, not interfering with the lines of the tracts reserved by the treaty of Greenville on the south side of the Miami river of Lake Erie, and to include Tushquegan, or M'Carty's village; which tracts, thus granted, shall be held by the said tribe, upon the usual conditions of Indian reservations, as though no patent were issued.

ARTICLE 21.

This treaty shall take effect, and be obligatory on the contracting parties, as soon as the same shall have been ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof.

In testimony whereof, the said Lewis Cass and Duncan McArthur, commissioners as aforesaid, and the sachems, chiefs, and warriors, of the Wyandot, Seneca, Shawanee, Delaware, Pattawatima, Ottawa, and Chippewa tribes of Indians, have hereunto set their hands, at the foot of the Rapids of the Miami of lake Erie, this twenty-ninth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventeen.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE, 3 OCTOBER 1818, ST. MARY'S, OHIO

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 170-171.)

Oct. 3, 1818. 7 Stat., 188, Proclamation, Jan. 15, 1819.
Articles of a treaty made and concluded at St. Mary's, in the state of Ohio, between Jonathan Jennings, Lewis Cass, and Benjamin Parks, commissioners of the United States, and the Delaware nation of Indians.
ARTICLE 1.
The Delaware nation of Indians cede to the United States all their claim to land in the state of Indiana.

ARTICLE 2.
In consideration of the aforesaid cession, the United States agree to provide for the Delawares a country to reside in, upon the west side of the Mississippi, and to guaranty to them the peaceable possession of the same

ARTICLE 3.
The United States also agree to pay the Delawares the full value of their improvements in the country hereby ceded: which valuation shall be made by persons to be appointed for that purpose by the President of the United States; and to furnish the Delawares with one hundred and twenty horses, not to exceed in value forty dollars each, and a sufficient number of perogues [boats], to aid in transporting them to the west side of the Mississippi; and a quantity of provisions, proportioned to their numbers, and the extent of their journey.

ARTICLE 4.
The Delawares shall be allowed the use and occupation of their improvements, for the term of three years from the date of this treaty if they so long require it.

ARTICLE 5.
The United States agree to pay to the Delawares a perpetual annuity of four thousand dollars; which, together with all annuities which the United States, by any former treaty, engaged to pay to them, shall be paid in silver, at any place to which the Delawares remove.

ARTICLE 6.
The United States agree to provide and support a blacksmith for the Delawares, after their removal to the west side of the Mississippi.

ARTICLE 7.
One half section of land shall be granted to each of the following persons, namely; Isaac Wobby, Samuel Cassman, Elizabeth Petchaka, and Jacob Dick; and one quarter of a section of land shall be granted to each of the following persons, namely; Solomon Tindell, and Benoni Tindell; all of whom are Delawares; which tracts of land shall be located, after the country is surveyed, at the first creek above the old fort on White river, and running up the river; and shall be held by the persons herein named, respectively, and their heirs; but shall never be conveyed or transferred without the approbation of the President of the United States.

ARTICLE 8.
A sum, not exceeding thirteen thousand three hundred and twelve dollars and twenty-five cents, shall be paid by the United States, to satisfy certain claims against the Delaware nation; and shall be expended by the Indian agent at Piqua and Fort Wayne, agreeably to a schedule this day examined and approved by the commissioners of the United States.

ARTICLE 9.
This treaty, after the same shall be ratified by the President and Senate of the United States, shall be binding on the contracting parties. In testimony whereof, the said Jonathan Jennings, Lewis Cass, and Benjamin Parke, commissioners as aforesaid, and the chiefs and warriors of the Delaware nation of Indians, have hereunto set their hands, at St. Mary's, in the State of Ohio, this third day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighteen.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE, 3 AUGUST 1829 , SANDUSKY RIVER, OHIO

Fort Sandusky Aug. 3, 1829. Stat., 326, Proclamation, Jan. 2, 1830

Articles of agreement made between John M'Elvain, thereto specially authorized by the President of the United States, and the band of Delaware Indians, upon the Sandusky River, in the state of Ohio, for the cession of a certain reservation of land in the said State.

ARTICLE I.

The said band of Delaware Indians cede to the United States the tract of three miles square, adjoining the Wyandot reservation upon the Sandusky river, reserved for their use by the treaty of the Rapids of the Maumee, concluded between the United States and the Wyandots, Seneca, Delaware, Shawnees, Potawatamies, Ottawas, and Chippiwa tribes of Indians, on the twenty-ninth of September in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventeen, and the said tribe of Delawares engage to remove to and join their nation on the west side of the Mississippi, on the land allotted to them, on or before the first day of January next, at which time peaceable possession of said reservation is to be given to the United States.

ARTICLE II.

In consideration of the stipulation aforesaid, it is agreed, that the United States shall pay to the said band the sum of three thousand dollars: two thousand dollars in hand, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by the undersigned Chiefs of said tribe, and the remaining balance of one thousand dollars to be appropriated to the purchase of horses, clothing, provisions, and other useful articles, to aid them on their journey so soon as they are prepared to remove. In witness whereof, the said John McElvain, and the chiefs of the said band, have hereunto set their hands and seals at Little Sandusky, in the State of Ohio, the third day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty nine.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE, 24 SEPTEMBER 1829, St. MARY'S, OHIO

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 304-305.)

Sept. 24, 1829. 7 State, 327. Proclamation, Mar. 24, 1831.
Supplemental article to the Delaware Treaty, concluded at St. Mary's in the State of Ohio, on the 3d of October, 1818.
Whereas the foregoing Treaty stipulates that the United States shall provide for the Delaware Nation, a country to reside in, West of the Mississippi, as the permanent residence of their Nation; and whereas the said Delaware Nation are now willing to remove, on the following conditions, from the country on James' fork of White river in the state of Missouri, to the Country selected in the fork of the Kansas and Missouri River, as recommended by the government, for the permanent residence of the whole Delaware Nation; it is hereby agreed upon by the parties, that the country in the fork of the Kansas and Missouri Rivers, extending up the Kansas River, to the Kansas Line, and up the Missouri River to Camp Leavenworth, and thence to a line drawn Westwardly, leaving a space of ten miles wide, north of the Kansas boundary line, for an outlet; shall be conveyed and forever secured by the United States, to the said Delaware Nation, as their permanent residence: And the United States hereby pledges the faith of the government to guarantee to the said Delaware Nation forever, the quiet and peaceable possession and undisturbed enjoyment of the same, against the claims and assaults of all and every other people whatever. [Emphasis added-Editor.]
And the United States hereby agrees to furnish the Delaware Nation with forty horses, to be given to their poor and destitute people, and the use of six wagons and ox teams, to assist the nation in removing their heavy articles to their permanent home; and to supply them with all necessary farming utensils and tools necessary for building houses, &c.: and to supply them with provisions on their journey, and with one year's provisions after they get to their permanent residence; and to have a grist and saw mill erected for their use, within two years after their complete removal.

And it is hereby expressly stipulated and agreed upon by the parties, that for and in consideration of the full and entire relinquishment by the Delaware Nation of all claim whatever to the country now occupied by them in the State of Missouri, the United States shall pay to the said Delaware Nation, an additional permanent annuity of one thousand dollars.

And it is further stipulated that thirty-six sections of the best land within the limits hereby relinquished, shall be selected under the direction of the President of the United States, and sold for the purpose of raising a fund, to be applied under the direction of the President, to the support of schools for the education of Delaware children.

It is agreed upon by the parties that the supplementary article shall be concluded in part only, at this time, and that the deputation of a Chief, or Warrior, from each town with their Interpretor shall proceed with the Agent to explore the country more fully, and if they approve of said country, to sign their names under ours, which shall be considered as finally concluded on our part; and after the same shall be ratified by the President and Senate of the United States, shall be binding on the contracting parties.

In testimony whereof the United States Indian agent, and the chiefs and warriors of the Delaware nation of Indians, have hereunto set their hands at Council camp, on James fork of White river, in the State of Missouri, this 24th day of September in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine.

TREATIES 1856-PRESENT

Feb. 5, 1856. 11 Stat., 663. Ratified Apr. 18, 1856.
Proclaimed Sept. 8, 1856.

Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties), pp. 742-745. Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904.

Articles of agreement and convention made and concluded at Stockbridge in the State of Wisconsin, on the fifth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, between Francis Huebschmann, commissioner on the part of the United States, and the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes of Indians assembled in general council, and such of the Munsees who were included in the treaty of September third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, but are yet residing in the State of New York, by their duly authorized delegates, William Mohawk and Joshua Willson.

Whereas by Senate amendment to the treaty with the Menomonees of February [twenty] eighth, one thousand eight hundred and thirty one, two townships of land on the east side of Winnebago Lake, Territory of Wisconsin, were set aside for the use of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes of Indians, all formerly of the State of New York, but a part of whom had already removed to Wisconsin; and

Whereas said Indians took possession of said lands, but dissensions existing among them led to the treaty of September third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, by which the east half of said two townships was retroceded to the United States, and in conformity to which a part of said Stockbridges and Munsees emigrated west of the Mississippi; and

Whereas to relieve them from dissensions still existing by “An act for the relief of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians in the Territory of Wisconsin,” approved March third, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, it was provided, that the remaining townships of land should be divided into lots and allotted between the individual members of said tribe; and

Whereas a part of said tribe refused to be governed by the provisions of said act, and a subsequent act was passed on the sixth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, repealing the aforementioned act, but without making provision for bona fide purchasers of lots in the townships subdivided in conformity to the said first-named act; and

Whereas it was found impracticable to carry into effect the provisions of the last-mentioned act, and to remedy all difficulties, a treaty was entered into on the twenty-fourth of November, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, wherein among other provisions, the tribe obligated itself to remove to the country west of the Mississippi set apart for them by the amendment to said treaty; and

Whereas dissensions have yet been constantly existing amongst them, and many of the tribe refused to remove, when they were offered a location in Minnesota, and applied for a retrocession to them of the township of Stockbridge, which has been refused by the United States; and

Whereas a majority of the said tribe of Stockbridges and the Munsees are averse to removing to Minnesota and prefer a new location in Wisconsin, and are desirous soon to remove and to resume agricultural pursuits, and gradually to prepare for citizenship, and a number of other members of the said tribe desire at the present time to sever their tribal relations and to receive patents for the lots of land at Stockbridge now occupied by them; and

Whereas the United States are willing to exercise the same liberal policy as heretofore, and for the purpose of relieving these Indians from the complicated difficulties, by which they are surrounded, and to establish comfortably together all such Stockbridges and Munsees— wherever they may be now located, in Wisconsin, in the State of New York, or west of the Mississippi—as were included in the treaty of September third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, and desire to remain for the present under the paternal care of the United States Government; and for the purpose of enabling such individuals of said tribes as are now qualified and desirous to manage their own affairs, to exercise the rights and to perform the duties of the citizen, these articles of agreement have been entered into:

ARTICLE 1.

The Stockbridge and Munsee tribes, who were included in the treaty of September third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, and all the individual members of said tribes, hereby jointly and severally cede and relinquish to the United States and their remaining right and title in the lands at the town of Stockbridge, State of Wisconsin, the seventy-two sections of land in Minnesota set aside for them by the amendment to the treaty of

November twenty-fourth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, the twenty thousand dollars stipulated to be paid to them by the said amendment, the sixteen thousand five hundred dollars invested by the United States in stocks for the benefit of the Stockbridge tribe in conformity to Article 9 of the said treaty, and all claims set up by and for the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes, or by and for the Munsees separately, or by and for any individuals of the Stockbridge tribe who claim to have been deprived of annuities since the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, and all such and other claims set up by or for them or any of them are hereby abrogated, and the United States released and discharged therefrom.

ARTICLE 2.

In consideration of such cession and relinquishment by said Stockbridges and Munsees, the United States agree to select as soon as practicable and to give them a tract of land in the State of Wisconsin near the southern boundary of the Menomonee reservation, of sufficient extent to provide for each head of a family and others lots of land of eighty and forty acres, as hereinafter provided; every such lot to contain at least one-half of arable land, and to pay to be expended for improvements for the said Stockbridges and Munsees as provided in article 4, the sum of forty-one thousand one hundred dollars, and a further sum of twenty thousand five hundred and fifty dollars to enable them to remove, and the further sum of eighteen thousand dollars, (twelve thousand for the Stockbridges and six thousand for the Munsees,) to be expended, at such time, and in such manner, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, in the purchase of stock and necessaries, the discharge of national or tribal debts, and to enable them to settle their affairs.

ARTICLE 3.

As soon as practicable after the selection of the lands set aside for these Indians by the preceding article, the United States shall cause the same to be surveyed into sections, half and quarter sections, to correspond with the public surveys, and the council of the Stockbridges and Munsees shall under the direction of the superintendent of Indian affairs for the northern superintendency, make a fair and just allotment among the individuals and families of their tribes. Each head of a family shall be entitled to eighty acres of land, and in case his or her family consists of more than four members, if thought expedient by the said council, eighty acres more may be allotted to him or her; each single male person above eighteen years of age shall be entitled to eighty acres; and each female person above eighteen years of age, not belonging to any family, and each orphan child, to forty acres; and sufficient land shall be reserved for the rising generation. After the said allotment is made, the persons entitled to land may take immediate possession thereof, and the United States will thence-forth and until the issuing of the patents, as hereinafter provided, hold the same in trust for such persons, and certificates shall be issued, in a suitable form guaranteeing and securing to the holders their possession and an ultimate title to the land; but such certificates shall not be assignable, and shall contain a clause expressly prohibiting the sale or transfer by the holder of the land described therein. After the expiration of ten years upon the application of the holder of such certificate, made with the consent of the said Stockbridge and Munsee council, and when it shall appear prudent and for his or her welfare, the President of the United States may direct, that such restriction on the power of sale shall be withdrawn and a patent issued in the usual form. Should any of the heads of families die before the issuing of the certificates or patents herein provided for, the same shall issue to their heirs; and if the holder of any such certificate shall die without heirs, his or her land shall not revert to the United States, unless on petition of the Stockbridge and Munsee council for the issuing of a new certificate for the land of such deceased person, to the holder of any other certificate for land, and on the surrendering to the United States of such other certificate, by the holder thereof, the President shall direct the issuing of a new certificate for such land; and in like manner new certificates, may be given for lots of land, the prior certificates for which have been surrendered by the holders thereof.

ARTICLE 4.

Of the monies set aside for improvements by the second of these articles, not exceeding one-fourth shall be applied to the building of roads leading to, and through said lands: to the erection of a school-house, and such other improvements of a public character, as will be deemed necessary by the said Stockbridge and Munsee council, and approved by the superintendent of the northern superintendency. The residue of the said fund shall be expended for improvements to be made by and for the different members and families composing the said tribes, according to a system to be adopted by the said council, under the direction of the superintendent aforesaid, and to be first approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

ARTICLE 5.

The persons to be included in the apportionment of the land and money to be divided and expended under the provisions of this agreement, shall be such only, as are actual members of the said Stockbridge and Munsee tribes, (a roll or census of whom shall be taken and appended to this agreement,) their heirs, and legal representatives; and hereafter, the adoption of any individual amongst them shall be null and void, except it be first approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

ARTICLE 6.

In case the United States desire to locate on the tract of land to be selected as herein provided, the Stockbridges and Munsees emigrated to the west of the Mississippi in conformity to the treaty of September third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, the Stockbridges and Munsees, parties to this treaty, agree to receive them as brethren: Provided, That none of the said Stockbridges and Munsees, whether now residing at Stockbridge, in the State of Wisconsin, in the State of New York, or west of the Mississippi, shall be entitled to any of these lands or the money stipulated to be expended by these articles, unless they remove to the new location within two years from the ratification hereof.

ARTICLE 7.

The said Stockbridges and Munsees hereby set aside, for educational purposes exclusively, their portion of the annuities under the treaties of November the eleventh, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four; August eleventh, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven; and September third, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine.

ARTICLE 8.

One hundred and fifty dollars valuation of the schoolhouse at Stockbridge made in conformity to article 6 of the treaty of November twenty-fourth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, and remaining unpaid, shall be expended in the erection of a school-house, with the other funds set aside for the same purpose by article 4 of this agreement.

ARTICLE 9.

About seven and two-fifths acres bounded as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of lot eighty-nine, in the centre of the military road; thence west, along the north line of said lot, fifty-four and a quarter rods; thence south, thirty-eight and a quarter rods; thence east twenty-eight and a quarter rods; thence north thirty four and a quarter rods; thence east twenty-six rods; thence north, four rods, to the place of beginning, comprising the ground heretofore used by the Stockbridges to bury their dead, shall be patented to the supervisors of the town of Stockbridge, to be held by them and their successors in trust for the inhabitants of said town, to be used by them as a cemetery, and the proceeds from cemetery lots and burial-places to be applied in fencing, clearing, and embellishing the grounds.

ARTICLE 10.

It is agreed that all roads and highways laid out by authority of law shall have right of way through the lands set aside for said Indians, on the same terms as are provided by law for their location through lands of citizens of the United States.

ARTICLE 11.

The object of this instrument being to advance the welfare and improvement of said Indians, it is agreed, if it prove insufficient from causes which cannot now be foreseen, to effect these ends, that the President of the United States may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, adopt such policy in the management of their affairs, as in his judgment may be most beneficial to them; or Congress may, hereafter, make such provision by law, as experience shall prove to be necessary.

ARTICLE 12.

The said Stockbridges and Munsees agree to suppress the use of ardent spirits among their people and to resist by all prudent means, its introduction in their settlements.

ARTICLE 13.

The Secretary of the Interior, if deemed by him expedient and proper, may examine into the sales made by the Stockbridge Indians. to whom lots of land were allotted in conformity to the acts of Congress, entitled “An act for the relief of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians in the Territory of Wisconsin,” approved March third, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three; and if it shall be found that any of the said sales have been improperly made, or that a proper consideration has not been paid, the same may be disapproved or set aside. By the direction of the said Secretary, patents to such lots of land shall be issued to such persons as shall be found to be entitled to the same.

ARTICLE 14.

The lots of land the equitable title to which shall be found not to have passed by valid sales from the Stockbridge Indians to purchasers, and such lots as have, by the treaty of November twenty-fourth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, been receded to the United States, shall be sold at the minimum price of ten dollars per acre for lots fronting on Lake Winnebago, on both sides of the military road, and all the lands in the three tiers of lots next to Lake Winnebago, and at five dollars per acre for the residue of the lands in said township of Stockbridge. Purchasers of lots, on which improvements were made by Stockbridge Indians shall pay, in addition to the said minimum price, the appraised value of such improvements. To actual settlers on any of said lots possessing the qualifications requisite to acquire pre-emption rights, or being civilized persons of Indian descent, not members of any tribe, who shall prove, to the satisfaction of the register of the land district to which the township of Stockbridge shall be attached, that he or she has made improvements to the value of not less than fifty dollars on such lot, and that he or she is actually residing on it; the time of paying the purchase-price may be extended for a term not exceeding three years from the ratification hereof, as shall be deemed advisable by the President of the United States, provided, that no such actual settler shall be permitted to pre-empt, in the manner aforesaid, more than one lot, or two contiguous lots, on which he has proved to have made improvements exceeding the value of one hundred dollars. The residue of said lots shall be brought into market as other Government lands are offered for sale, and shall not be sold at a less price than the said minimum price; and all said sales shall be made, and the patents provided for in these articles shall be issued in accordance with the survey made in conformity to said act of March third, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, unless, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, a new survey shall be deemed necessary and proper.

ARTICLE 15.

The United States agree to pay, within one year after the ratification of this agreement, the appraised value of the improvements upon the lands herein ceded and relinquished to the United States, to the individuals claiming the same, the valuation of such improvements, to be made by a person to be selected by the superintendent of Indian affairs for the northern superintendency, and not to exceed, in the aggregate, the sum of five thousand dollars.

ARTICLE 16.

The hereinafter named Stockbridge Indians, having become sufficiently advanced in civilization, and being desirous of separating from the Stockbridge tribe, and of enjoying the privileges granted to persons of Indian descent by the State of Wisconsin, and in consideration of ceding and relinquishing to the United States all their rights in the lands and annuities of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians, and in the annuities, money, or land, to which said Indians now are or may hereafter be entitled, the United States agree to issue patents in fee-simple to the said Stockbridge Indians to the lots of land, at the town of Stockbridge, described and set opposite their names.

Names of persons.	Lots to be patented to them.	Lots, the privilege of entering which on the same terms of payment as prescribed for actual settlers in article 14 is granted.

FRANCIS HUEBSCHMANN,
Commissioner on the part of the United States.
ZIBA T. PETERS, Sachem.
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Office of Indian Affairs, March 3, 1856.

SIR: Referring to my last two annual reports, where the embarrassed condition of the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians is discussed, and to the paragraph of the general Indian appropriation bill, of the 3d March, 1855, Stat. at Large, vol. x, p. 699, where there is appropriated, "for the purpose of enabling the President to treat with, and arrange the difficulties existing among the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, of Lake Winnebago, in the State of Wisconsin, arising out of the acts of Congress of third March, eighteen hundred and forty-three, and August sixth, eighteen hundred and forty-six, and the treaty of twenty-fourth of November, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, in such manner as may be just to the Indians, and with their assent, and not inconsistent with the legal rights of white persons who may reside on the Stockbridge reserve, of the claim of the United States under the treaty of eighteen hundred and forty-eight, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars;" and also to the treaty which was made between these Indians and Superintendent Francis Huebschmann, during the last summer, which, for reasons then given you, was disapproved of, I have now the honor to send up a treaty concluded with them on the 5th ultimo, by Superintendent Huebschmann, the provisions of which are approved by me, and would recommend, if you agree, that it may be laid before the President, to the end, if approved by him, that it may be sent to the Senate for its constitutional action thereon. And I herewith transmit a copy of the letter of the superintendent sending on said treaty, together with a copy of a power of attorney from certain Munsees to Isaac Durkee, William Mohawk, and Joshua Wilson [Are the persons Munsee or Stockbridge?], for purposes therein indicated.
I would merely remark that, by locating the Stockbridges in Wisconsin instead of Minnesota about $20,000 of expense would be saved in removal, while a location in Minnesota could not be more out of the way of the whites, and the lands there would be worth to the Government at least as much as the price to be paid the Menomonee's.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GEO. W. MANYPENNY Commissioner.
Hon. ROBERT MCCLELLAND,
Secretary of the Interior.
NORTHERN SUPERINTENDENCY,

Milwaukie, February 23, 1856.

SIR: I have the honor to enclose a treaty with the Stockbridges and Munsees, concluded in conformity to your instructions. In consequence of the complicated difficulties at Stockbridge, and the factious spirit ruling among the Indians, the task imposed upon me was not an easy one, and required extraordinary patience and forbearance. I believe I have used all proper means to make the arrangement contemplated by the treaty as acceptable to all parties interested as could be expected under the circumstances. However, about one-fifth of the Indians, headed by Austin E. Quinney, and mostly consisting of members of the Quinney family, did not sign the treaty, but without giving any sensible reason. The only two objections raised by Austin E. Quinney to the draft of the treaty were: First, That the issuing of patents to lands, to be apportioned to the individuals of the tribe, was contemplated. This objection was virtually obviated by amending the treaty, so that the application for a patent to be made after ten years, has first to be consented to by the general council of the Stockbridges and Munsees.

His second objection was, that there was no provision made for the payment of a claim he himself has against the tribe. Though I invited him to submit the claim to me for examination, he did not do so, and, from what I learned from himself and others, it appears that it would, if submitted, not bear very accurate examination, as about half of it is made up of high charges for meals furnished councillors of the Stockbridges, and the other half for funds advanced to one certain Chandler, on his share of the twenty thousand dollars to be paid under the amendment to the treaty of 1848 for procuring the adoption of the said amendment.

The real objection on the part of the Quinneys to the re-organization of the Stockbridges and Munsees under this treaty is, no doubt, the certainty staring them in the face, that their rule over the tribe will be at an end if the treaty is ratified. To show what use this family has made of their power over the tribe, I will only mention a few instances. Though claiming to hold their lands again in commonalty in consequence of the law of August 6, 1846, Austin E. Quinney, by barter and trade carried on with widows and other Indians, and by advancing to them a few provisions, pretended to have bought their lots of land, and, under the treaty of 1848, he not only received pay for the improvements on all these lands, (1,440 acres,) $2,760.63, but of the sixteen thousand five hundred dollars paid under V article of treaty of 1848 he received $3,083, while under a proper per capita apportionment, the share of his family would not have been much more than about three hundred dollars. The interest of the $16,500, to be paid “as other annuities are paid by the United States,” has been apportioned in direct violation of the said treaty until the Stockbridge affairs came under my superintendence, in the same manner as the $16,500 under article 5 had peen paid; and for the benefit of Sam'l Miller, even that illegal apportionment was falsified so as to pay him one-half of $1,662.50, and the interest on the other half instead of $412.50, the proportion to which he would have been entitled by the quantity of land held by him at the treaty of 1848. Austin E. Quinney realized about a thousand dollars more by selling his pretended right of occupancy to lots, so that it appears, that he has received about seven thousand dollars in addition to what he has received of the money paid to his tribe by the State of New York, and it is no doubt mortifying to him that his share of moneys hereafter, is to be no larger than that of any other member of the tribe. A great part of the funds received from the State of New York has been used by the Quinney family for their own aggrandizement and the sending of delegations to Washington; and the wishes of a majority of the Stockbridges in relation to the application of those funds, have been frequently disregarded, and at the present time Sam'l Miller has been sent by Austin E. Quinney as delegate to Washington with a part of those funds, in direct opposition to the wishes of the majority.

I proposed to Austin E. Quinney and his followers to patent to them lands at Stockbridge, and to make other stipulations favorable to them, if they preferred to remain there and to separate from the tribe; but as they would not declare their willingness to accept of such provisions, and as Quinney declared that he would probably desire to remove with the others if the lands to be selected were of good quality, and deeming it more beneficial to them that they should remove with the others and be settled by themselves, if they preferred it, in some corner of the new reservation, I did not feel prompted to provide for thier remaining at Stockbridge, and increased the sums to be paid in proportion to their number.
I had made no secret, since my visit to Stockbridge during the fore part of December last, of the arrangement contemplated in relation to lands and land-titles at Stockbridge, (articles 13 and 14,) and it appeared generally satisfactory to white settlers; yet there will be always found meddlesome individuals, and it appears that, at the request of a resident of Stockbridge, who, however, has no land himself, a lawyer of Green Bay had drawn up a petition or memorial asking the treaty to be amended.

When I saw the document no names were attached to it, and I have not inquired afterwards if it has been signed by anybody and forwarded. I read it very hastily, but it left the impression upon my mind that little legal knowledge was displayed by its author. Since the authority to issue patents, given by the law of 1843, was destroyed by the repealing act of 1846, and the list of patents to lots to be granted under the treaty of 1848 is imperfect and incorrect, the settlers at Stockbridge, if they understand it, will be the last to object to authority being granted to the proper officer to issue patents; and the investigation of sales made by Indians provided for, I think, will not be seriously objected to, except by such who are afraid that the consideration paid by them would be found to have consisted of whiskey.

The minimum price fixed in the treaty for the land to be sold by the United States Government is not too high nor unjust to any class of the settlers of Stockbridge. Those who settled there shortly after the treaty of 1848, and bought out, for a small consideration, the right of occupancy of Indians, to their houses, clearings, and fields, have since mostly confined themselves to cultivating the fields already made and raised fine crops, without paying any taxes or bearing any of the hardships of a new settlement. It has not been so much by their labor that these lands have become valuable, as by the settlements and improvements made in the surrounding country and the general prosperity of the State. The settlers who have recently squatted on lots of land at Stockbridge, have gone there with the perfect knowledge of the price which was expected to be fixed on those lands, and since it has become known that the treaty was signed, that part of the State has been under great excitement, and many have flocked to Stockbridge to make claims and to avail themselves of the privileges contemplated to be extended to actual settlers by the treaty. It is feared that there are even more settlers and claimants than lots of land, and if the price should be reduced the excitement would, no doubt, become more intense, and the land-officers would find it more difficult to settle the conflicting claims. The privilege of entering lands at the terms of payment as prescribed for actual settlers in article 14, granted to a number of Indians by article 16, was considered by all as very valuable, which seems to prove beyond a doubt that the price is considered very moderate. If the petition above referred to has been signed generally by the settlers at Stockbridge, they have done so in consequence of its being represented to them that it could do no harm to try to get the lands from the Government at a less price, and not because the price is too high or unjust to any one of them. A power of attorney of the Munsees of New York to their delegate is herewith enclosed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
FRANCIS HUEBSCHMANN,
Superintendent.
Hon. GEORGE W. MANYPENNY,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

Know all men that by these presents we make, constitute, and appoint Isaac Durkee, William Mohawk, and Joshua Wilson, or either two of them in the absence of the other, to receive from the commissioner of the United States the share of us, and each of us, and our families in money, which, in consideration of annuities due us from the United States, or by virtue and effect of a treaty which it is understood, is about to be made between the United States and the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes of Indians, we are informed will be our due, and will be paid to us by the said commissioner, or by the superintendent of Indian affairs for Wisconsin. And we hereby authorize our attorneys as aforesaid to give receipts and vouchers to the said commissioner or superintendent, as may be right, or he may require; our intention being that our said attorneys shall transmit to us, in the State of New York, said moneys, to enable us immediately to remove to, improve and subsist in our new homes in the State of Wisconsin.

Hereby ratifying the acts of our attorneys in the premises.
In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals, this, — day of January, A. D. 1856.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND DELAWARE 30 MAY 1860, SARCOXIEVILLE ["KANSAS"]

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 803-807.)

May 30, 1860. 12 Stat., 1129. Ratified July 27, 1860. Proclaimed August 22, 1860.

Articles of the agreement and convention made and concluded at Sarcoxieville, on the Delaware reservation, this thirtieth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty, by Thomas B. Sykes, as a commissioner on the part of the United States, and following named chiefs of the Delaware tribe of Indians, viz: John Conner, head chief of the whole tribe; Sar-cox-ie, chief of the Turtle band; Ne-con-he-con, chief of the Wolf band; Rock-a-to-wha, chief of the Turkey band, and assistants to the said chief, chosen and appointed by the people, and James Connor, chosen by the said chief as delegate.

By the first article of the treaty made and concluded at the city of Washington, on the sixth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, between George W. Manypenny, commissioner on the part of the United States, and certain delegates of the Delaware tribe of Indians, which treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States on the eleventh day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifty- four, there was reserved, as a permanent home for the said tribe, that part of their country lying east and south of a line beginning at a point on the line between the Delawares and the Half-breed Kansas [Kansas Tribe], forty miles in a direct line west of the boundary between the Delawares and Wyandottes, thence north ten miles; thence in an easterly course to a point on the south bank of Big Island Creek, which shall also be on the bank of the Missouri river, where the usual high-water line of said creek intersects the high-water line of said river. And by the eleventh article of said treaty it was stipulated that "at any time hereafter when the Delawares desire it, and at their request and expense, the President may cause the country reserved for their permanent home, to be surveyed in the same manner as the ceded country is surveyed, and may assign such portion to each person or family as shall be designated by the principal men of the tribe: Provided, such assignment shall be uniform." The Delawares having represented to the government that it is their wish that a portion of the lands reserved for their home may be divided among them in the manner contemplated by the eleventh article of the treaty aforesaid, it is hereby agreed by the parties hereto, that the said reservation shall be surveyed as early as practicable after the ratification of these articles of agreement and convention, in the same manner that the public lands are surveyed; and to each member of the Delaware tribe there shall be assigned a tract of land containing eighty acres, to include in every case, as far as practicable, a reasonable portion of timber, to be selected according to the legal subdivisions of survey.

ARTICLE 2.

The division and assignment in severalty among the Delawares of the land shall be made in a compact body, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and his decision of all questions arising therefrom shall be final and conclusive. Certificates shall be issued by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for the tracts assigned in severalty, specifying the names of the individuals to whom they have been assigned respectively, and that the said tracts are set apart for the exclusive use and benefit of the assignees and their heirs. And said tracts shall not be alienable in fee, leased, or otherwise disposed of, except to the United States or to members of the Delaware tribe, and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the said tracts shall be exempt from levy, taxation, sale, or forfeiture, until otherwise provided by Congress. Prior to the issue of the certificates aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or expedient, respecting the disposition of any of said tracts, in case of the death of the person or persons to whom they may be assigned, so that the same shall be secured to the families of such deceased persons. And should any of the Indians to whom tracts shall be assigned, abandon them, the said Secretary make take such action in relation to the proper disposition thereof, as, in his judgment, may be necessary and proper. The improvements of the Indians residing on the lands to be sold shall be valued by the United States, and the individual owners thereof shall receive the amount realized from the sale of same, to be expended in building other improvements for them on the lands retained.

ARTICLE 3.

The Delaware tribe of Indians, entertaining the belief that the value of their lands will be enhanced by having a railroad passing through their present reservation, and being of the opinion that the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, incorporated by an act of the legislative assembly of Kansas Territory, will have the advantage of travel and general transportation over every other company proposed to be formed, which will run through their lands, have expressed a desire that the said Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company shall have the preference of purchasing the remainder of their lands after the tracts in severalty and those for the special objects herein named shall have been selected and set apart, upon the payment into the United States treasury, which payment shall be made within six months after the quantity shall have been ascertained, in gold or silver coin, of such a sum as three commissioners, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall appraise to be the value of said land: Provided, in no event shall the value be place below the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, exclusive of the cost of the survey of the same. (And that the United States will issue a patent in fee-simple to said company, upon the payment as aforesaid, for all the land remaining in Kansas.) It is, therefore, agreed by the United States that the wishes of the Delawares shall be granted; that they will accept of the trust reposed upon them; and that the money resulting from such disposition of the lands shall be disposed of and applied in the same manner provided for by the seventh and eighth articles of the Delaware treaty of six May, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, after expending a sufficient sum to enable them to commence agricultural pursuits under favorable circumstances. It is also agreed that the said railroad company shall have the perpetual right of way over any portion of the lands allotted to the Delawares in severalty, upon payment of a just compensation, therefore, in money, to the respective parties whose lands are crossed by the line of railroad. It being the intent and meaning of the Delawares, in consenting to the sale of their surplus lands to said company, that they should, in good faith, and within a reasonable time, construct a railroad through their reservation, and to carry out this intent as well as to secure so great a public convenience, it is agreed that no patent shall issue for any of these lands nor shall the sale be binding upon the Delaware Indians or the United States, until the Secretary of the Interior shall be fully satisfied that a line of twenty-five miles of the road from Leavenworth City shall have been completed and equipped, when a patent shall issue for one-half of the ascertained quantity. The patent for the residue shall issue only when the said Secretary shall be satisfied that the road has been, in like manner, completed and equipped to the western boundary of the Delaware reservation. And if the said company shall fail or neglect to construct either the first or second section of the road, or having constructed the first section and fail to complete the second section within a reasonable time they shall forfeit to the United States all rights to the lands not previously patented, and the certificate of purchase shall be deemed and considered cancelled. And provided further, That in case the said company shall fail to make payment for the lands or fail to construct the road, as hereinbefore stipulated, within a reasonable time, the surplus lands shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior, at public auction, in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres; but, in no case for a sum less than the appraised value, the net proceeds to be applied in the same manner as heretobefore specified: And provided further, That the said railroad company shall, finally, and in good faith, sell and dispose of all said lands within seven years after receiving the patent therefor, except what may be necessary for railroad purposes; and in default thereof so much thereof as may remain undisposed of shall revert to the Delaware nation, to be disposed of as herein provided for other forfeited lands

Whereas some years ago a good many of the Delawares went down among the Southern Indians, and as there are still about two hundred of them there, they have reason to believe they will return soon, it is hereby agreed that eighty acres each be set apart for them, to be allotted to them as they return, and certificates to be then issued to them, in the same manner as those now within the reservation, and in every respect to be governed by the same rules and regulations prescribed for the government of the lands reserved by the preceding articles, that until they return the allotments set apart for belong to the nation in common.

ARTICLE 5.

There shall be reserved three hundred and twenty acres of ground where the mill, and school-house, and Ketchum's store now stand; three hundred and twenty acres where the council-house now is; one hundred and sixty acres where the Baptist mission now is; one hundred and sixty acres where the agency house now is; forty acres where the Methodist Episcopal Church South now is; forty acres where the Methodist Episcopal Church North now is; which several tracts, with the improvements thereupon, shall be disposed of when the objects for which they have been reserved shall have been accomplished, in such manner and for such purposes as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine to be just and equitable, for the benefit of the Delawares.

ARTICLE 6.

By article fourteen of the treaty between the Delawares and the United States, of May six, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, ratified by the Senate July eleven, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, the United States bound herself to protect them and their rights: and that whereas, that depredations of various kinds have been committed upon them and their lands, it is hereby agreed that the United States shall pay them, within twelve months from the ratification of these articles of treaty and convention, thirty thousand dollars as indemnity, for timber that has been cut off from their reservation by the whites, and nine thousand five hundred dollars as indemnity for ponies and cattle that have been stolen from them by the whites since their last treaty with the United States. It is further stipulated that should the Senate of the United States refuse this article, it shall in no wise effect the validity of the other articles, or prejudice the rights of the Delawares to appeal to the Congress of the United States for the indemnities hereby agreed upon. It is further understood that, at the treaty between the Delawares and the United States, made September twenty-nine, of one thousand eighteen hundred and twenty-four, the boundary of the reservation then set apart for them included the Half-breed Kansas lands; but it afterwards proved that the United States had previously set apart these lands for the Half-breed Kaws, and by that means they have been kept out of the use and benefit of said lands; it is, therefore, hereby agreed that a fair valuation shall be made by the United States upon such lands, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and that the amount of said valuation shall be paid the Delawares.

ARTICLE 7.

In consideration of the long and faithful services of the chiefs of the Delaware nation, and of the interpreter, who is also a member of the nation, it is further agreed that the said chiefs and the interpreter shall have allotted to each a tract of land, to be selected by themselves, and shall receive a patent in fee-simple therefor from the President of the United States, viz: John Conner, principal chief, six hundred and forty acres; Sar-cox-ie, chief of the Turtle band, three hundred and twenty acres; Roc-a-to-wha, chief of the Turkey band, three hundred and twenty acres; Ne-con-he-con, chief of the Wolf band, three hundred and twenty acres, and Henry Tiblow, interpreter, three hundred and twenty acres; the lines of each tract to conform to the legal subdivision of survey. It is further agreed that, from the money as paid the Delaware tribe of Indians, in accordance with article number ten of this treaty, the chiefs of said tribe of Indians shall appropriate one thousand five hundred dollars as the annual salary of the councilmen of the said tribe of Indians.

ARTICLE 8.

Any stipulation in former treaties, inconsistent with those embraced in the foregoing articles shall be of no force or effect.

ARTICLE 9.

As these articles are entered into for the sole use and benefit of the Delaware Indians, it is understood that the expenses incident to carrying them into effect shall be defrayed from the funds of said Indians, held in trust for them by the United States.

ARTICLE 10.

The interest accruing to the Delawares under the former treaties, and that which may accrue under this, shall be paid on the first of April and the first of October in each year.

In testimony whereof, the said Thomas B. Sykes, commissioner as aforesaid, and the said delegates of the Delaware tribe of Indians have hereunto set their hands and seals, at the place and on the day and year hereinbefore written.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE 2 SEPTEMBER 1861, LEAVENWORTH ["KANSAS"]

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 818-824.)

Jul. 2, 1861. 12 Stats., 1177. Ratified, Aug. 6, 1861. Proclaimed, Oct. 4, 1861.
[A part of this treaty has not been entered because of the nature of the text being of the descriptions of tracts of land. -Editor.]

Whereas a treaty or agreement was made and concluded at Leavenworth City, Kansas, on the second of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, between the United States of America and the Delaware tribe of Indians, relative to certain lands of that tribe conveyed to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, and to bonds executed to the United States by the said company for the payment of the said Indians, which treaty or agreement, with the preliminary and incidental papers necessary to the full understanding of the same, in the following words, to wit:

Whereas, by the treaty of May 30, 1860, between the United States and the Delaware tribe of Indians, it is provided that the surplus lands of said Delawares, not included in their "home reserve," should be surveyed and appraised under direction of the Secretary of the Interior: and that in order to aid in the construction of a railroad near and through their said "home reserve," the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company of Kansas, duly organized and incorporated under the laws of said Territory, should have the right to purchase such surplus lands at such appraised value--on condition, however, that after paying for said lands, said company should only receive title to one-half of them on completing and equipping, within a reasonable time, twenty-five (25) miles of said railroad from Leavenworth City westward; and should only receive title to the remaining half of said lands on completing and equipping said road , within a reasonable time, to the western boundary of the "Delaware Reserve:" and that in case said company should fail to pay for said lands, or having paid, should forfeit the same, or any part thereof, before receiving title, by failing to construct either the first or second section of said road within such reasonable time, then the lands so forfeited, or not paid for; should be sold in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty(160) acres, at not less than such appraised value, the proceedings of such sale, subject to a certain contingent deduction, to be invested by the President of the United States in "safe and profitable stocks," for the benefit of said Delawares Indians: and

Whereas said surplus lands, to the amount of 223,966 78/100 acres, having been duly surveyed and appraised at an aggregate valuation of two hundred end eighty-six thousand seven hundred and forty-two and 15/100 ($286,742 15/100) dollars: and

Whereas the said Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company has executed, under their corporate seal, and by the hand of Thomas Ewing, jr,, their agent, their twenty-nine (29) several bonds, all of an even date herewith, and numbered from one to twenty-nine, inclusive, for sums amounting in the aggregate to $286,742 15/100, being the amount of the valuation of said surplus lands as above stated, twenty-eight (28) of which said bonds are for the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars each, and one is for the sum of six thousand and seven hundred and forty-two and 15/100 ($6,742 15/100) dollars, and payable in ten (10) years after their date, at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States, in the city of New York, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the United States or bearer, with interest at the rate of six per cent, per annum, payable annually at the same place as interest-warrants attached to said bonds, which said bonds have been delivered by said company to Archibald Williams, judge of the United States court for the district of Kansas, and have been by him received and receipted for as agent of the United States for that purpose specially appointed, in accordance with the instructions of the President of the United States of June 10, 1861, hereto attached and made part hereof, and for the consideration and use in said instructions set forth:
Now, therefore, to secure the payment of said bonds and every part thereof. and of all interest to become due thereon, according to the terms thereof, the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company by its agent hereto specially authorized by resolution of the board of directors of said company of April 11, 1861, a certified copy of which said resolution is hereto attached, hereby agrees with the United States, as trustee for said Delaware tribe of Indians, that in case said company shall at any time hereafter neglect or fail to pay the whole or any part of the interest on all or any one of said bonds, or shall neglect or fail to pay the whole or any part of the principal of all or any one of said bonds, when any such payment, either of principal or of interest, shall become due and payable, then the said railroad company shall be deemed and held to have forfeited all right and title of any kind whatever to the one hundred thousand (100,000) acres of land herein described, to wit:

And whereas William P. Dole, commissioner of Indian affairs, was designated by the Executive to present the treaty, as above amended, to the Indians, through their chiefs and headmen, for their acceptance, and to take such acceptance, if freely given, with the signatures of said Indian chiefs and headmen, and to certify his proceedings therein to the Executive; and the foregoing amendments having been fully interpreted and explained to the chiefs and headmen of the Delaware tribe of Indians, acting for and on behalf of the Delaware tribe aforesaid, they did thereunto, on the second day of September, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, give their free and voluntary assent in the words and figures following, to wit
We, the undersigned, chiefs, councillors, and headmen of said tribe, this day in full council assembled, having had read and carefully explained and interpreted to us the within and foregoing treaty or agreement between the United States and the Delaware tribe of Indians, concluded on [the] 2nd day of July, 1861, together with the within and foregoing amendments thereto, made by the Senate of the United States on the 6th day of August, 1861, do hereby accept and consent to said treaty as so amended.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and affixed our seals this 2nd day of September, 1861.

Signed and sealed in presence of-- Isaac Golmarke, United States interpreter. F. Johnson. H. R. Branch. (As to Sar-cox-ie.) W. G. Coffin. (As to Sar-cox-ie.)
I hereby certify that the foregoing treaty or agreement between the United States and the Delaware tribe of Indians. concluded on the 2d day of July, 1861, together with the foregoing amendments thereto, made by the Senate of the United States on the 6th day of August, 1861, were read and fully explained by me to said Indians, except Sar-cox-ie, through Isaac Journeycake, the United States interpreter, and to Sar-cox-ie through Charles Journeycake: and the delegate, chiefs, councillors, and headmen above named, on behalf of said tribe, this day in council assembled, did freely accept and consent to said treaty, together with said amendments, and subscribed their names and affixed their seals thereto in my presence. Given under my hand this 2d September, 1861. Wm. P. Dole, Commissioner Indian Affairs.

Now, therefore, be it know that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America, do, in pursuance of the advice and consent of the Senate, as expressed in their resolution of the sixth of August, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, accept, ratify, and confirm said treaty, with the amendments, as aforesaid.
In testimony whereof, I have caused the seal of the United States to be hereto affixed, having signed the same with my hand.
Done at the city of Washington, this fourth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-sixth.

TREATY BETWEEN THE DELAWARE AND THE UNITED STATES 4 JULY 1866, THE DELAWARE AGENCY, KANSAS

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 937-942.)

July 4, 1866. 14 Stats., 793. Ratified July 26, 1866. Proclaimed Aug. 10. 1866

Articles of agreement between the United States and the chiefs and councilors of the Delaware Indians, on behalf of said tribe, made at the Delaware Agency, Kansas, on the fourth day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

Whereas Congress has by law made it the duty of the President of the United States to provide by treaty for the removal of the Indian tribes from the State of Kansas; and whereas the Delaware Indians have expressed a wish to remove from their present reservation in said State to the Indian country, located between the S; and whereas the United States have, by treaties negotiated with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, with the Creeks, and with the Seminoles, Indian tribes residing in said Indian country, acquired the right to locate other Indian tribes within the limits of the same; and whereas the Missouri River Railroad Company, a corporation existing in the State of Kansas by the laws thereof,--and which company has built a railroad connecting with the Pacific Railroad, from near the mouth of the Kaw River to Leavenworth, in aid of which road the Delawares, by treaty in eighteen hundred and sixty-four, agreed to dispose of their lands,--has expressed a desire to purchase the present Delaware Indian reservation in the said State, in a body, at a fair price:

It is hereby agreed between Thomas Murphy, superintendent of Indian affairs, John G. Pratt, agent for the Delawares, and William H. Watson, special commissioner, who are duly appointed to act for the United States; and Captain John Connor, Captain Sarcoxie, and Charles Journeycake, chiefs, and James Ketchum, James Connor, Andrew Miller, and John Sarcoxie, councillors, duly appointed and authorized by said Delaware Indians to act for them and in their behalf, viz:

ARTICLE 1.

That the United States shall secure and cause to be paid to said Indians the full value of that part of their reservation, with the improvements then existing on the same, heretofore sold to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Westward Railroad Company, according to the terms of a treaty ratified August twenty-second, eighteen hundred and sixty, and supplemental treaties, and in accordance with the conditions, restrictions, and limitations thereof.

ARTICLE 2.

That the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and he is, authorized to sell to the Missouri River Railroad Company, or to other responsible party or parties, in a body, all the remaining part of said reservation, being the lands conveyed to said Delaware Indians in pursuance of the provisions of the supplemental treaty of September twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, and all other lands owned by said tribe in the State of Kansas previously disposed of, except as hereinafter provided, for a price not less than two dollars and fifty cents per acre, exclusive of improvements.

ARTICLE 3.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give each of the adult Delaware Indians who have received their proportion of land in severalty an opportunity, free from all restraint, to elect whether will will dissolve their relations with their tribe and become citizens of the United States: and the lands of all such Indians as may elect so to become citizens, together with those of their minor children, be held by them in severalty, shall be reserved from the sale hereinbefore provided for. And the Secretary of the Interior shall cause any and all improvements made on any of the said lands, the sale of which is provided for, whether held in common or in severalty, to be appraised, and the value thereof added to the price of said lands, to be paid for when payment is made for the lands upon which said improvements exist; and the money received for the improvements on the land of each Indian held in severalty shall be paid to him at any time after its payment to the Secretary of the Interior, when the Department shall be notified that the said Indian is ready to remove to Indian country, to provide for his removal to, and to enable him to make improvements on his new home therein: Provided, That whenever it shall be ascertained under the registry above provided for what lands will be vacated, there shall be set apart from the lands held in common, for each child of Delaware blood, born since the allotment of land to said tribe in severalty was made under previous treaties, a quantity of land equal to the amount to which they would have been entitled had they been born before said allotment, provided that selections for children belonging to families who head may elect to remain may be made from lands which are to be vacated by those who elect to remove: And provided further, That in case there shall be improvements upon any heretofore allotted lands, so selected for children of the Delawares, payment shall be made for such improvements, at their appraised value, by the parents or guardians of said children, at the same time as if the said lands had been sold to the railroad company or other parties.

ARTICLE 4.

The United States agree to sell to the said Delaware Indians a tract of land ceded to the Government by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, the Creeks, or the Seminoles, or which may be ceded by the Cherokees in the Indian country, to be selected by the Delawares in one body in as compact a form as practicable, so as to contain timber, water, and agricultural lands, to contain in the aggregate, if the said Delaware Indians shall so desire, a quantity equal to one hundred and sixty (160) acres for each man, woman, and child who shall remove to said country, at the price per acre paid by the United States for the said lands, to be paid for by the Delawares out of the proceeds of sales of lands in Kansas, heretofore provided for. The said tract of country shall be set off with clearly and permanently marked boundaries by the United States; and also surveyed as public lands are surveyed, when the Delaware council shall so request, when the same may, in whole or in part, be allotted by said council to each member of said tribe residing in said country, said allotment being subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

ARTICLE 5.

The United States guarantee to the said Delaware peaceable possession of their new home herein provided to be selected for them in the Indian country, and protection from hostile Indians and internal strife and civil war, and a full and just participation in any general council or territorial government that may be established for the nations and tribes residing in said Indian country.

ARTICLE 6.

It is agreed that the proceeds of the sale of the Delaware lands herein provided for shall be paid to said Indians in the manner following, to wit: Whenever the Department of the Interior shall be notified by the council, through the agent, that any of the Delawares who hold land in severalty are ready to remove, at the same time describing their allotments, there shall be paid to each such person the value of his allotment, and that of his family, to enable him to remove to and improve his new home, providing the money for said allotment shall have been paid to the Secretary of the Interior; and while said money, or any part thereof, shall remain in the Treasury of the United States, the Delawares shall be entitled to receive interest on the amount so retained, at the rate of five (5) per cent, per annum. And the residue of the proceeds of the sale of the Delaware lands, being those which have not been allotted, or which have been allotted, but have been abandoned by the allottees, shall be added to the general fund of the Delawares, interest thereon to be paid to the Indians in the same manner as is now provided in regard to that fund.

ARTICLE 7.

Within thirty days after the ratification of this treaty it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give the said Missouri River Railroad Company notice that he is authorized to contract with them or other responsible party or parties for the sale of said lands on the terms specified in this treaty, indicating the approximate quantity thereof; and within twenty days after receiving said notice at their usual place of doing business in the State of Kansas it shall be competent for said company to elect to make the purchase, by filing with the said secretary their bond, with approved security, in double the amount proposed to be paid by them for the whole of said lands, guaranteeing that they will purchase all of the lands to be sold under the provisions of this treaty, and that they will pay for them in accordance with the terms thereof. And upon the filing of a satisfactory bond as above provided by said company, the contract for such purchase shall be concluded by the said secretary with the said Missouri River Railroad Company, at not less than two dollars and fifty cents per acres for the whole of the lands herein provided to be sold: Provided, however, That if said railroad company shall not within the twenty days above limited file its bond for the purchase as herein prescribed, the Secretary of the Interior may at the expiration at that time accept any offer for the whole of said lands in one body, at not less than two dollars and fifty cents per acre, from any other responsible parties; but no offer shall be considered from other parties than said Missouri River Railroad Company, unless accompanied by a certificate of deposit in the First National Bank of the city of Washington, D.C., to the credit of the said secretary, for an amount equal to ten per cent. of the aggregate value of the land at the price proposed, to be forfeited for the use of the Delawares if the sale should be awarded to said person or corporation so proposing to purchase the lands, and said party should fail to make payment as hereinafter provided.

ARTICLE 8.

That within sixty days of the sale of said land shall have been effected, the purchaser shall pay to the said Secretary, in trust for the Delawares, the stipulated price of said unallotted lands, with the appraised value of improvements thereon, excepting therefrom the mill reservation and the quarter sections upon which the council-house and blacksmith-shops are built, the use of which shall be retained until the final removal of the Delawares, and for which payment will not be required from the purchaser until possession is delivered; and from time to time thereafter, as often as the Secretary of the Interior shall notify the said purchaser that ten thousand acres or more of said lands have been vacated by said Indians within three months thereafter, said purchaser shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, in trust for the said Indians, the stipulated price for said lands, with the appraised value of the improvements; and so on until all are paid for, according to the true intent and meaning hereof; patents therefor, conveying the same in fee-simple, shall from time to time issued to said purchaser, or to his or its assigns, by the President of the United States.

ARTICLE 9.

It is also stipulated that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a registry to be made of the names all said Delawares who have elected to dissolve their tribal relations and to become citizens of the United States, as provided in this treaty, with the names, ages, and sex of the members of the family of said Delawares, and present a certified copy of the same to the judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Kansas, and cause a copy to be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, after which any of said Delawares, being adults, may appear before the said judge in open court, and make the same proof and take the same oath of allegiance that is provided by law for the naturalization of aliens, and also make proof, to the satisfaction of said court, that he is sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control his own affairs and interests, that he has adopted the habits of civilized life, and has been able to support, for at least five years, himself and family; when he shall receive a certificate of the same under the seal of the said court; and on the filing of the said certificate in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the said Delaware Indians shall be constituted a citizen of the United States, and be entitled to receive a patent, in fee simple, with power of alienation, for the land heretofore allotted him, and his just proportion, in cash or in bonds, of the cash value of the credits of said tribe, principal and interest, then held in trust by the United States' and also, as the same may be received, his proportion of the proceeds of the sale of lands under the provisions of this treaty, when he shall cease to be a member of the tribe. Whereupon all of the minor children of those who have become citizens shall be construed to have elected to sever their connection with said tribe for the time being, and be entitled to their just proportion of the annuities of the tribe, to be paid to the head of the family to be expended for their support and education until they shall attain the age of twenty-one years, after which each shall elect to remove to his tribe or to become a citizen of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, and if thus admitted to citizenship, shall be entitled to all the privileges and interests herein provided for the head of the family. Should any minor as aforesaid, arriving at the age of twenty-one years, and electing to become a citizen of the United States, or any adult Indian having so elected, fail to be admitted, he shall not be compelled to remove but the Secretary of the Interior shall provide proper guardianship for the protection of his rights and interests and those of his family. There shall be granted to each of the Delawares who have thus become citizens, a patent, in fee simple, for the lands heretofore allotted to them, and, if they do not remove with the nation, their pro rata share of all annuities and trust-property held by the United States for them, the division to be made under the direction by the President of the United States, after which such persons shall cease to be members of the Delaware tribe, and shall not further participate in their councils, nor share in their property or annuities.

ARTICLE 10.

It is further agreed that the funds of the Delawares shall never be applied by the Government to the payment of the debt or debts of any individual member or members of the nation; nor shall any person be licensed to trade with the Delawares without the consent of the chiefs and council; and the salaries of the chiefs shall henceforward be four hundred dollars per annum.

ARTICLE 11.

The Delawares acknowledge their dependence upon the United States, and again renew their pledges of devotion to the Government thereof, and ask its protection; and the United States agree to protect, preserve, and defend them in all their just rights.

ARTICLE 12.

It is also agreed that if the said Secretary should not be able to sell the said lands as hereinbefore provided, he may cause the same to be appraised, in separate tracts, at their fair cash value, no tract to be valued at less than two dollars and fifty cents per acre, and the same when appraised may be sold at not less than the appraised value, and for as much more as the same will bring, and the money arising from the sale to be applied and distributed as hereinbefore provided.

ARTICLE 13.

It is agreed by the Delawares that railroad companies engaged in building roads whose routes shall lie through their new reservation in the Indian country shall have a right of way through and over said lands, not exceeding two hundred feet in width for any such road, and also the right to enter on all lands and take and use such gravel, stone, and other material except timber as may be necessary for the construction of such roads, compensation to be made for any damages done in obtaining such material, and for any damage arising from the location or running of such roads to improvements which shall have been made before such road shall have been located, such damages to be ascertained under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

ARTICLE 14.

The United States further agree that, in accordance with the general provisions of the sixth article of the Delaware treaty of May thirty, eighteen hundred and sixty, which have not yet been fulfilled, there shall be credited to the Delawares, in the purchase of their new reservation in the Indian country, the sum of thirty thousand dollars, which credit by the United States shall be received by the Delawares as a full settlement against all claims against the Government for depredations upon timber to the date of the signing of this treaty; and the Delawares shall receive, without cost, from the United States, land included within their new reservation to the amount of twenty-three sections, in place of the twenty-three sections of half-breed Kaw lands referred to in said sixth section in the treaty of eighteen hundred and sixty; and inasmuch as the Delawares claim that a large amount of stock has been stolen from them by whites since the treaty of eighteen hundred and fifty-four, the United States agree to have a careful examination of such claims made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and when the value of such stolen stock shall have been ascertained, the same shall be reported to Congress with a recommendation for an appropriation to pay for the same; and all monies appropriated for such purpose shall be paid to the owners of said stock.

ARTICLE 15.

It is also agreed by the contracting parties that nothing contained in this treaty shall be so construed as to require the Delawares to remove from their present homes, until after they have selected and received title to lands for new homes elsewhere.

In testimony whereof, the said superintendent, agent, and special commissioner, on behalf of the United States, and the said chiefs and councillors on behalf of the Delawares, have hereunto set their hands and seals this fourth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE CHEROKEE, 19 JULY 1866, CITY OF WASHINGTON

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties), pp. 942-950. Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 942-950.)

July 19, 1866. 14 Stats., 799. Ratified July 27, 1866. Proclaimed Aug. 11, 1866.

Articles of agreement and convention at the city of Washington on the nineteenth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, between the United States, represented by Dennis N. Cooley, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, [and] Elijah Sells, superintendent of Indian affairs for the southern superintendency, and the Cherokee Nation of Indians, represented by its delegates, James McDaniel, Smith Christie, White Catcher, S II. Benge, J. B. Jones, and Daniel H. Ross--John Ross, principal chief of the Cherokees, being too unwell to join in these negotiations.

PREAMBLE. Whereas existing treaties between the United States and the Cherokee Nation are deemed to be be insufficient, the said contracting parties agree as follows, viz:

Article 1.

The pretended treaty made with the so-called Confederate States by the Cherokee Nation on the seventh day of October, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and repudiated by the national council of the Cherokee Nation on the eighteenth day of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, is hereby declared to be void.

Article 2.

Amnesty is hereby declared by the United States and the Cherokee Nation for all crimes and misdemeanors committed by one Cherokee person on the person or property of another Cherokee, or of a citizen of the United States, prior to the fourth day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-six; and no right of action arising out of wrongs committed in aid or suppression of the rebellion shall be prosecuted in the courts of the United States or in the courts of the Cherokee Nation.

[Only the portion dealing with or pertaining to the Delaware has been entered at this time.]

Article 15.

The United States may settle any civilized Indians, friendly with the Cherokees and adjacent tribes, within the Cherokee country, on the unoccupied lands east of 96 [degrees], on such terms as may be agreed upon by any tribe and the Cherokees, subject5 to the approval of the President of the United States, which shall be consistent with the following provisions, viz: Should any such tribe or band of Indians settling in said country abandon their tribal organization, there being paid into the Cherokee national fund a sum of money which shall sustain the same proportion to the then existing national fund that the number of Indians sustain to the whole number of Cherokees then residing in the Cherokee country, they shall be incorporated into and ever after remain a part f the Cherokee Nation, on equal terms in every respect with native citizens. And should any such tribe, thus settling in said country, decide to preserve their national organizations, and to maintain their tribal laws, customs, and usages, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the Cherokee Nation. they shall have a district of country set off for their own use by metes and bounds equal to one hundred and sixty acres, if they so decide, for each man, woman, and child of said tribe, and shall pay for the same into the national fund such price and may be agreed upon by them and the Cherokee Nation, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, and in cases of disagreement the price to be fixed by the President. And the tribe thus settled shall also pay into the national fund a sum of money, to be agreed on by the respective parties, not greater in proportion to the whole existing national fund and the probable proceeds of the lands herein ceded or authorized to be ceded or sold than their numbers bear to the whole number of the Cherokees then residing in said country, and thence afterwards they shall enjoy all the rights of native Cherokees, But no Indians who have no tribal organizations, or who shall determine to abandon their tribal organizations, shall be entitled to settle east of the 96 [degree[of longitude without the consent of the Cherokee national council, or of a delegation duly appointed by it, being first obtained. And no Indians who have and determine to preserve the tribal organizations shall be permitted to settle, as herein provided, east of the 96 [degree] without such consent being first obtained, unless the President of the United States, after a full hearing of the objections offered by said council or delegation to such settlement, shall determine that the objections are insufficient, in which case he may authorize the settlement of such tribe east of the 96 [degree] of longitude.

Article 16.

The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96 [degrees], to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for each member of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty as the United States may decide. Said lands this disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President. The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over said country west of 90 [degrees] of longitude until thus sold and occupied,, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied. ARTICLE 17.

The Cherokee Nation hereby cedes, in trust to the United States, the tract of land in the State of Kansas which was sold to the Cherokees by the United States, under the provisions of the second article of the treaty of 1835; and also that strip of the land ceded to the nation by the fourth article of said treaty which is included in the State of Kansas, and the Cherokees consent that said lands may be included in the limits and jurisdiction of the said State.

The lands herein ceded shall be surveyed as the public lands of the United States are surveyed, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land-Office, and shall be appraised by two disinterested persons, one to be designated by the Cherokee national council and one by the Secretary of the Interior, and, in case of disagreement by a third person, to be mutually selected by the aforesaid appraisers. The appraisement to be not less than an average of one dollar and a quarter per acre, exclusive of improvements. And the Secretary of the Interior shall, from time to time, as such surveys and appraisements are approved by him, after due advertisements for sealed bids, sell such lands to the highest bidders for cash, in parcels not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, and at not less than the appraised value: Provided, That whenever there are improvements of the value of fifty dollars made on the lands not being mineral, and owned and personally occupied by any person for agricultural purposes at the date of the signing hereof, such person so owning, and in person residing on such improvements, shall, after due proof, made under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, be entitled to buy, at the appraised value, the smallest quantity of land in legal subdivisions which will include his improvements, not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred and sixty acres; the expenses of survey and appraisement to be paid by the Secretary out of the proceeds of sale of said land: Provided, That nothing in this article shall prevent the Secretary of the Interior from selling the whole of said lands not occupied by actual settlers at the date of the ratification of this treaty, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to each person entitled to pre-emption under the pre-emption laws of the United States, in a body, to any responsible party, for cash, for a sum not less than one dollar per acre.

[There are 39 articles in all in this treaty. The remaining articles are not of general interest to the Delaware. The remainder of the text can be found at http://digital.library.okstate.edu/kappler/index.htm]

All provisions of treaties heretofore ratified and in force, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty, are hereby re-affirmed and declared to be in full force; and nothing herein shall be construed as an acknowledgment by the United States, or as a relinquishment by the Cherokee Nation of any claims or demands under the guarantees of former treaties, except as herein expressly provided.
In testimony whereof, the said commissioners on the part of the United States, and the said delegation on the part of the Cherokee Nation, have hereunto set their hands and seals at the city of Washington, this ninth [nineteenth] day of July, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE DELAWARE AND THE CHEROKEE, NOVEMBER 1866

The undersigned delegates from the Delaware Indians, in company with the delegates on behalf of the Cherokee Nation, have examined all the Cherokee Country west of the 96th degree that they thought would be suitable for the Delawares to settle in, and have decided that there is not sufficient good land in a body west of that line, that could be cultivated to meet the wants of the people and have, therefore. preserving their tribal organization. selected that part of the Little Verdigris or Canae, beginning at the Kansas line where the 96th meridian crosses the same and thence running east ten miles; thence south thirty miles; thence north to the place of beginning, subject to the conditions mentioned in the Cherokee Treaty with the U.S. of July 19, 1866. Under the provisions of said treaty, the price for the use of the same has to be agreed on by the two parties, subject to the approval of the President of the United States. AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE DELAWARE AND THE CHEROKEE NATION, 8 APRIL 1867, CITY OF WASHINGTON

Articles of agreement made this 8th day of April, A.D. 1867, Between the Cherokee Nation, represented by William P. Ross, principal chief, Riley Keyes. and Jesse Bushyhead, delegates duly authorized, parties of the first part, and the Delaware tribe of Indians, represented by John Connor, principal chief, Charles Journeycake, assistant chief; Isaac Journeycake, and John Sarcoxie, delegates for and on behalf of said Delaware tribe, duly authorized, witnesseth:

Whereas by the fifteenth article of a certain treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation, ratified August 11, 1866, certain terms were provided, under which friendly Indians might be settled upon unoccupied lands in the Cherokee country east of the ninety-sixth degree of west longitude, the price to be paid for such lands to be agreed on by the Indians to be thus located and the Cherokee Nation, subject to the approval of the President of the United States; and Whereas by a treaty between the United States and the Delaware tribe of Indians, ratified August 10, 1866, the removal of the said Delawares to the Indian country south of Kansas was provided for; and in the fourth article whereof an agreement was made by the United States to sell to the Delawares a tract of land, being part of a tract the cession of which by the Cherokees to the United States was then contemplated; and whereas no such cession of land was made by the Cherokees to the United States. but in lieu thereof, terms were provided, as hereinbefore mentioned, under which friendly Indians might be settled upon their ands; and whereas a full and free conference has been had between the representatives of the Cherokees and the Delawares, in view of the treaties herein referred to, looking to a location of the Delawares upon the Cherokee lands, and their consolidation with said Cherokee Nation: Now, therefore, it is agreed between the parties thereto. subject to the approval of the President of the United States, as follows: The Cherokees, parties of the first part. for and in consideration of certain payments, and the fulfillment of certain conditions hereinafter mentioned, agree to sell to the Delawares, for their occupancy, a quantity of land east of the line of the ninety-sixth degree of west longitude, in the aggregate equal to 160 acres for each individual of the Delaware tribe who has been enrolled upon a certain register made February 18, 1867, by the Delaware agent, and on file in the office of Indian Affairs, being the list of Delawares who elect to remove to the "Indian Country," to which list may be added, only with the consent of the Delaware council, the names of such other Delawares as may, within one month after the signing of this agreement, desire to be added thereto, and the selections of the lands to be purchased by the Delawares may be made by said Delawares in any part of the Cherokee reservation east of said line of ninety-sixth degree, not already selected and in possession of other parties; and in case the Cherokee lands shall hereafter be allotted among the members of said nation, it is agreed that the aggregate amount of land herein provided for the Delawares, to include their improvements according to the legal subdivisions when surveys are made-that is to say, 160 acres for each individual-shall be guaranteed to each Delaware incorporated by these article as into the Cherokee Nation, nor shall the continued ownership and occupancy of said land by any Delaware so registered be interfered with in any manner whatever, without its consent, but shall be subject to the same conditions and restrictions as are the laws of the Cherokee Nation imposed upon native citizens thereof.

Provided that nothing herein shall confer the right to alienate. convey, or dispose of any such lands, except in accordance with the constitution and laws of said Cherokee Nation,
And the said Delawares, parties of the second part, agree that there shall be paid to the said Cherokees, from the Delaware funds now held or hereafter received by the United States, a sum of money equal to $1 per acre for the whole amount of 160 acres of land for every individual Delaware who has already been registered upon the aforesaid list, made February 18, 1867, with the additions thereto heretobefore provided for.
And the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and requested to sell any United States stocks belonging to the Delawares to procure funds necessary to pay for said lands; but in case he shall not feel authorized, under existing treaties, to sell such bonds belonging to the Delawares, it is agreed that he may transfer such United States bonds to the Cherokee Nation at their market value, at the date of such transfer.
And the said Delawares further agree that there shall be paid from their funds now or hereafter to come into possession of the United States, a sum of money which shall sustain the same proportion to the existing Cherokee national fund that the number of Delawares registered as above mentioned and removing to the Indian country sustains to the whole number of Cherokees residing in the Cherokee Nation. And for the purpose of ascertaining such relative numbers, the registers of the Delawares herein referred to, with such additions as may be made within one month from the signing of this agreement, shall be the basis of calculation as to the Delawares, and an accurate census of the Cherokees residing in the Cherokee Nation shall be taken under the laws of that nation within four months, and properly certified copies thereof filed in the office of Indian Affairs, which shall be the basis of calculation as to the Cherokees
And that there may be no doubt as to the amount to be contributed to the Cherokee national fund by the Delawares, it is hereby agreed by the parties hereto that the whole amount of the invested funds of the Cherokees, after deducting all just claims thereon, is $678,000.

And the Delawares further agree, that in calculating the total amount of said national fund there shall be added to the said sum of $678,000 the sum of $1,000,000 being the estimated value of the Cherokee neutral lands in Kansas, thus making the whole Cherokee national fund 1,678,000; and this last-mentioned sum shall be taken as the basis for calculating the amount which the by the Delawares are to pay into the common fund. Provided, that as the 678,000 of funds now on land belonging to the Cherokees is chiefly composed of stocks of different values, the Secretary of the Interior may transfer from the Delawares to the Cherokees a proportion of the stocks now owned by the Delawares of like grade and value, which transfer shall be in part of the pro rata contribution herein provided for by the Delawares to said fund shall be in cash or United States bonds at their market value. Delawares to the funds of the Cherokee Nation; but the balance of the pro rata contribution by the [text missing]

All cash and all proceeds of stocks, whenever the same may fall due or be sold, received by the Cherokee from the Delawares under the agreement, shall be invested and applied in accordance with the twenty-third article of the treaty with the Cherokees of August 11, 1866.

On the fulfillment by the Delawares of the foregoing stipulations, all members of the tribe registered, as above provided, shall become members of the Cherokee Nation with the same rights and immunities, and the same participation (and no other) in the national finds, as native Cherokees save as hereinbefore provided.
And the children hereafter born of such Delawares so incorporated into the Cherokee Nation shall in all respects be regarded as native Cherokees.

WHITE EYES Lenape name Wicocalind. Data to be added. This is a difficult entry. I am working on the entering of the following information submitted by Dewey Fry, Kansas Delaware Crossing, Sons of the American Revolution. Editor

White Eyes - English name Allime, a Signer of the 21 August 1805 Treaty with the United States at Grouseland, near Vincennes, Indiana Territory as a Sachem, Chief, or Warrior of the Delaware Tribe. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 81)

White Eyes - Lenape name Apacahund, a Signer of the 3 October 1818 Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as a Chief or Warrior of the Delaware Nation. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 171.)

White Eyes, Captain - Probably the English name for Alimee, a A Signer of the 1778 Treaty with the United States in Pennsylvania as a Chief Man of the Delaware Nation. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 5)

White Eyes, Captain - Lenape name Wicocalind, fought in the Revolutionary War and was cited in the 21 January 1785 Treaty with the United States at Fort McIntosh as one "who took up the hatchet for the United States," and was a signer of that treaty as a Sachem or Warrior of the Delaware Nation. (Kappler. Treaties, Vol. II, p. 8)

White Eyes, Captain - A Signer of the 22 July 1814 Treaty with the United States at Greenville, Ohio as a Head Man, Chief, or Warrior of the Delaware Tribe. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 106)

White Eyes, Chief--He was murdered by Americans in 1778. (Cranor, Kik-Tha-Whe-Nund, p. 3)

The National Archives has material on the Revolutionary War career of George M. White Eyes. I found in a old history of Beaver County Pennsylvania where is stated George White Eyes was the name of Capt. White Eyes son. I also found a George M. White Eyes in the Journal of the Continental Congress; which I list later.

We have a book at a local genealogy library written by John Gottlieb Ernestus Heckewelder about history, manners and customs of the Indian Nation from 1743-1823. It was first published in 1819, revised and reprinted in 1876 and reprinted without revision in 1971. In it he writes of personal experiences with White Eyes who he refers to as Koquethagochaton. I will go to the library sometime in the near future and copy the applicable pages.

The book titled History of Beaver County Pennsylvania and Its Centennial Celebration by Rev. Joseph H. Bausman, A. M. was published in 1904. It has a few pages which are about White Eyes.

The Journals of the Continental Congress are in the Library of Congress and on the internet. I sent you a link, if you did not get it then click on the following http://memory.loc.gov/ammem/amlaw/lwjclink.html

When you see the various Volumes listed the click on the following Volumes one at a time. After you click on a Volume another window will come up, clike on Page Image, the title page will come up, you will want to print the title page from each Volume and the following pages:

Vol. III, Pages 432, 433 & 434
Vol. IV, Pages 208, 243,266 thru 269
Vol. IX, Pages 824 & 825
Vol. XI, Pages 536, 537, 585 thru 588
Vol. XXV, Pages 659 thru 661

In the BGMI (Biography & Genealogy Master Index) it states that George Morgan White Eyes was born about 1770 and lived to 1798. According to the records of the Continental Congress a George M. White Eyes came before them in October 1783 at the age of about 12. Capt. White Eyes died in 1780, this George could have been his son. George was living with a Colonel Morgan, the Continental Congress granted that the relationship could continue for one more year.

Per the Indian Affairs; Laws and Treaties, Vol. II, Alimee (George White Eyes) signed a the Treaty with the Piankeshaw on 27 Aug. 1804 with his x mark. It is unlikely that this George White Eyes and George M. White Eyes are one in the same. In 1783 George M.

White Eyes was reading Caesars commentaries, surely he could also write.

In the Letter Press Edition of The Papers of George Washington in Volume 2, Page 435, George Washington writes of White Eyes and George Morgan White Eyes.

Wilcoxen, Melinda - See TAHLEOCKWE. She was also known as Melinda Statler and Tweleniquid. For information on her husband, Rezin Wilcoxen in the entry just below.

WILCOXEN, Rezin - Although not a Native American, he was important in the development of Leavenworth and Wyandotte Counties in present Kansas, and was married to a Munsee, Sabilla Caleb (see CALEB, Sabilla) , and a Delaware, Tahleockwe (see TAHLEOCKWE), also known as Melinda Statler. He was from Virginia, the son of Scots-Irish Levi Wilcoxen and Catherine (Harris) Wilcoxen, of West Virginia, and the grandson of Thomas Wilcoxen. Rezin was the only son of six children. In 1843, Levi , accompanied by "his whole family, some accompanied by their husbands," went to Arkansas, where they settled near Jackson. He died there in 1844. In 1844, the entire family left Arkansas and went to Kansas City [Missouri probably] for a few days, then went to Westport, where his mother and a sister died in 1849. In 1852, most of the remaining family, except for Rezin, went to California. Rezin went to present Wyandotte County, Kansas, 8 January 1850, where he clerked in the dry goods department of the American Fur Company. He boarded with James Findlay. They were together in the store for six years. The American Fur Company was at Secondia, located about nine miles above the mouth if the Kansas River, in the Delaware Reservation. When he married Melinda Statler or Taleockwe, also known as Tweleniquid, in 1854, he earned the right to live with the Delaware on their reservation. Accordingly, he began farming there in the spring of 1856, growing crops such as wheat, corn, potatoes, oats, and millet, usually raising them for his own home consumption, but he also sold hogs to the Delaware. He remained on his farm until 1867 when he bought the farm of James Ketchum at White Church. In 1888, he sold some of the acreage, keeping a small portion for his home site. He was a Justice of the Peace for seven year, a school director for sixteen years, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was generally a Democrat politically. Rezin was a private in the Twenty-third Kansas State Militia in the Civil War. He was said to have been an old-time farmer of Quindaro Township. (Wyandotte County and Kansas City, Kansas. Historical and Biographical)

The Wyandot Herald, 16 January 1890, said: Rezin Wilcoxen, of White Church, is lying very sick with pneumonia at his home in that place with small hope of recovery, so we are informed.
(Researchers: Vickie Wilkins and Martin Weeks)

There is another account of Rezin Wilcoxon in Cutler's History of Kansas Genealogical and Historical, pp. 876-877:

R. Wilcoxon, of White Church, Kas., and an old time farmer of Quindaro Township, came to Wyandotte County, Kas., January 8, 1850, and clerked in the dry goods department of the American Fur Company at a place called Secondia, located about nine miles above the mouth of the Kansas River, in the Delaware Reservation. He carried on this business until 1856, and found the Delaware Indians honest, upright, truthful, but with very little notion of business. Their living was entirely derived from the chase, and they bartered the furs for the necessities of life. Hunting and trapping parties would leave early in the fall and return the following spring, bringing with them pelts and furs with which to pay their debts. In 1854 Mr. Wilcoxen was united in marriage to Miss Malinda Statler, whose Indian name was Twelenioqud. She was educated at the Shawnee Mission. This union gave Mr. Wilcoxen the right to live here with them, so in the spring of 1856 he began farming, opening up land within a mile of where he had been selling goods. His principal crops were wheat, corn, potatoes, oats, millet, etc., usually raising for home consumption although there was a good market for hogs, selling them to the Delawares. Being of a pacific nature from staying at home and attending strictly to his own business, he was never a participant in the bloody times of the border war.. He resided quietly on his farm, attended to [p. 877] this alo0ne, opened up new land and made improvements as rapidly as possible. In 1861 the land was surveyed and parceled, and through his wife and children he received 240 acres, one 80 in the hills, and 160 acres on the Kansas River. that on the river being the part that he had already improved and cultivated. He remained there until 1867, when he bought the James Ketchum farm at White Church, having sold eighty acres on the river. moved on this, and soon had thirty acres under cultivation. In 1888 he sold seventy-two acres of this, and kept eight acres for a home. He has a beautiful place, a fine house of modern architecture with eight rooms, and the principal part of the grounds in orchard. For the past seven years Mr. Wilcoxen has been justice of the peace, and has filled the position of school director for sixteen years. He and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Politically Mr. Wilcoxen has always been Democratic until the Greenback party was formed, after which he voted for their candidates for several elections. At present he is with the Democratic party again. He was a private in the Twenty-third Kansas State Militia during the war, but has the record of never shooting at a man. He was born in West Virginia March 18, 1828, and was the son of Levi and Catherine (Harris) Wilcoxon, both natives also of West Virginia. The Wilcoxons are of Scotch-Irish extraction, and one of the ancestors lived to be one hundred and fourteen years of age. The paternal grandfather of our subject, Thomas Wilcoxon, died before the struggle of independence took place. Our subject is the only son of six children born to his parents. In 1843 his father accompanied by his whole family, three of his daughters being married and accompanied by their husbands, went to Arkansas, settled near Jackson, and here his death occurred in February of the following year. In March, 1844, the entire family left there and came to Kansas City, where they remained a few days. They then went to Westport, where one sister and the mother died in 1849. In the meantime R. Wilcoxon worked by the day or month and seized on any honorable employment that was offered. One of the brothers-in-law died in 1852 and the same year the remainder of the family, with the exception of our subject, went to California, where they have since died. At the present time, Mr. Wilcoxon is the sole survivor of the family. After entering thee employ of the American Fur Company Mr. Wilcoxon boarded with James Findlay, whose wife was a sister of Judge John Ryland, of La Fayette County, Mo. They were together in the store for six years, and then both left the same year. Mr. Wilcoxon [p. 878] is the father of four children--two sons and two daughters--two sons and one daughter now living: Lucinda (wife of James L. Buckland, who is residing in Wyandotte Township, engaged in farming), Emmet (living with his father), and Oscar (also at home). Leonora was born February 23, 1868, and died December 22, 1884... In 1849-50 the cholera raged in this State, and was so fatal that the Delaware Indians hired Dr. J. B. Stone to come out here. In 1849 1,000 Delaware Indians lived within eight miles of White Church, but when that great scourge occurred they scattered to different parts of the reservation and never got together again.

WINDSETTUND --The English name of Windsettund was William Henry Anderson. He died about 1876 shortly after the Delaware moved to Indian Territory. He was the youngest son of Pooshies who was one of the older sons of Chief William Anderson (whom see under Kikthawhenund) according to family descendants. He was married to Windaalayqua or Annie Anderson and they had a large family. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson lost three children presumably while on the way to Indian Territory. He was survived by his wife, Anna, four sons; James Anderson, John Anderson, Sam Anderson, and George T. Anderson. It is believed that he is buried in the Delaware Cemetery, one of the earliest ones to be buried there. (This information is from Ruby Cranor's, Some Old Delaware Obituaries. See Bibliography for ordering information.)

ZEIGLER, Ellen--Ellen Zeigler was born March 1840, died 28 July 1911, and died December 1869. She married Sam S. Swisher born 1829 and died December 1869. Paul Pettit is working on the Swisher Family. He says he thinks that Henry Swisher was Sam's father and the child of his first wife, Agnes. Henry's second wife was named Ruth. Write to Paul cpettit@telis.net of you have further information on the Swisher Family.
The children of Ellen Zeigler and Sam Swisher were:

1. Mary F. Swisher born 19 October 1943, died 31 September 1943, married Jonathan Mathews born 15 December 1857, died 11 February 1928, thirteen children, four of whom died in infancy:
   (1) Clarence A. Mathews
   (2) Clara Elizabeth Mathews
   (3) Albert N. Mathews

Dawes Final Rolls Results: Total Records: 17 Dawes is a list of those members of the Five Civilized Tribes who removed to Indian Territory (Oklahoma) during the 1800's and were living there during the above dates. IF YOUR ANCESTOR WAS NOT LIVING IN INDIAN TERRITORY DURING 1898-1914 THEY WILL NOT BE LISTED ON DAWES!! Only those Indians who RECEIVED LAND under the provisions of the Dawes Act are listed. It also lists those Freedmen who received land allotments as provided for in the Dawes Act. These pages can be searched to discover the enrollee's name, age, sex, blood degree, type, census card number and roll number. Check the headings in each column. Type denotes whether the record is from a Dawes card. Ft. Smith Arkansas Criminal Records 1866-1900

This section contains entries on books and articles of interest to Lenape-Delaware History readers and researchers.

An example: Weslager, C. A. The Delaware Indians: A History. New Brunswick, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 1972. (Weslager: "When white settlers overran Indiana, the United States government moved the Delawares across the Mississippi to new homes in Missouri Territory. Eight years later the government moved them from Missouri to Kansas Territory, and in 1867 the Delawares [except for the Kansas Delaware] finally migrated to Indian Territory, now Oklahoma. Weslager discusses these movements in The Delaware Indians: A History and amplifies the details in The Delaware Westward Migration")

Life is no "brief candle" to me. It is a sort of splendid torch which I have hold of for a moment, and I want to make it burn as brightly as possible before passing it on to future generations. G. B. Shaw

I like this little story. It reminds me that sometimes we take ourselves too seriously: The Indians asked their Chief in autumn if the winter was going to be cold or not. Not really knowing an answer, the chief replies the winter was going to be cold, and the members of the village were to collect wood to be prepared for a cold winter. Being a good leader, he then went to the next phone booth and called the National Weather Service and asked, "Is this winter to be cold?" The man on the phone responded, "This winter was going to be quite cold indeed." So the Chief went back to speed up his people to collect even more wood to be prepared. A week later he called the National Weather Service again, "Is it going to be a very cold winter?" "Yes", the man replied, "it's going to be a very cold winter." So the Chief goes back to his people and orders them to go and find every scrap of wood they can find. Two weeks later he calls the National Weather Service again "Are you absolutely sure the winter is going to be very cold?" "Absolutely, we made a study " the weather man replies, "the Indians are collecting wood like crazy" page, this is not the official site of the Delaware tribe of Indians (Eastern Delaware Tribe). The mission of the site: "This information has been brought to the web for Delaware Tribal Members. This is a medium where everyone may chat about whatever we like. We can discuss powwows, language, meetings, policies, etc. On a more serious note, many of you have problems that you have been unable to resolve. This site may not help to solve all the problems of the Tribe however, it is meant to give the tribal members a place to chat. Sometimes we all need someone to talk to. I'm certain that there are people that are involved with the Tribe, that have felt frustrated, intimidated and hopeless. The people that can help may not necessarily even see what we discuss here. Then again, maybe they will. So let's try to keep this civil. Remember, we are Native Americans, not savages."

As a people, Western Abenakis trace their roots to the Lenni Lenape and share most of the traditions, stories, ceremonies and language of our Algonkian relations. Since the early 1600s, many of our people have intermarried with our Iroquoian neighbors and we maintain a strong connection to them. In the early 18002, several of our bands, along with the Munsee Delawares. moved near the Six Nations in Canada where our people practiced the Big House Ceremony and shared ceremony with the Cayuga. The five primary clans of our people are Turtle, Bear, Beaver, Dove, and Otter. Before European contact, our people numbered close to 70,000."

BIOGRAPHICAL INDEX

Because I am reorganizing some of the entries into easier-to-find, more-logical destinations, some of these links may not work for a few days. They will be corrected soon. The presence of someone in this listing does not mean that they are more or less important than anyone else. It only means that we have more data on them than would be suitable for the "Personality" page or that they are entered in a Family History Category. Editor

BIOGRAPHIES

Bio A-G

If a person has a Lenape name, the biography is generally under that name. In any event, it is cross-referenced with the English name. We have not yet fully decided on whether to use the Lenape name of the English name as the primary name for reference. Our preference is for the Lenape name, but that is not always known by the person seeking information.

ADAMS, William H. - The Lenape name for William H. Adams is not known, but the English translation was Shooting Star. His later Lenape name was Walehohpseek. William Adams (Delaware Register #971) was born 13 or 15 September 1835 on the Verdigris River, north of the Clamore Mound, in Oklahoma. He died 29 August 1902 and was buried at Chelsea, Nowata County, Oklahoma. William recorded under oath to the Department of Interior that he was the son of Nancy Conner and Musetutsese. Nancy was the daughter of Indiana pioneer William Conner, a white man), and Mekinges, also recorded as Elizabeth Ketchum, a Delaware of the Turtle Clan. Mekinges left Indiana with the was Delaware Tribe some time in the 1820s, eventually to Missouri and finally to Kansas. Her death is unknown, but according to Karen Lynn, she may have survived as late as 1871. Nancy (Conner) Adams died in 1833 or 1834 in Kansas. Musetutsese was a Delaware from Missouri whose father was Paymarhting.

Family records say that Adam's first name was Shooting Star (Lenape name not known), because his father saw a meteor shower while on a hunting trip shortly before he was born. His teachers at the Shawnee Methodist Mission School changed his name to William Adams when he was a student there between January 1841 until January 1847. (Roger Berg, Jr., compiler, Listing of Students Enrolled in the Shawnee Methodist Mission). Adams family records indicate that the Adams' name began there. That is, the family had no connection to the presidential Adams. William Adams is on the Kansas Roll of Delaware who chose to remain in Kansas in 1867 with Allotment #77, but he later changed his mind and moved to Indian Territory (Oklahoma).

William Adams was enrolled as an adopted Delaware of the Cherokee Nation in compliance with the agreement made between the Cherokee and Delaware on 8 April 1867. All of his children were on the Cherokee Roll by 1896. William was a skilled carpenter. He built his own home in Nowata, Oklahoma and a number of other houses, including the home of Charles Journeycake and in 1877 the Bullettes' house in Claremore, Oklahoma. He also made the pews for the Delaware Baptist Church in Wingannon at which church he was later the pastor, replacing the ailing Reverend Charles Journeycake. William had earlier joined the Delaware Baptist Church on 12 June 1853 in Kansas, was licensed to preach the gospel on 1 February 186, and was ordained to the full work of the gospel on 14 March 1868. At one point he was a circuit rider preacher; his circuit Bible still exists. Many Delaware Council meetings were held at his home in Alluwe, Cooweescoowee District of Oklahoma in the late 1800s.

William H. Adams was married first to Kate Woodfield (1840-1870) on 6 September 1863 at the Delaware Baptist Mission Chapel in Wyandotte, County, Kansas by Reverend J. C. Pratt. She was a white woman and a teacher who is believed to have started the first school in Russell Creek, Indian Territory, south of Chetopa, Kansas. Kate was born in Indiana, died 24 October 1870, and was buried in the Russell Creek Cemetery, Welch, Oklahoma. Their children are:

1. Richard Calmit Adams (Dawes 54D, CS 52D) born 23 August 1864 at White Church Village, northeast of Piper, Kansas, died 4 October 1921, and was buried at Washington, D.C.
2. Horace M. Adams (Dawes 55D, CS 53D) was born 22 March 1866 at White Church Village [Kansas City], Kansas, died 2 February 1949 in Las Cruces, New Mexico, and was buried in El Paso, Texas next to his younger brother Judson Adams He was married to Maud Branswell.

   Horace Adams worked as an oil producer and prospector in Chelsea, Oklahoma. He and his half-brother, Nathan Adams, bought a ranch in El Paso, Texas and lived and worked there from 1908 to 1911. Horace was responsible for doing much of the research work used by his brother Richard C. Adams in the books the latter wrote about the Delaware Tribe.
3. Rosa E. Adams was born 23 November 1868 and died 4 October 1869.

William Adams married second on 17 August 1873, Louise Zulkey of Douglas County, Kansas. They were married at the home of John Sarcoxie by Reverend Charles Journeycake, pastor of the Delaware Baptist Church. Louise was born 6 September 1857 at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, the child of Charles and Christina _____ Adams. She died 25 June 1937. The family story is that after Louisa [Louise] Zulkey and her brother Mark Zulkey were orphaned as children when their parents were killed in a wagon accident, they were taken in by John Sarcoxie. They learned to speak Delaware fluently in his home. Several pieces of beadwork done by Louisa survive. The children of William and Louisa Zulkey Adams (family census card #10639, Dawes enrollment #31559) are all on the 1896 Cherokee Roll. They are:

4. Nathan Francis Adams was born 6 December 1874 at Alluwe, Cooweescoowee District. Cherokee Nation, I. T., died 17 September 1960, and was buried at Gum Springs Cemetery, Longview, Texas. He served a a U.S. Marshal in Oklahoma before it became a state. He later moved to El Paso where he and his brother Horace in 1908 purchased the Crosby ranch in Cayanosa, Pecos County and ran it for several years. Obituary: Kansas City Star, Aug. 30, 1902. "Aged Indian Preacher Dies - The Rev. Mr. Adams of the Indian Territory Dead Here." The Rev. William Adams, a Baptist minister at Alluwee, I. T., died early this morning at St. Joseph's hospital of kidney disease. The Rev. Mr. Adams was of Indian blood, his father having married into the Delaware Tribe of Indians. He was a Baptist minister, and was pastor of a church of Indians located in the Cherokee country. With his two sons he had been spending his vacation in Minnesota, where he was suddenly stricken, while at St. Paul. An operation was performed, and he was brought to Kansas City last night and taken to St. Joseph's hospital, where he died this morning. The Rev. Mr. Adams leaves a widow and three sons. two of who accompanied him on his trip. His son, H. M. Adams, an attorney at Washington, D.C., for the Delaware Indians, arrived last night and was with his father when death came. The body was sent to Chelsea, I. T., today for burial. The Rev. Mr. Adams was 72 years old. (He actually had three sons living at this date. Richard was the attorney in Washington, D.C.) (Researcher: Karen Lynn. William H. Adams is her great-great-grandfather. Data has also been provided by Russell Sears, a great-grandson of William H. Adams. russell.sears@gcmail.maricopa.edu

* Ruby Cranor in "Kik Tha We Nund" the Delaware Chief Anderson, p. 124, states, "William Adams the second son of John Quincy Adams and Nancy Conner Adams was born in 1852. He was given the name of Walleoakse." Researcher Karen Lynn says that family records show no relationship to the earlier Adam's family. Lynn also notes that she [Ruby Cranor] has recorded the largest collection of information about the Adam's pedigrees. See the Bibliography for the details of Ruby Cranor's her book. In her book, Some Old Delaware Cemeteries, p13, Ruby Cranor includes this item concerning him:

> William A. Adams (Wa Le Oak Se), a half-breed Delaware was born in the early 1830's on the Delaware Reservation in Kansas. He was married twice and had 11 children. He was a lawyer and did a lot for the Delaware tribe. He lived in Washington D.C. where his younger children were born. We do not have any record of his death except from the family bible. This bible now belongs to Josephine Adams of Nowata. It says Mr. Adams died on the 29th of August 1902.

Researcher Karen Lynn notes: Most of the information I am sharing I obtained from family records by Nathan Francis Adams, an older brother of my great grandfather, Hiram V. Adams. I am unable at this time to find out if his [William Adam's] grandmother, Mekinges, was involved in his upbringing or whether his uncles, Chief John Conner or James Conner, were involved with his upbringing during his childhood.

William Adams is in a photograph of a group of Delaware who went from Kansas to Indian Territory.

Researcher: Karen Lynn said in December 2000, "Most of the information I am sharing I obtained from family records kept by Nathan Francis Adams, an older brother of my great grandfather, Hiram V. Adams . . . I believe [William Adams] to have been an honorable man who was very active in the Delaware Tribe during his life. Ruby Cranor in Kik Tha We Nund: The Delaware Chief William Anderson and His Descendants, described him as a man that embraced the white man's way. I describe him as a man that lost his mother when he was one or two years old living in questionable circumstances in Kansas during a time when the Delaware Indians were pressured (once again) to move on....I do not know when his father died or the circumstances of his father's life....As I understand these time historically and culturally, Indian children were not allowed to use their true native names nor were they allowed to wear their native clothing. I believe that William Adams was partially influenced by times and circumstances that did not encourage or really allow Indians to exist as individual people."

ADAMS, Richard Calmit--Richard Calmit Adams (Dawes 54D, CS 52D) born 2 August 1864 in White Church Village, northeast of Piper, Kansas, died 4 October 1921, and was buried at Washington, D.C. He married Carrie F. Meggs. Richard was a minister and served as a Representative of the Delaware in Washington until the time of his death. Richard was an activist for the Delaware Tribe, often without financial reimbursement. He was a great orator and historian and authored several books, including A Brief History of the Delaware Indians. Richard Calmit Adams was an activist for the Delaware. He worked passionately in defense of the tribe, often without financial reimbursement in pursuit of legal matters in Washington, D.C. Richard Adams, John Bullette, William Adams, and possibly Horace Adams owned a coal mine near Chelsea, Oklahoma.

Obituary. From a local newspaper of Longview, Texas, where Richard's younger brother, Nathan P. Adams, lived: Hon. Richard C. Adams. N. F. Adams, chief special officer for the Texas & Pacific Railway in the Marshall shops received news this morning of the death of his brother, Hon. Richard C. Adams in Washington, D.C., on the night of October 4, 1921. Richard C. Adams was one of the well known representatives of the Indians in Washington and went to Washington many years ago before Oklahoma was a state, where he became the representative of the Delaware Indians. It was due to his efforts that the Delaware Indians received their equal rights with the Cherokee Indians which was won in a suit in land and money. Mr. Adams spent the last 24 years of his life at the national capitol, in the New Ebbitt house, fighting for the rights of the Delaware Indians. The deceased is survived by his wife and several children and his brother N. F. Adams, here and a sister in Nowata, Okla. (There were also his mother, Louisa Adams, three other brothers and another sister at the time of his death. There is also a poem entitled "A Tribesman's Departure" that is not included herein.) A photograph of Richard Adams with a group of Delaware who went from Kansas to Indian Territory can be found at the bottom of the Home Page.

ANDERSON, Arthur--"The funeral of Arthur Anderson, aged Delaware pioneer of Washington county [Oklahoma], was held yesterday afternoon at the Baptist church. Rev. J. B. Rounds of Oklahoma City conducted the service. Members of the Delaware Indian Tribe had charge of the services and an Indian funeral ceremony was preached. Tribal songs were sung and members of the G. A. R. attended the services. Mr. Armstrong was a charter member of the local post and saw service during the Civil War with a Kansas regiment of infantry. Burial was in the mausoleum of the White Rose Cemetery. Arthur Armstrong figured in the history of the making of Bartlesville. He was born in 1848 on the Wyandotte Kansas reservation and was of French and Delaware blood. He came to Indian Territory with the Delawares when moved here by the government. He served with the 6th Kansas Calvary during the Civil War and made three trips to Ft. Douglas, Utah with supplies by ox team. His allotment of 160 acres was in the northeast section of what is now Bartlesville and his old home at the end of North Seneca Avenue still stands. Mr. Armstrong was a devoted Baptist and a great admirer of Chief Journeycake and he erected the first building in Bartlesville to be used as a church and school. Supplies for this building were hauled from Baxter Springs, Kansas. He was married three times. His first wife was Nancy Ketchum, mother of Henry Armstrong. She was a daughter of Chief John Ketchum and was a full blood Delaware. His second wife was a daughter of Col. Jackson, a Delaware, and his third wife, Maggie Davis, who survives, was a white woman. His son, Henry Armstrong and five grandchildren survive also. BLACK BEAVER -  (From www.chickasawhistory.com)

> Black Beaver. A Delaware guide, born at the present site of Belleville, Ill., in 1806; died at Anadarko, Oklahoma, May 8, 1880. He was present as interpreter at the earliest conference with the Co-manche, Kiowa, and Wichita tribes, held by Col. Richard Dodge on upper Red River in 1834, and from then until the close of his days his services were constantly required by the Government and were invaluable to military and scientific explorers of the plains and the Rocky Mountains. In nearly every one of the early transcontinental ex-peditions he was the most intelligent and most trusted guide and scout. (Ancestry.com)

The following is an article on Black Beaver from The Anadarko Daily News of 5 and 6 August 2000 entitled, "Black Beaver Set a Good Example."

> The Delaware Indians have always claimed to be the grandfathers of all other red men, and they are proud of the fact that they signed first treaty with William Penn. There is another fact that qualifies them in feeling superior, and that is that Black Beaver was a member of their tribe. This Indian who served the United States so faithfully helped to bring fame to several army officers and explorers who were fortunate to have him for a guide. He set a good example to his own people by the manner in which he conducted his affairs and the home he maintained. [As though other Delaware did not?! Editor].

It is probable that some members of the Delaware tribe were on their way west to make their home when Black Beaver was born at the present site of Belleville, Illinois in 1806.

When the Delawares were being removed and located on [the] White River in Arkansas they were left in a desperate state because white people stole almost all of their horses. In February, 1824, William Anderson, the head chief, Black Beaver, Natacoming and other Delawares sent a touching letter to General William Clark regarding their conditions.

Last summer a number of our people died for just for the want of something to live on ... We have got in a country where we do not find all as stated to us when we was asked to swap lands with you ... Father ... You know it is hard to go hungry, if you do not know it we poor Indians know it ... We are obliged to call on you once more for assistance in the name of God. ...

When Black Beaver was twenty-eight years of age he acted as interpreter he acted as interpreter for Colonel Richard Irvings Dodge at his conference with the Comanche, Kiowa and Wichita in 1834 on [the] upper Red River. Dodge wrote of him and his people: Of all the Indians, the Delawares seem to be the most addicted to these solitary wanderings, undertaken, in their case at least, from pure curiosity and love of adventure. Black Beaver, the friend and guide of General (then Captain) Marcy, was almost equally renowned for his wonderful journeys." Dodge was comparing Black Beaver with "John Conner head chief of the Delawares who was justly renowned as having a more minute and extensive personal knowledge of the North American continent than any had or probably will have."

In the celebrated Dragoon expedition of 1834, commanded by General Henry Leavenworth, there were thirty-two Indians, including six Delawares, among whom was Black Beaver, and from that time he was in almost constant demand as a guide and interpreter. In 1846, during the war with Mexico, a company of Delaware and thirty-five Shawnee Indians under Captain Black Beaver were mustered into the service on June 1, and discharged in August, although their time did not expire until December.

California, he was ordered to select the best route from the Arkansas town to Santa Fe and California. At Shawneetown where the road forked, the left being his trail, he engaged Black Beaver as guide and interpreter, and he proved to be a most useful man

He has traveled a great deal among the western and northern tribes of Indians, is well acquainted with their character and habits, and converses fluently with the Comanche and most of the other prairie tribes. He has spent five years in Oregon and California, two years among the Crow and Black Feet Indians. He has trapped beaver in the Gila, the Columbia, the Rio Grande, and the Pecos. He has crossed the Rocky Mountains at many different points and indeed is one of those men who are seldom met with except in the mountains

Captain Marcy became a noted pathfinder in the Southwest and much of his success was due to Black Beaver, upon whom he relied. Jesse Chisholm, Black Beaver, and other guides had been to California at at early date and they were regard with respect and their advice adopted regarding routes to the far West.

The grace and rapidity with which Black Beaver carried on conversations with Indians of other tribes astonished Marcy. This was done by pantomime and the Captain wrote that their facile postures would compare with the most accomplished performances of opera stars.

On the return trip Black Beaver was confident that he could lead the party from [the] Brazos River to Fort Smith, so the force took a course directly across the country, "making a most excellent road, which was traveled for several years afterward by California emigrants."

In 1852 Lt. A. W. Whipple had been informed that Black Beaver (Si-ki-to-ker) never forgot a place that he had seen even if many years had passed and if their horses strayed the Delawares could always find them

When the expedition arrived at Fort Arbuckle some of the men visited the log house of Black Beaver, where "under a single corridor, on a rough wooden settle, an Indian sat cross-legged smoking his pipe, and awaiting his visitors in perfect tranquility. He was a meager-looking man of middle size, and his long black hair framed in a face that was clever, but which bore a melancholy expression of sickness and sorrow, though more than forty winters could have passed over it.

The arrival of visitors did not seem at all to disturb him, and his easy and unembarrassed manner showed that he was quite accustomed to speaking with whites. He spoke fluent English, French and Spanish and about eight Indian languages. A tempting offer was made to Black Beaver and immediately his eyes sparkled with their old fire, but he sadly replied:

Several times I have seen the Pacific Ocean at various points and have accompanied the Americans in three wars and I have brought home more scalps from my hunting expeditions than one of you could lif. I should like to see the salt water for the eighth time; But I am sick--you offer me more money than has ever been offered before--but I am sick...but if I die I should like to be buried by my own people."

No inducement could make him change his mind and the explorers decided that the idea that he might die on the way suggested to him by his wife who objected to his going. For three days the white men attempted to get Black Beaver away from the determination of the woman but at night she was able to counteract their influence, and all they got was advice from the canny guide.

From the Brazos Agency, Texas, on August 31, 1855, Special Agent G. W. Hill reported to R.S. Neighbors, special and supervising agent. that in obedience to his instructions in March, 1855, he had settled on the reservation seven hundred and ninety-two Indians. He also wrote that recent runners from the north of [the[Red River reported that [the] Wichita chief informed him that through Black Beaver, guide and interpreter, at Fort Arbuckle, that arrangements were making to settle about two hundred Indians of four tribes there with the Wichitas.

The Delaware and Caddo Indians lived with the Wichitas at the time when they were permitted to select land in the Leased District for a new home on the north side of the Washita on Sugar Tree Creek. Matthew Leper, the new agent, made his first report September 26, 1860, and the description of the new home of Black Beaver shows the Indian to have been far in advance of his neighbors.

The best improvement found on the preserve is a private enterprise of Black Beaver, a Delaware Indian located here. He has a pretty good double log house, which two shed rooms in [the] rear, a porch in front and two fireplaces, and a field of forty-one and a half acres enclosed with good stake-and-rider fence, thirty-six and a half of which have been cultivated

When the Medicine Lodge Peace Council was held in the autumn of 1867, many prominent army officer4s, Indian agents, newspaper correspondents, and Indians were present. This council was called in an attempt to settle a war which had gone on for three years and was brought on by the Chivington massacre in Colorado. Black Beaver, then sixty-one years old, was present among many other noted Indians.

Colonel William B. Hazen of the agency had two hundred acres plowed in the Washita valley for thirty Delaware Indians belonging to his agency, and Agent Tatum had the tract fenced. Black Beaver was the only member of his tribe who settled near the field, and as other Indians preferred to farm near the timber he wished to cultivate he whole tract, but Tatum thought it would be too much for him and he engaged a white man to farm forty acres on shares with the government. When he inspected the field in the he found that the white tenant had raised as many weeds on his part as Black Beaver had on the one hundred sixty acres he farmed. Tatum agreed to allow the Delaware to farm the whole acreage the following year. "He was a successful farmer, respected by all the Indians who knew him, and his influence with them was always good. He was a Christian, and tried to do what was right in the sight of God and towards his fellow-men."

Black Beaver built the first house at Anadarko; it was near the Washita and a short distance west of the Indian agency. When Pat Bruner went to Anadarko in 1871, he married Beaver's daughter, Mrs. Osborne, after her husband's tragic death. Jesse Sturm, a son of J. J. Sturm, married Mrs. Osborn's daughter Marie. In October, 1872, Captain Henry E. Alvord, special Indian commissioner, took a part of Plains Indians to Washington and New York. The delegation comprised Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Arapaho, Caddo, Wichita, Waco, Kichai, Tawacearo, and Delaware; the latter tribe was represented by Black Beaver.

According to the New York Herald, October 31, 1872, "The red men [were] on a tour to learn Fraternity and Christian Virtues." *T*hey lodged at the Grand Grand Central Hotel and Black Beaver was introduced as a former guide to Audubon.

In 1872, when Black Beaver was sixty-four years of age and too feeble to work for his living, he filed a claim with the government for the value of his property on the Washita river abandoned in the spring of 1861 and subsequently destroyed by the Confederacy. Payment had been promised him by Major Emory, Captain Delos B. Sacket and Lieutenant D. E. Stanley. The committee on Indian Affairs recommended only $5,000. less than a fourth of Black Beaver's claim.

In a letter written by Israel G. Vore about 1879 he said:
Black Beaver will soon be 71 years old and has spent the greater portion of his life in the service of the officers of the United States civil and military. He served the United States under General s Honey, Marcy, Belknap, Emory Sacket, and Stanley and various other officers and Agents and Superintendents of Indian Affairs, as guide and interpreter--none of whom ever charged him with falsehood, or a dishonorable act."

Agent P. H. Hunt from Anadarko, on August 30, 1879, singled out Black Beaver as a prosperous citizen in his report: " Black Beaver, a Delaware, has 300 acres of land enclosed and fully cultivated and is the possessor of considerable stock, hogs, cattle, and horses."

In later life Black Beaver became a Baptist minister. As a farmer he always set a fine example to his tribesmen and other Indians. The late Mr. E. B. Johnson of Norman, Oklahoma, wrote to Grant Foreman regarding the Delaware:
..... I knew Black Beaver well--He was typically named as he was an unusually dark Indian--often came to Fether's on his journeys and said he was with Jesse Chisholm when he died--[he] lived among the Cado when they lived in what is now know an Paul's Valley--most of them lived in grass houses or teepees and when they were moved out to Sugar Creek he went with them, but often returned for his usual visit

On June 2, 1889, from the office of the Kiowa, Comanche & Wichita Agency, Anadarko, Indian Territory, Agent P. B. Hunt wrote to the commissioner of Indian Affairs in Washington:
.... On the 8th day of May, Black Beaver, a Delaware, and the most prominent of all the Indians belonging to the old Wichita Agency, died suddenly of heart disease, in the 72nd [74th] year of his age. He was many years ago a noted guide and acted in that capacity for Fremont, Auderbon [sic] and Marcy; had acquired a fair knowledge of English & delighted in speaking it, when occasion offered; was a good friend of the white man, had professed religion. had consented to two of his daughters marrying white men, & set his red brethern [sic] a good example by his untiring industry & earnest desire to follow the white man's road to the end. [A doubtful honor. Editor]

His burial took place the day following his death, and more 150 persons showed the esteem in which he was held, by following the remains to their last earthly resting place. The coffin was borne Agency employees and other white residents and burial services were conducted by Delawares led by their Seminole preacher.

Black Beaver's grave, about half a mile west of the agency and a short distance southwest of his farm, is protected by the United States in a small reservation.

Members of the Oklahoma State Historical Society, in its annual meeting at Chickasha in April, 1937, visited Black Beaver's grave and several other places closely associated with the celebrated Delaware.

Editor's Note: In 1976 Black Beaver's grave was moved to Fort Sill near Lawton and placed on the Chief's Knoll. A bust of Black Beaver is in the National Hall of Fame for Famous Indians, in Anadarko.

The following items are from Richard C. Adam's, Delaware Indians: A Brief History:

The saying is true that "the blood of the soldier makes the general great." It is the conscientious discharge of duty by the subordinates of an army, stating the principal more broadly, "that makes the efficient army." Black Beaver, the famous Delaware scout, is a most satisfactory example illustrative of this. His character, modest, faithful, conscientious in the discharge of every duty, and seemingly oblivious of any personal danger, places him on an exceeding high plane, worthy of imitation. He had the absolute confidence of those that he guided from danger to safety. He never served anyone that did not bear testimony to his zealous discharge of his duties. The following is a letter from Black Beaver to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of addressing my grievances to you and of respectfully asking your advice in a matter in which I am earnestly concerned,

I would represent that I am an Indian, belonging to the Delaware tribe, that I have been in the employ of the Government all, or nearly all, the time since the commencement of the Mexican was. During the Mexican war I was captain of a company of Shawnee and Delawares in the United States Army.

Since that time, up to the commencement of the last war, I have been employed as a guide or interpreter by the different commanding officers at the posts of Arbuckle and Fort Cobb, in the Indian Territory, and by superintendent and agents for the Indians in the vicinity of Fort Cobb and Arbuckle, as can be attested by General Marcy, Emory, Sturgis, Stanley, and Sacklitt, any or all of the military officers stationed at the aforementioned posts prior to the war, as also ex-Superintendent Rector, of Arkansas, and all of the United States Indian agents in that locality.

I was at the post of Fort Arbuckle for about five years and the post of Fort Cobb one year immediately preceding the last war, and during that time had invested all of my means and earnings in cattle and hogs, and had, at the breaking out of the war. a large stock of cattle and hogs, as will be attested by some, if not all, of the aforementioned persons.

In the spring of 1861 General Emory requested me to guide his command and also the combined commands from Fort Smith, Cobb, and Arbuckle to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., which I did, but hesitated about leaving my stock until General Emory assured me that I should be paid by the United States for my losses; and on that representation I complied with his request and came with his command to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and remained here until the war ceased, when I visited my old place and found that my stock was killed, some having been destroyed by the wild Indians and some by the Southern army.

About two years since I acquainted United States Indian Agent Shanklin with the facts and asked him to adopt measures for procuring my pay for me. He was agent for the Affiliated Bands of Indians in the southern superintendency, and I was at the time employed as interpreter under his direction.

I have had no word from him in the matter and do not know whether he made any effort in my behalf or not.

I therefore make this request at your hands, hoping that if it may not be in your power to give attention to such matters that you will advise me as to the best course to pursue to get my dues.

I am now an old man (upward of 60 years old) and too feeble to earn a livelihood, and what is justly due me from the Government is all that I have to depend on in my old age. Most, if not all, of the officers before named are well acquainted with me and can vouch for the correctness of my statements.

As to the extent and nature of my claim, I can furnish abundant proof, as many persons of my acquaintance before the war at at their old places.

I would respectfully ask that you make inquiry of General Marcy or General Emory as to my character and claim, and that you would advise me as to the best course to pursue in the premises.

I have never realized 1 cent from the property that I abandoned, and am now in need.

I do not think that Agent Shanklin has made any effort whatever on my behalf, or if he has, it has been done in such an indirect manner that he has either accomplished nothing or has failed to advise me of the result.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, BLACK BEAVER, Address box 22, Baxter Springs, Kans.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS Washington, D. C.

Gen. W. H. Emory wrote to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in reference to Black Beaver as follows:

WASHINGTON, JUNE 12, 1869.

GENERAL: I have read carefully the letter of Black Beaver, the Delaware guide, dated Baxter Springs, Kans., June 3, 1869, and I hereby certify that it is every word true. And I exceedingly regret that the Government has so far neglected the claim of this worthy and patriotic man who has rendered such eminent and valuable service.

When the war broke out I was in quasi command of the troops in the Indian country in the northern part of Texas that is to say, I was to take command and withdraw the troops only in case Arkansas passed the act of secession. She never passed that act before proceeding to actual hostilities and to the attempt to capture the troops stationed in the Indian country, so that when I got information of what was going on I was obliged to act without orders from the Government. Orders subsequently arrived, but not until long after the steps were taken which I now describe and in which Black Beaver rendered such splendid service.

That step was to concentrate all the troops at Arbuckle and withdraw them en masse. Before the concentration could be effected, I learned from undoubted authority that 4,000 rebels from Texas were marching directly on me and that some 2,000 from Arkansas were moving to strike my flank

This compelled me to seek, with my comparatively small command, the open prairie. To do this guides were essential, and, of all the Indians that the Government had been lavishing its bounty, Black Beaver was the only one that would consent to guide my column.

He was living near Fort Arbuckle, in a comfortable house, surrounded by his family, with a small [farm] fairly well stocked with cattle and horses and a field of corn. All these he abandoned to serve the United States, with a full knowledge that in doing so his horses and cattle would be seized by the enemy, and his property destroyed, and such was the case, and Black Beaver has never returned to his home, and it is my belief, if he was now to return he would be murdered by the bad white ment who in 1861 instigated the Indians to go into rebellion against the United States and whom he so greatly offended by guiding my command through the prairie in safety to Fort Leavenworth.

I need not say how invaluable was his service and great his sacrifice on that occasion. He was the first to warn me of the approach of the enemy and give me the information by which I was enabled to capture the enemy's advance guard, the first prisoners captured in the war.

I can not too urgently press upon the honorable Commissioner the justice of this claim and the pressing necessity there is for doing something at once to relieve the wants of this aged and worthy man.

I have the honor to be yours respectfully. W. H. EMORY Brevet Major-General, U.S. Army.

Gen. E. S. Parker, Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

I estimate Black Beaver's loss at about $5,000. W. H. EMORY

W. H. Emory, whose heart indorsement of the long delayed and eminently just claim of Black Beaver against the United States does him credit, was abreast of our foremost army officers in conspicuous and efficient service for many years. He felt when he penned that letter that his friend Beaver deserved well of the Reopublic, and no doubt greatly regretted the Government's neglect. He comprehended to its fullest extent the value, at personal sacrifice, of the service rendered his soldiers (and himself) in extracating them from very serious danger. If the Confederates had succeeded in capturing his command, their prestige would have greatly increased and the Federal cause proportionately injured. We can not now measure the value of the services of the veteran scout, but if disaster had befallen General Emory, several chapters relating to the civil war would have been differently written.

Indian Hall of Fame Honors First Redman

By CARTER BRADLEY

ANADARKO, Nov. 12—(U.P.)—Black Beaver, a friendly Delaware Indian who helped white men bring their civilization to southwestern Oklahoma, will be the first of his race honored in the new American Indian Hall of Fame here.

The Hall of Fame, the dream of a New York businessman who grew up among the Indians of Oklahoma, actually will not be a hall, but a park, at first. Building plans may come later.

The 10-acre tract where famous redmen will be enshrined in statuary will be on land which Black Beaver farmed about 1870. The site is just east of Anadarko, adjoining the grounds of the Southern Plains Indian Museum.

Credited with the idea for the memorial is Logan Billingsley, brother of the night club owner, Sherman Billingsley of the Stork Club. The Billingsleys spent their boyhood in Caddo county, of which Anadarko is the seat. Logan Billingsley, a realtor, lives at Kenmah, N. Y.

Billingsley outlined his idea in detail at the first meeting of the board of directors of the National Hall of Fame for famous American Indians, as the sponsoring group will be known. Civic organizations, educational institutions and private enterprise from throughout the Southwest have pledged support of the project.

"The idea of this hall of fame is to give the Indians a break they haven't had," Billingsley told the founders. "It's something which should have been started a hundred years ago."

N. B. Johnson, a justice on the Oklahoma supreme court and president of the National Congress of American Indians, was named president of the board.

"The project will preserve for future generations the dignity, the valor of a great people," Johnson said. "Some day the Indian will be remembered not as a savage who fought the frontiersman, but as a man who valiantly worked and fought to preserve his way of life in an historic clash with civilization."

Oklahoma has the largest Indian population of any state in the nation. Remnants of Black Beaver's tribe, like thousands of others, were forced off their ancestral hunting grounds in other parts of the nation and sent to Indian Territory. The territory became a state in 1907, after white men were permitted to settle here.

Black Beaver was born in a camp near what is now Belleville, Ill., in 1806. He led two expeditions

CALEB, Sabilla - Entry being entered this date. Sabilla went to present Kansas with a search party to negotiate with the Delaware (and later the Chippewa) regarding the Munsee move from Wisconsin to present Kansas. She married first and second Munsee Noah Nathan in Wisconsin. She then married Tom Eliott/Elliott, and then Reazin/Rezin Wilcoxen/Wilcoxon, probably in Leavenworth County Kansas. The year of their marriage has not been proven. Two years that we have come across are 1851 and 1854. The year 1854 is probably more realistic. It appears that Rezin had been previously married to Melinda Statler. Rezin and Sabilla's child was Josephine Wilcoxon (as she spelled it in her own handwriting), born in 1852 in Leavenworth County. The Munsee, who had moved from Wisconsin to Leavenworth County about 1836, moved to present Franklin County, Kansas about 1859. Josephine moved to Franklin County at the age of seven, that is, about 1859. Apparently she was with her mother, Sabilla, but it appears that her father remained behind as was married to Melinda Wilcoxen by this time. She first married Munsee, or Chippewa, Moses Kilbuck at the age of 14, and later married John William Plake.

(Much of the data on this entry was provided by Researcher Linda Plake Sparlin lsparlin@rollanet.org . Linda is the great-great-grand daughter of Rezin Wilcoxen and Sabilla Caleb and the great grand daughter of John William Plake.)

William Conner and Elizabeth Conner

Walking The Knife-Edged Path: The Life Of William Conner

By Timothy Crumrin

When early ethnographer and linguist C. C. Trowbridge entered Indiana during the late autumn of 1823 he was very much a man on a mission. Trowbridge had been charged by Lewis Cass, Governor of the Michigan Territory, with making scholarly enquiries into the life ways and language of the Delaware Indians. On December 5th, "after a tedious and rather unpleasant journey" through the state, he finally reached the White River home of a man who could help him with his study. Trowbridge found William Conner "a good deal employed in necessary attention to his business," but anxious to help the earnest young scholar. Conner's wide experience among the Delaware and other Native Americans made him an ideal resource. Indeed, for most of his forty-six years he had performed a precarious balancing act between two worlds: Red and White. He spoke the words of both worlds, lived and dressed as both did. He continually walked the knife-edged path dividing the two divergent cultures, never, seemingly, wholly a part of either. As a result, he had intimate knowledge of both societies-- and how they interacted with one another.

Ironically, Trowbridge also found Conner overseeing the completion of the most concrete affirmation of his desire to step away from that narrowing path, his new home. Conner's two story brick house was his signal that he had crossed the line, the symbol of his full entrance into white society. It was at once the completion of one journey and the first step upon another. William Conner was born onto the tightrope; his first steps pointed him toward a trail already blazed by his family. In many ways it was a quintessentially American story, one abounding in the icons of the American consciousness: Indians, pioneers, and the foreboding frontier.

William Conner's birthplace was on the frontier's jagged edge that was Ohio in 1777--probably in Lichtenau. His father, Richard, a sometime trader, sometime tavern keeper, had spent most of his life moving from one wilderness to another. As historians John Larson and David Vanderstel noted, Richard Conner's life adumbrated his son's and provided a possible framework within which to live it.

Born in 1718, Richard Conner [C.] left his native Maryland to roam the forests of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio in search of furs. At some point he encountered Margaret Boyer, a white woman raised in Indian villages after her capture by the Shawnee. Ransoming her for $200 and a promise to turn over their first-born son, the fifty-something Richard married Margaret and lived among the Shawnee. Their son James, born in 1771, was dutifully given to the Shawnee. It was a rugged existence, but one for which Conner, described by a missionary as one who feared neither man nor God, and his family seemed well suited. In 1775 the family was uprooted from the Shawnee village where Conner kept a tavern by the ongoing conflicts which characterized the frontier. After ransoming James, they threw in their collective lot with the Moravian missionaries and their Delaware converts who founded Schoenbrunn, Ohio. The Moravians, a Protestant sect which proselytized among Native Americans, gathered their converts into mission towns normally closed to outsiders. For reasons which remain unclear, an exception was made for the Conner's who were to follow them to Lichtenau. This world on the fringe presaged the one in which William Conner would inhabit for much of his life.

Caught in the crossfire of the Revolutionary War, the Conner's joined the Delaware and the missionaries on their British-forced removal to Michigan, exchanging one unsettled area for another. The arrival of peace brought the departure of the Moravians and their followers, who returned to Ohio. Richard Conner, now in his sixties, decided to remain. Eventually purchasing over 4,000 acres of land in what became Macomb County, he established a trading post and became a facilitator of settlement. Although he acquired land from his father, William also inherited his sense of wanderlust combined with a trader's instincts. By 1795 William was trading with the Native Americans around Saginaw Bay.

William and his older brother John arrived in Indiana during the winter of 1800-1801 as agents for a Canadian fur trader named Angus Mackintosh. To anyone else it might have been a daunting and foreboding venture, but to the Conner Brothers it must have seemed the reawakening of a vestigial memory. Once again they were beyond white settlement, living and trading among Native Americans. Both men settled among the Delaware, who lived in villages strung along the White River from north of present day Indianapolis to modern Muncie. Both married Delaware women; according to legend, William's wife, Mekinges, was the daughter of Chief Anderson, but no concrete evidence supports this claim. Traders often found it to their advantage to marry into the tribes with which they dealt. It eased their way into the community and helped assure a feeling of loyalty. As in the case of William Conner, it increased their influence and allowed the trader to exert some control over the actions of the tribe. Traders often became unofficial liaison officers between the "their Indians" and the white world and government.

William Conner soon attached himself to the land which now bears his name. The 200 acre prairie, hard by the White River, was an ideal location for both agriculture and trade. He built a log home which doubled as a trading post and with Mekinges began raising a family. John Conner moved closer to settlement by relocating to the Whitewater Valley area (where he was to later plat Connersville) in 1803. From there he acted as a middleman, marketing the peltry sent by William and returning trade goods and liquor for his brother's Indian customers. Officially licensed traders since 1801, the brothers' activities made them a part of a complex economic network well on its way to eroding many aspects of Native American life and culture. An old pattern in which newcomers first came looking for the bounty of the land and then cast covetous eyes toward the land itself was being retraced in Indiana. The dependence engendered by the trade allowed the government to manipulate and coerce tribes into ceding their homelands. The Conners were to have small but vital roles in the process.

John Conner was the first to add another layer to the liaison role by officially performing duties for the government. Venturing forth from his "civilized" area once more into the wilds, he served in several capacities under William Henry Harrison and others beginning in 1808. William appears to have eschewed any official role prior to 1811, but increasing conflict and the War of 1812 drew him into government service. The man who had lived and worked with Native Americans most of his life, who had married a Delaware woman, whose children were certainly more "Indian" than "American," became a soldier, scout, interpreter and spy for those who were arguably his family's enemies.

Among the services rendered by William Conner were maintaining Delaware loyalty during the war and identifying the body of Tecumseh following the Battle of the Thames, the defeat which essentially sealed the fate of Native Americans east of the Mississippi.

All the while Conner continued his trading and farming activities. His home on the White River became a gathering place for Native Americans and a stopover for the few white travelers. His family continued to grow. He and a partner, William Marshall, accrued profits not only from their regular trading, but from the extra income provided by land cession treaties--Conner had been a part of eight such negotiations-- and their aftermath. William Conner's roles as interpreter and liaison at the Treaty of St. Mary's in 1818, in which the Delaware ceded lands in central Indiana for those west of the Mississippi, were a continuation of his efforts over the decade. At the back of his mind he must have been aware that his participation would lead to a drastic, almost organic, alteration of his life. Changes wrought in the Delaware world were changes wrought in his.

Conner worked in the background as something of a fixer. He helped assess what it would take to get the tribes to accept the inevitable treaty. He helped "sell" the treaty to Anderson and the other chiefs by pointing out its benefits and arranging bribes and under-the-table payments to Delaware leaders. Conner earned profits from the removal by arranging to provide supplies for the trek. With the signing of the treaty the days of the Delaware--and Conner's family--in Indiana were numbered.

The Delaware gathered-- ironically, they were preceded by the commission charged with selecting a site for Indiana's new state capital-- at the Conner trading post during the summer 1820 in preparation for their journey. Whether Conner gave serious consideration to trying yet another frontier is uncertain. As early as 1818 he petitioned to secure legal right to his land, but whether this was with an eye toward remaining or simply securing payment is unknown. Mekinges assumed he, like his partner Marshall, would go with his family, but became "very anxious and much worried" when William made no preparations to leave. When the wife of famed Indian Agent John Johnston confronted Conner, he denied any intention of staying behind. Conner may have also considered keeping his family in Indiana, as he filed a petition in 1820 saying he wished to have the land to raise his family. Conner claimed he begged his family to stay, but a future white in-law asserted he "sent them away."

In the end Conner chose to stay upon his land and watch his family go. Like his father before him he staked out a claim to his last frontier. Mekinges, distraught at leaving her home, planted sprigs of Live-forever for each of her six children around the homestead. She planted the rapidly growing shrub, she later recalled, because she wanted no one else to live in her home. William Conner divided assets with Marshall and provided his own family with horses and goods. Conner's family and the Delaware began their trek in the dwindling summer of 1820. Conner rode a day with his family

With his family's leave-taking William Conner began to retire his balancing act, his tripping dance with equilibrium was almost over. The years from 1820 to 1823 were ones of transition. Within three months of his family's departure he married Elizabeth Chapman, possibly the only young, eligible white women in the area, taking her into the home he had shared with Mekinges and his family. He and brother John [Conner], who had recently returned to the area, set about acquiring land and initiating business ventures. William Conner's tentative steps into the white world soon became determined strides. In 1823 Conner began the construction of his brick home, locating it on a terrace edge overlooking the White River less than one-half mile south of his log cabin. Little is known about the building process. Tradition says it was built by craftsmen from the "east." A deposit of bricks later uncovered east of the house supports the claim that the bricks were fired on site. The result was a Federal style house that became a focus for activity of all sorts in the rapidly expanding area.

Trowbridge-- who was forced to send to Ohio for a Delaware who could help answer his questions, so successful had been the removal efforts-- was not the only visitor to the home. It became a stopping point for many travelers, businessmen, and politicians. Indianapolis lawyer and civic leader Calvin Fletcher thought the homestead and surrounding lands beautiful and newspaper owner Nathaniel Bolton was enchanted by the view of "fifteen or twenty merry plowmen" spied from the second floor of the house. The Conner home was also the de facto center of the newly formed Hamilton County government when it hosted the County Commissioners, Circuit Court, and served as a "post office."

From his new home Conner entered fully into the teaming world advancing toward him. Like his father he became a "facilitator" of settlement. He--sometimes with partners-- acquired ever-increasing amounts of land, acreage which could be profitably sold to new settlers. He and Josiah Polk platted Noblesville in 1823, shrewdly donating land for the county seat, and later Alexandria and Strawtown. At one point he owned approximately four thousand acres in Hamilton County. In addition to farming and stock-raising he expanded his business interests by owning or investing in stores, mills, and a distillery. In many ways he may be seen as a prototype of the entrepreneur. His enterprises ranged from small country stores to a larger one in Indianapolis for which he assumed responsibility after the death of his brother John in 1826. He appears to have been a crafty businessman. Conner sometimes resorted to complex, convoluted maneuvers, such as transferring his interests to partners temporarily if they were threatened.

By the 1830s William Conner was well established in his own "new world." He had become a respected figure. He made occasional forays into politics, supporting Whig policies. He served three non-consecutive terms in the state legislature from 1829 to 1837. His motives were probably more those of a businessman seeking to advance his interests than those of a man wishing to be a public servant. He was a founding member of the Indiana Historical Society, but appears to have done little beyond signing the charter. It must be noted that Conner did not entirely abandon his old world. In addition to aiding Trowbridge, Conner still dealt with Indian affairs. He was an interpreter for treaties with the Miami in 1826 and the Potawatomi in 1832. Also in 1832 he served as a guide for a group of Indiana militia who went off to take part in the Black Hawk War. The conflict being all but over by the time the group reached Chicago, he led them peaceably back to Indiana. Anecdotal evidence indicates Conner also occasionally harkened back to his earlier days by dressing himself and his children as Indians and frolicking about in an attempt frighten visitors.

Seven of William and Elizabeth Conner's ten children were born in their brick home. [Their children are listed under Mekinges. In 1837, in his sixtieth year, Conner moved his family to Noblesville, his final step into settlement. He continued to oversee his business interests, but eased into his final role as a pioneer patriarch. Life slowed considerably for the ever active man. When he died in 1855 many of the trails he helped blazed had become roads, many of the forests he roamed had been cut away to reveal towns. The Conner house rising out of the prairie remained. It is not known precisely who resided in the house in the remaining years of Conner family ownership. It is likely it was occupied by some of the children or, possibly, tenant farmers. Ownership of the property was not without controversy. It was the subject of legal disputes, including an unsuccessful attempt in the 1860s by Conner's Delaware children to gain title to the land on which they were born.

The land passed out of Conner hands in 1871. It went through several owners until purchased by Indianapolis businessman Eugene Darrach in 1915. During that time the house underwent changes, the most notable being the addition of a kitchen ell. Although Darrach seems to have made some effort to maintain the home-- and allowed the placement of a historical marker on the grounds-- the house continued to deteriorate. In 1934 the 111-year old house fought time as it awaited its savior.

The Conner Estate is one of the crown jewels of Conner Prairie. William Conner was a fur trader, land speculator, entrepreneur, interpreter, and legislator. He came to Indiana in the winter of 1800-1801 with his brother John, married a Delaware woman named Mekinges, and established a trading post along the White River. Following the removal of the Delaware, he built his handsome brick residence for his second wife, Elizabeth Chapman Conner, in 1823. The Conner family lived there from 1823 to 1837, when they moved to Noblesville, Indiana, a town founded by Conner and a

After passing out of Conner family hands and falling into disrepair, the house and grounds were purchased by industrialist and history-lover Eli Lilly in 1934, who repaired and restored the home. The Conner Estate underwent a further restoration in 1992 and appears much as it did in the 1820s. Optional 30-minute guided tours are scheduled every 20 minutes and may be reserved on the day of your museum visit. The estate also features a large barn, loom house, spring house, and a demonstration garden. Visitors may watch interpreters reproduce coverlets and blankets, and demonstrate the weaving, spinning, and dyeing of cloth. The Conner House is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. For an article on the furnishing of this historic house, including photographs, see www.connerprairie.org/chfurn.html .

FALL LEAF, Captain - From Richard C. Adam, Delaware Indians: A Brief History: I invite the reader's attention...to a letter from Captain Fall Leaf, in which he recites some of the important events of his military career. As a scout he was many years in the employ of the United States Government. As a mark of the distinguished regard and confidence of Government officials of that day entertained for him, in 1860 he accompanied the Prince of Wales, now Edward VII of England, whilst he was touring this country.

> Delaware Reservation, September 15, 1863.
> DEAR SIR: I was employed by Colonel Summer about four years ago to guide seven companies of soldiers under him in an expedition against the Cheyennes. I selected six companies of Delawares and did the work assigned me. We whipped the Cheyennes that time and were discharged by Colonel Summer and paid off. Colonel Summer, however, in addition to the money paid me, promised that the Government should give me 160 acres of land. I have never received this land and I would be glad to have you write to me how to get it.

Colonel Summer told me after we were discharged, that if at any time thereafter I should want anything, that I should call on you and you would grant it.

One year afterwards I was again called upon by Major Sedwick, and , with six Delawares I selected, I guided three companies of soldiers under the major against the Kiowas and we whopped them also. Major Sedwick also promised me land, and, like Colonel Summer, told me whenever I wanted anything to call upon the Government and they would grant it.

Again in the fall of 1861, at the request of Major-General Fremont, I raised a company of 54 Delawares and proceeded under the instruction of Maj. F. Johnson, our agent, and at the request of General Fremont, to Springfield Mo. We had no fight this time, but we did all that was required of us, and we went back to Sedalia with General Fremont and then he paid us off and discharged us. At this time also, General Fremont promised me 160 acres of land and told me also that that at any time I wanted anything of the Government to let them know and I should surely have it.

In the summer of 1862 I went out under Colonel Ritchie of Topeka, Kans. (and had a fight near Fort Gibson; we saw the enemy, the Choctaw Indians, the half-breed, we play ball with them, 50 we laid on the ground, 60 we took prisoners, even the Choctaw general; him I took myself alone; he was a big sesesh; 100 Union men he had killed. I brought him to the Cherokees; they killed him; they gave him no time to live), and Colonel Ritchie made the same promise that the other officers did. I was captain of a company of 86 Delawares, under Colonel Ritchie, for about four or five months, and have not yet ever received one cent for these services, nor have any of my men yet been paid for these same services, although we all served faithfully and furnished our own horses.

I write to you now to ask you to see that I get pay for all these services, according to promises made me, and that my men also get their pay. We have always served the Government of the United States faithfully whenever the Government keeps its promise to us.

I am, respectfully, CAPTAIN FALL LEAF. PAUL JORDAN.

I forget one thing more. We wish that you would ask the President to send our men back home. We do not wish to have them discharged away from home. We want them sent back home and then discharged. We are afraid of our homes, and we want the men at home to protect our women and children, and our own property. We wish that you would also let us have about 200 guns, with powder and lead, so that we may be ready in case any danger arises at any time.

You will please direct your answers to CAPT. FALL LEAF (Care Wm. McNeil Clough, Leavenworth City, Kans.)

Hon. W. P. DOLE, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington City, D. C.

The following item from www.larryville.com (Lawrence, Kansas) has quite a bit of information about Captain Fall Leaf and the Delaware in the Lawrence area:

Delaware Street Rag
by Michael Caron mcaron@sunflower.com

*First Song: XENGWIKÁON Verse XII: [A Story]

Before we left the Lawrence Airport that morning Mary [Zeigler] told me another thing about the Lenape presence in North Lawrence that I had never heard in all those years of Mumi retelling . In all those years of listening to Mumi retell what Mary had said about the Big House I had never realized that the last of the truly traditional Big House ceremonial sites was located somewhere just east of the airport. Fall Leaf's band had a special roll in the Gamwing, the Celestial Bear Ceremony, and other sacred gatherings through the annual cycle of the XENGWIKÁON. Thus the Big House was near Fall Leaf's settlement, just to the east of the great communal cornfield. Even after the majority of Lenape began to neglect the rituals Fall Leaf's followers seemed determined to preserve Lenapeness through traditional ritual and song. His people were among the last to leave their homes in Kansas. Mary Zeigler's ancestors were prominent in this band of the Lenape living across the river from Lawrence. Many Zieglers were buried in the Delaware Cemetery at the north end of the bridge to Eudora. Some of Fall Leaf's band, including Mary's great grandfather and other relations, were still present to see Governor Robinson's hirelings pull down what was left of the old Big House log by log to recycle as an out building for his farm.

A few of the traditionalist Lenape, men from Fall Leaf's band prominent among them, had tried to resurrect the old ceremonies after their move to Oklahoma. The famous mixed blood Algonquian anthropologist Frank Speck had even taken photos of "the last Big House" in Copan. But Speck's informant, one of the few remaining practitioners of traditional Lenape religion, made it clear that the last real Big House, the last place where all the ceremonies had occurred in their rich and full form, had been the one in North Lawrence. So much was lost by the time those few elders with any knowledge undertook the task of revitalizing the rituals and rebuilding the Big House near Copan.

According to Mary that last Big House in North Lawrence was an early and frequent victim of massive Jayhawker and Bushwhacker vandalism and thievery. But she also described how even before Kansas was opened to white settlement the Christian missionaries played a crucial part in the neglect that befell this sacred site. By the time the great Kansas River flood of 1840 put the Big House under water it was already in serious decline. Some Lenape, like Speck's informant, believed that the neglect of the Gamwing was the ultimate cause of what happened when the Jayhawkers came flooding in from the east just over a decade later. All the Indians of Kansas suffered incredibly under the growing weight of white squatters and speculators. Their livestock and crops were stolen, even their seed for the next year's planting was taken by the people who moved into the area. The nightriders terrorized the Indians in hopes of driving them from the best lands. The town speculators struck deals with individual Lenape for timber they had no authority to sell. Squatters cut and hauled away the best of the trees even before men like Senator Lane and Governor Robinson could arrange to have their own crews harvest the timber they had plotted to steal from the Lenape. The Indians were reduced to starvation and to a daily life of overwhelming terror. Ironically the U.S. Army, which had established a fort at Leavenworth in order to guarantee the protection of the eastern tribes, stood aside while the whites cleansed Kansas of its Indian population. Fort Leavenworth was built on the very site that the Lenape had originally selected for their Kansas home, the first of many fundamental violations of the treaties that brought 10,000 eastern Indians into this part of Kansas. Most of the officers at Leavenworth lined their pockets with profits made helping civilian associates steal Indian land and timber. Mary claimed that half the shareholders in the town company that became Leavenworth were officers from the fort, men charged with responsibility for insuring that those squatters stay off that most valuable of all Lenape land in Kansas.

By 1867 the Lenape, once arguably the most powerful and influential native nation in all of eastern North America, were put in such desperate straights that all they could hope for was that somehow they might find a way to survive as a distinct people. Old Fall Leaf wrote to Washington that his tribe was known as the Delaware, and that they had been a nation since long before there had existed any such nation as the United States. "For time to come, as far as human mind can conceive, we wish to be a nation." Survival as a distinct people was the best he could dream on his empty stomach as he watched the small children and elderly dying of hunger all around him. He knew that his people could not hold on to their Kansas homes any longer. Be done with it. Stop the torture and abuse. Let my people go. But federal government agents insisted on using this great opportunity to force the Lenape into accepting a relationship with the Cherokee tribe of Oklahoma that would wipe out their distinctiveness as a nation. To get land in Oklahoma, in what was then the much reduced "Indian Territory", the Lenape would have to agree to be absorbed into the Cherokee Nation. So the government inflicted starvation went on and on. The pressure from the surrounding sea of whites, slaveocrats and freesoilers alike, just continued to mount. In his broken English Fall Leaf begged for mercy from his white neighbors, and for the Delaware Indian agent to release the supplies promised in the treaties:

> "We do honest want to have it done. Because since 4 years we have lost what little was left then. and crop fail, and every Article of the kind we need is very high in price. We wish our Great Father should be kind give such as is need Now. even no seed to plant. We should like to have it done right off. for God sake. and Remember the treatys, we hope Government should listen our suffering nation."

FALLEAF, George - From his obituary in Ruby Cranor, Some Old Delaware Obituaries, p. 28:

> Falleaf was honorary chief of the Delawares. There has been no chief since Chief Journeycake died several years ago. Since then a committee has had charge of tribal affairs. This committee gave Falleaf the title of honorary chief in recognition of the high regard in which he was held and because he was one of the oldest living Delawares. He was long considered on of the most able men of his tribe and was called upon to represent his people in Washington on several occasions. He was held in high esteem throughout this section by both Indians and white people. Falleaf was a son of Captain Falleaf who commanded a company of Indians during the Civil War. He was one of the two male members of the Delaware migration from Kansas. His death Sunday at the Indian hospital in Claremore leaves Charley Elkhair the sole male survivor. There are several Delaware omen living who made the trip. Falleaf was a scout under General Miles. He and 20 other Delawares organized a band of Indian scouts at Coffeyville and went to the western plains to fight warring tribes for the government. The father of Falleaf was a captain in the U.S. Army. He is also buried at Cotton Creek Cemetery. Bartlesville Examiner, September 12, 1939.

FISH, Arch - A Shawnee Indian. He had children with Betsy Wilaquenaho on the Delaware Reserve in Present Kansas. Their children were Eliza Jane Fish and Sarah Ann Fish, whom see.

FISH, Eliza Jane - Revised 25 November 2001. Eliza Jane Fish is the daughter of Arch Fish and Betsy Wilaquenaho Fish-Marshall. We had earlier thought that she was the daughter of Betsy Wilaquenaho and William Marshall. Eliza Jane Fish is No. 961 on the Register of the Delaware Indians Residing in the Cherokee Nation, as a Tribe and Individuals Showing Their Lands, Improvements, Location and Valuations of Improvements in Possession of Them Prior to and on August 4, 1898. This document shows that she died prior to the date of the document. Her husband was shown as Charles Lavin, age 56, but his name is crossed out. Also crossed out is his (or their) land holding of 160 cultivated acres with 160 acres enclosed, valued at $500.00. Mary Ann Tiblow at 76 [born ca.1822] is listed as a sister as is Sarah A. McCommish at 57 [born ca.1841]. This ties all three of these sisters as daughters of Betsy Wilaquenaho (listed as Betsy Marshall, Register No. 962). John Marshall age 41 [born ca.1857] is listed as her nephew. Note a gives the names of the witnesses, Jno. McCracken, Henry Armstrong, H. M. Adams. Note b "Remarks" says "One mile southeast of Silver Lake." The note also says, "See Reg. 939, 963 for improvements." Note c says (crossed out) Nov. 4, 1898, Jan. 2, Apr. 118, 1899. Reg. No. 939 is for Henry Tiblow, deceased and Mary Ann Tiblow (wife) 76. Note b (remarks) says 1/2 mile S. of Willow Springs School House. FISH, Sarah Ann

Sarah Ann nee Fish Rankins McCamish (Provided by Bonnie Wear)

We had thought earlier that Sarah Ann (Fish) Rankins McCamish was the daughter of Betsy Wilaquenaho and William Marshall. Sara Ann was born ca.1836-1839 on the Delaware Reserve (present Wyandotte County, Kansas, the daughter of Betsy Wilaquenaho and Arch Fish. Her mother, Betsy Wilaquenaho (possibly Ketchum) was first married to William Marshall and had several children with him. He died in Greene County, Missouri in 1834. Betsy Wilaquenaho had gone with the tribe to the Delaware Reserve, but we do not know whether or not William Marshall ever went to Kansas. In any event, Betsy had at least two children with Arch Fish after William's death, the other child being Eliza Jane Fish. Arch Fish was a Shawnee Indian. We know little about him, but are trying to determine his personal and family data. Sarah Ann married 1. Samuel Rankin and 2. James McCamish/ McCommish. Saran Ann was on the list of the Delaware Who Elected to Remain in Kansas and Become U.S. Citizens in 1867 under 1863 Allotment No. 72, but at some point after 1866 she went to Indian Territory (present Oklahoma). Her minor children from the same listing under her name were the following with their 1862 Allotment Numbers:

No. 73 Alice Rankin, age 9
No. 1048 Sally Rankin, age 5
Verity P. Hamilton, age 2.

From family data we have the following:
Roll Nos. 963/687 Sarah A. Marshall [Fish] 1832 - married 1. Rankin 2. McCamish. [Children:]
---/685 Alice J. Rankin born 1856
---/689 Sally/Sarah E. 1862
Verily Prudence died early.
Richard/Robert MacCamish born 1877.

From the Register of Delaware Residing in the Cherokee Nation 4 August 1898, Sarah A. McCommish is listed as living at age 57 [born ca.1841] under No. 962 Betsy Marshall "dead." (Faye Louise Smith Arellano, Delaware Trails: Some Tribal Records 1842-1907, p. 452) She is also listed in the next entry under No. 963 "living" Sarah Ann Rankins alias Sara McCommish at age 57, with 63 cultivated acres of land, 130 acres not enclosed, value $3,000. Witness were William Clark and Wm. Adams, and Note b (Remarks) At Willow Springs Note c Jan. 2, 1899. Her children:
J. Lynch 24
Lizzie Lumbard 32
Richard McCommish 21.

Sarah Ann died 4 August 1898, probably in Oklahoma. From the Cherokee Nation Delaware Roll dated 31 1904 the following data are given: _____ District, Ketchum, I. T., Sarah A. McCamish age 63, Tribal Enrollment as a Delaware No. 1707 in 1880, tribal enrollment of her father, Arch Fish, _____, listed as a Shaw.[nee] Indian, and her mother Betsy Fish. Other data on the document says No. 1 on Delaware Register No. 963 as Sarah Ann Rankins. No. 1 on 1896 roll page 623 No. 56 Del. Dist. On Delaware card No. 47 (old series) 1 October 1900. On this card March 31st, 1904. GELELEMEND - Gelelemend, also spelled Kelelamand and Kelelemend, English name William Henry Killbuck, was born to the Turkey Clan and was the grandson of Netawatwees. One source says that he was born at Lehigh Gap, Pennsylvania as a full-blooded Delaware. (S. H. Mitchell, The Indian Chief, Journeycake. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society, 1895) He was a champion of the American cause and a supporter of Wicocalind (Captain White Eyes) and succeeded him as Principal Chief after the latter's murder in 1778. [Smithsonian, p. 223, says the date was 1776. Editor] Gelelemend undoubtedly figured largely in the intrigue between the British agents, the Wolf Clan's distrust of the Rebels, and the Turkey and the Turtle Clans' support of the Americans. It appears that he was born in 1722, 1733, or 1737. He became a member of the Moravian Mission of David Zeisberger in 1789. Gelelemend was buried in the cemetery at Goshen, Ohio. However, all sources agree that he died in 1811. Gelelemend adopted the English name of William Henry Killbuck, in honor of Colonel William Henry who rescued him at Braddock's Defeat in 1755 during the French and Indian War. [Ruby Cranor, Kik-Tha-Whe-Nund, p.p. 2-3, says the event was during the American Revolution. She also says that Gelelemend was a member of the Turkey Band who resigned in 1779, and became Principal Chief at that time. Editor] He succeeded Netawatwees as Turtle Chief at the latter's death in 1776. (Smithsonian, p. 223)

Mitchell says that:

> Nineteen years later, in 1774, Kilbuck visited his old home to gaze once more upon his native hills. When he reached Lancaster and inquired for Colonel Henry, he found him absent, but his son, William Henry, Jr., met Kilbuck, who made himself known, and related, with the strongest expression of gratitude, the story of his rescue. Twenty-three years later, in 1797, when the younger Henry [that is, Colonel Henry's son] was appointed, by the newly formed government of the United States, on a commission to survey public lands in Ohio, in the vicinity of Gnadenhutten. When the Indians heard that Henry was of the party, Kilbuck's descendants sought him out, and for the three months spent in the woods, gave the most marked attention, bringing game and otherwise supplying the wants of the surveying party. It was ascertained at this time that every member of the Kilbuck family, male and female, had "Henry" as a middle name. The Indian had not forgotten. In 1799 a party of thirty Delawares, of their way to the seat of the government to seek redress for some grievances, stopped at Lancaster to pay their respects to the Henry family. The heroic act of Colonel Henry in saving the life of the elder Kilbuck in 1755 had become a cherished story. (The Indian Chief, Journey, pp. 89-91)

Gelelemend was among those listed in the Treaty of Fort McIntosh as one "who took up the hatchet for the United States." Captain Montour's Company of Delaware Indians in service to the United States between 1780 and 31 October 1781, lists a Private Caylaylamind who might be the same as Gelelemend/Kelelamand although it seems doubtful that a Principal Chief of our people would knowingly be listed as "private." If it was he, then it was no doubt an expedient way to compensate Indian warriors for the services rendered during the peak of the conflict with Great Britain. Gelelemend converted to Christianity early in his life, but maintained a traditional Lenape life until the death of his grandfather, Netawatwees, who is trusted the white's religion. Gelelemend was reportedly among the few Delaware who escaped the 1782 massacre at Gnadenhutten. He moved to Pettequotting in 1788 and was baptized by Moravians in 1789. Gelelemend died in Ohio in 1811 and was buried in the cemetery at Goshen.

BIOGRAPHIES H - L

Sarah Halfmoon (Provided by Descendant, Laurence D. Heady) [I am trying to find the photograph so that I can try to improve this image. Editor]

HALFMOON, Sarah - Sarah Halfmoon was born on the Delaware Indian Reservation near Fort Leavenworth, Kansas in October of 1839 or 1840. Her mother was Eliza Conner, the daughter of Mekinges and granddaughter of Ahkechelungunaqua of the Turtle Clan, matrilineal descent. Sarah's father, Bill Halfmoon, died either shortly before or after her birth. Her stepfather was George Bullette, a man of French and Lenape heritage. During the final removal of the Delaware in the late 1860s, she moved with members of her family to lands along the Verdigris River, Cooweescoowee District, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory (Nowata County, Oklahoma). She was noted for her eccentricities, including the fact that she would speak only Lenape of French and pretend not to understand English. Sarah could not abide fools and often advised others not to trust anyone who didn't like horses or dogs. She was officially a full-blood Delaware. She was married several times to mixed-blood Cherokee and Delaware men. She apparently already had two children by the time of her first marriage to Albert Compston. (See the Biography of their daughter Ella Eliza Compston, just below) Tradition holds that she was a great supporter of the Dalton Boys, often giving them, food and shelter when they were fugitives. After their violent death on the streets of Coffeyville, Kansas, an ordinance was passed making it a crime to decorate their graves. Ignoring the law, Sarah continued to place flowers on the outlaws' graves until she died. She was a devout Baptist for over 80 years. She died in Bartlesville, Oklahoma, on December 7, 1934, the oldest member of the Delaware Tribe.

1. COMPSTON, Ella Eliza was the daughter of Sarah Halfmoon and Albert Euing (or Ewing) Compston, described above. Ella was presumably born on the Verdigris River, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory in 1970. She went by the name "Ella". Ella married Joshua Bonaparte Heady, also known as "J. B" or "Bud" Heady, sometime after legal charges against her mother, Sarah Halfmoon, were resolved. J. B. had been the deputy U.S. Marshal who was dispatched from Fort Smith to arrest her. Apparently he was born in Green County, Missouri, in 1858 or 1859, and lived in Missouri and Arkansas for much of his early life. He was the son of Eli P. Heady and Mary Ann "Polly" Presley and was of undocumented mixed Cherokee and Anglo-American heritage. He first wife was Elizabeth Berlew (1860-1929) and he had two or three children of that union. It is unknown under what circumstances J. B left his former wife and children. He served as a deputy United States marshal for the Western District of Arkansas--the district of "Hanging Judge" Isaac Parker of Fort Smith. J. B. was among the marshals that maintained peace and order in the lawless Indian Territory immediately after the Civil War. He swore oaths of office in 1887, 1889, and 1895, all signed by Judge Parker. He was probably an Indian Territory "posse man" prior to 1887 and he rode with Frank Dalton and others. J. B. served as a deputy U. S. Marshal for the Western District of Arkansas--the district of "Hanging Judge" Isaac Parker of Fort Smith. J. B. was among the marshals who maintained peace and order in the lawless Indian Territory after the Civil War. He swore oaths of office in 1887, 1889, and 1895, all signed by Judge Parker. J. B. Heady and Ella (Compston) Heady maintained a large house in Watova, Cooweescoowee District, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, that still stands today. There are many stories about J. B.'s adventures as a marshal and as an oil company agent. He wasn't beyond making whiskey during the Prohibition or hiding a fugitive who was a friend of the family. J. B. died in Nowata County, Oklahoma, in 1935. Ella has been described as a very warm, loving and long-suffering woman, simply referred to as "Mother". She is on the Dawes Roll No. 31501, along with her children. and is listed as one-half Delaware blood quantum. Ella died in Nowata County, Oklahoma, in 1949. She and J. B. had nine children:

1. Alba Heady married Chance
2. Frank Heady, named for Frank Dalton
3. Ada Heady
4. Leona Heady, also known as Princess Wyhnemah, was born in Cooweescoowee District, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, the daughter of Ella Eliza Compston and James Bonaparte "J. B." Heady. Leona was a screen actress of some notoriety. Princess Wyhnemah was her screen name. She played in numerous B-movies of the period and was a founding member of the Indian Screen Actors Guild. She apparently was a good friend of Indian actor Jay Silverwheels. She spent most of her life in Southern California pursuing her acting career. She was loving and supportive of her younger siblings. Her brother Euing [James Euing] Heady was much influenced by her and spent much time with her in California. Leona Heady died in California, but was buried in Nowata County, Oklahoma.
5. Oneida Heady
6. Clay (for Henry Clay) Heady
7. James Euing Heady was born in Cooweescoowee District Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, in 1901, the son of Ella Eliza Compston and James Bonaparte Heady. He appears on the Dawes Cherokee Roll, No. 31508, along with his mother Ella and all her other children. He was of dark complexion and very handsome. Toward the end of World War One, Euing enlisted in the army and was attached to a cavalry unit stationed in Southern California. According to oral history, Euing got homesick for a girl in Kansas and rode a horse all the way from California to Kansas. He married an unknown woman in Kansas, but the marriage was later annulled. There was one child of that union. Sometime later he married Violet May Hightower and had two children, Zelda Heady and Edythe Wyvonna Heady. He then married Sylvia Remington Price. They had one child, Arthur Euing Heady who was born 1930 and who died in 1959. He married Pauline Anita Babb (living). They had two children, Laurence D. Heady and Cathy Lynn Heady (both living). He was later estranged from Sylvia, but apparently they didn't divorce. Later, he had a common-law marriage with Eva Althea Young. Karee (Heady) Hada was the only child of that union. Euing role the rodeo circuit for a while, during which time he met Eva Althea. Euing spent much of his life in and out of hospitals while being treated for tuberculosis, and he died in 1949 in a Veterans Administration hospital in Southern California. After hearing of Euing's death, his wife, Sylvia took her own life.

JOHNSON, Thomas.

(The article below was Submitted by Arlene Micucci (Kansas Delaware) from William G. Cutler's History of the State of Kansas, Chicago: 1883, Part 6, Indian History, "Early Missionaries." This article was a part of the Kansas Collection of Books from the University of Kansas.)

> Thomas Johnson, whose history is so intimately connected with the introduction of civilization and Christianity among the Indian tribes lately inhabiting the territory now included in the State of Kansas, was born in Virginia, July 11, 1802. He died by assassination January 2, 1865. Being one of a large family of children whose parents possessed limited means, he was thrown almost entirely upon himself for his own support and education. He came, when comparatively young, to Missouri, where by economy and close study, he prepared himself for the ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was a member. His first labors as a minister, were in the Missouri Conference, where he filled a number of pastoral charges so successfully as to give him considerable prominence among his brother ministers.
> After the Indian Tribes, i. e., the Shawnees, Delawares, Wyandots, Kaws, Kickapoos, etc., were moved from their previous locations, into the territory lying immediately west of the Missouri line, and intersected by the Kaw River, the Methodist Church - a church always ready and willing to do pioneer work - resolved to follow them with its Gospel agencies, and establish missions among them. Some of these tribes, however, especially the Wyandots, had been the subjects of Missionary labor in their old homes. The great body of those Indians, however, except the Wyandots, were in a state of heathenism. The fact that Mr. Johnson was the first one selected to go as a missionary to the then powerful tribe of the Shawnees, is indicative of the high standing he occupied in the eyes of his church. He entered the territory (now Kansas) in the year 1829. Whatever Christian influences may have been brought to bear upon the Shawnees, previous to that time, must have been temporary in their effects. As a tribe they were emphatically heathen, from the chiefs down to their lowest subjects.

Mr. Johnson's heart was in the work, and being naturally a man of great energy, he entered his new field with that enthusiasm and hopefulness which characterize every such man entering upon a new and cherished enterprise. But - as is so often the case - he met with disappointment. It is said that Dr. Carey, the great missionary, labored seven years in India before he made the first convert. Mr. Johnson was not doomed to labor quote so long as Dr. Carey. Ye he did labor long and hard, before he saw any adequate fruits of his labors. Those stolid Indians seemed as impervious to all Gospel influence as is the granite rock to the falling rain. A less determined man would have become discouraged and would probably have quite the field. But Mr. Johnson was not the man to yield to any obstacles less than insuperable. This seeming failure only drove him nearer to the cross, caused his faith to lay hold more firmly upon the divine promises, and prompted him to put forth still greater efforts in his work.

At length the Word so faithfully preached began to "prevail." It not only began but it continued to prevail, and to prevail mightily The chief of the nation was among the first converts. This effectually broke down the opposition. A great revival ensured, until there was formed a large congregation of believers. From this beginning the good work continued to grow. Mr. Johnson early felt the importance of schools for the education of the Indian youth. Indeed, he saw that without schools it would be an almost hopeless task to bring up the tribe to even a medial state of civilization. Accordingly he went to work in that direction, doing the best he could with his limited means. He organized a few small schools in such localities as would best accommodate the children to be taught. But he soon found that schools on this plan were unsatisfactory. Meantime he had conceived the idea of a great central school, not only for the Shawnees, but for such other tribes as might be willing to send their children to it.

About the same time, the U. S. Government, having to pay yearly large amounts to these tribes in the way of annuities, was contemplating the project of devoting part of this annuity fund to the establishing of schools against them. The result was that a contract was entered into between the Government and the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which provision was made for the erection of suitable buildings, and for the boarding, clothing and education of a certain number of Indian children. The church was to do a specified part, and the Government a specified part. The proposed institution was to be a manual labor school, and it was projected on quite a large scale.

It was located but a little more than a mile from the State line of Missouri, and about three miles southwest of the town of Westport, Mo., and seven miles from Kansas City. Three large brick buildings were erected, standing scarcely a stone's throw apart, and so situated, relatively, that straight lines joining them to each other would form a triangle. Near the center of this triangle was a large, never-failing spring of pure water, which yielded a plentiful supply for the purposes of the whole mission. I mention these particulars to show that the planner of this large and unique establishment was a natural-born engineer. Connected with the mission was a carpenter's shop, a blacksmith shop, a shoemaker's shop, a steam grist mill, a saw mill, etc. Such of the boys as desired to learn trades were put into these shops under the tuition of skilled workmen. There was also a large farm of several hundred acres belonging to the mission, where such of the boys as did not care to learn a trade were inducted into the mysteries of the agricultural arts.

The female department was in a separate building from the male. Much of the success of this department (for it was very successful) was due to the remarkable efficiency of the matron whose services Mr. Johnson was fortunate in securing, viz., Mrs. Stateler, wife of the venerable L. R. Stateler, now of Montana. So large a number of girls in one school were never better managed. They were not only well drilled in the common school literature, but they also were skillfully inducted into a knowledge of all such domestic offices and duties as pertain to the sex in the more refined circles of society. Aside from superintending this school, Mr. Johnson was constantly engaged in "labors more abundant" in building up the other missions of which he had charge. After undergoing, for ten or twelve years, those hardships and exposures inseparable from his work, Mr. Johnson's health failed to such an extent that he was compelled to resign his place.

In order that he might be where he could have the care of the best physicians, he moved with his family to Cincinnati. He there spent between one or two years under medical treatment. Having by this time partially recovered his health, but still being unable to re-enter the mission work, he procured a quiet home for himself and family near the town of Fayette, Howard County, Mo. It was there the present writer first made his acquaintance. Meantime, the Indian Manual Labor School had been under the care of several Superintendents in succession - all good men. But the friends of the school felt the great loss it had all the while sustained, in being deprived of the superior administrative ability of its first Superintendent.

Mr. Johnson's health having now recovered, he was prevailed upon by his brethren to re-enter the work. Accordingly, in the fall of 1847, he was re-appointed Superintendent of the school and missions in the tribes before names. On his return to the school, he found many young men and women among the pupils who, having grown up in the school, had advanced through the common school branches, and who were desirous of obtaining a knowledge of the higher branches. This suggested to Mr. Johnson the policy of organizing an academic department for the benefit of these advanced pupils. During a visit which he soon after made to Fayette, he persuaded, the present writer (it did not require much persuasion) to resign his place in Howard High School, and go with him and take charge of his contemplated academy. This academy, or academical department, was opened simultaneously with the regular session of the school in September, 1848. This new departure in the history of the school - though undertaken rather as an experiment - proved a decided success. Several scores of young gentlemen and young ladies from "across the line," and some even from the distant parts of Missouri, possessing limited means, and yet desiring to enjoy the advantages of a classical school, were admitted into this department. This brought whites and Indians into close competition in the race for knowledge, and gave rise to an emulation both laudable and salutary. And I just say, touching the capabilities of the two races, that those Indian scholars whose previous advantages had been equal to those of their white competitors, were not a white behind them in this contest for the laurels of scholarship. The success of this department, as well as that of the whole school, I attribute largely to the able management of our Superintendent. While at the head of that institution, he was the right man in the right place. In the first place he possessed strong, practical, common sense. He was a good judge of human nature, and quick to take in the situation in every emergency. A man of deep and tender sympathies, yet he was most firm in his adherence to principle.

This combination of qualities gave him an administrative ability unsurpassed by that of any man I ever knew. He had taken care to have all the departments of his school well manned, and to have the whole establishment thoroughly organized and reduced to the most perfect system. The result was that, though there were so many departments to claim his attention, and so many different interest to be conserved, yet there was no friction or collision of parts in the system. The whole moved on so beautifully and harmoniously as to remind one (it often reminded me) of the facile movements of a thoroughly organized and well drilled army. Under such management, the school could not have been otherwise than prosperous. Nor did it ease to prosper until the tribal relations of the Indians began to be interrupted in regard to their lands.

The Government first buying part of their lands, and afterward giving them the privilege of disposing of their remaining "head rights," - this soon threw the Indians into a state of unrest and confusion which had a detrimental effect upon the school. He kept his school open, however, as long as he could with any profit to the Indians. But when they determined to dispose of their "head rights" and move South, he yielded to the necessity and closed the school. He bought a home two miles east of the town of Westport, Mo., to which he moved in 1858, expecting to spend the rest of his days in retirement, and in such benevolent labors as he might be able to bestow. And while he lived there, and after what may be called the close of his public life, there was no man in this Western country that possessed in a higher degree the confidence and esteem of those who knew him.

As to his death, it is necessary that we premise a few particulars, in order properly to understand the cause and "manner of his taking off." Mr. Johnson was a Southern man, born and reared in the South. His ancestors were Southern, and most of his associates and associations were Southern. Under such circumstances, it was but natural that he should entertain the prevailing sentiments of his people, and sympathize with them in what was called their grievances. Hence it was that in the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844, and in the first Territorial Legislature of Kansas, of which he was a member, and in the United States Congress where he had a seat as a Territorial delegate, and wherever else he was called upon to act in a public capacity, he viewed the various questions that came before him from a Southern standpoint. And he was sincere and conscientious in his positions.

But when our national troubles culminated, and every man had to decide, between Union and secession, Mr. Johnson's patriotism proved superior to all sectional, social and even personal ties, and he took his stand firmly on the side of the Union. I had opportunity to know his real, heartfelt sentiments upon this subject, and I am fully convinced that there was no Union man in the country who was more sincere in the position he had taken, or more conscious of the rectitude of his purpose, than was Thomas Johnson. Yet the reader can easily conceive to what terrible hazards this position exposed him. It was so in the case of hundreds of others, on both sides, in this bushwhacking country.

On the night of the 2d day of January - a bitter cold night - in 1865, after Mr. Johnson and his family were all in their beds, and most of them asleep, a gang of armed men rode up to the front gate and uttered several loud halloos. Mr. Johnson, hearing them, went into the hall, opened the front door, and asked them what was wanted. They said they wanted to be directed the way to Kansas City. He gave them the desired directions. Meantime, some of them dismounted, passed through the gate and approached the house, saying they wanted a drink of water. Mr. Johnson told them where the cistern was at the side of the house where they would find conveniences for drinking and invited them to help themselves. Just then he perceived their evil intent, for they were drawing their pistols and advancing toward him rapidly.

He immediately sprang back into the hall, closed the door, and was in the act of locking it, when they fired at him. Their aim was so well taken that, although the closed door was between him and them, one of the balls passing through the door, must have gone through or very near his heart. He immediately began to sink down, still holding on the knob of the door. His faithful wife, who had been all the while standing near him, caught him in her arms, and as he sank down, she sat upon the floor and placed his head in her lap. He spoke not a word. He only uttered on or two slight groans, and in a very few moments cased to breathe. The assassins continued to shoot into the house, not only in front but on every side. For, by this time, nearly the whole gang had come in and were taking part in the assault. They were, as yet, uncertain whether they had accomplished their object in killing Mr. Johnson; for Mrs. Johnson had not allowed a lamp to be lit, or an audible word to be spoken. The assassins, then changing their tactics, set fire to the house. As soon as Mrs. Johnson saw what they had done, she immediately ran out with a bucket of water, right before them, and put out the fire; then she returned into the house unmolested, except that the bullets from their guns and pistols were whizzing around her! This was repeated. For it was not long before they again set the house on fire at another point; and Mrs. Johnson, with her bucket of water, again faced the assassins, and put out the fire. Worn out and exhausted almost to fainting, Mrs. Johnson finally told them they had killed her husband, and, as they had accomplished what she supposed to be their object, she begged them to cease from their assault upon her defenseless house and her heart-broken family. They soon after left the place. The body of Mr. Johnson was borne to the cemetery of the Indian Mission Sunday School, and was buried, not only beside the departed ones of his own dear family, but in the midst of a multitude of departed Christian Indians, who, through his instrumentality had been brought into Christ's Kingdom and made sons and daughters of God.

Since then his noble wife has been called away, and now rest by his side. Of her it may be said, that, so far as cool self-possession and invincible courage are concerned, the history of the sex furnishes few examples more signal and illustrious of genuine heroism. Thomas Johnson possessed the elements of true greatness. I do not mean the greatness measured by a man's fame which is to often made the standard. Many a man whose name is scarcely known to the public, is more truly great than are many of those whose fame has made the circuit of the world. The former is greatness after the Divine type - consisting in purity of heart and in a life spent in good works. Its duration is eternal. The latter is greatness after the human type. It is ephemeral and will have no existence beyond this fleeting life. Of the former type was the character of the Hon. Thomas Johnson.

Mr. Johnson was married, in 1829, to Miss Sarah T. Davis, of Clarksville, Mo. She was a woman of rare natural endowments, and possessed of the courage of which true heroines as well as heroes are made. Years before her marriage, nearly her entire family had been butchered at Ruttle's stockade, during the Indian war, in which Tecumseh, a Shawnee chief, was the leading spirit. The young bride went immediately after her marriage to live among the wild and savage tribe that had been the terror of her girlhood. She became, by the hidden but conquering power of her Christian virtues, well-nigh a queen among the descendants of the wild men who had slaughtered her ancestors.

The children of Thomas and Sarah T. (Davis) Johnson were twelve in number, of whom five died in infancy. Those who still survive, or lived to mature age, are: Alexander S., Land Commissioner of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, Topeka, Kan.; Eliza S. (Mrs. John B. Wornall), Wes[t]port, Jackson Co., Mo., deceased; Laura L. (Mrs. F. A. Waterman, Chicago, Ill.); Andrew Monroe, Wes[t]port, Mo.; Cora E. (Mrs. H. W. Fuller, Richmond, Va.); William M., Clay County, Mo., and Edna (Mrs. W. J. Anderson, Kansas City, Mo.

JOURNEYCAKE, Charles -

Reverend Charles Journeycake in 1854 at Age Thirty-Seven (http://home.swbell.net/gmeador/journey.jpg)

Lenape name Neshapanecumin or Neshapanacumin, a prominent minister and leader of the Delaware Nation, was born on 16 December 1817, married Jane Socia/Sosha, and died 3 January 1894. He was a Signer as a Delegate 6 May 1854 Treaty at Washington (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 618), a Participant in the 2 July 1861 Treaty at Leavenworth City, Kansas (Ibid., p. 823), a Signer of the 4 July 1866 Treaty at the Delaware Agency, Kansas as an Assistant Chief (Ibid., p. 942), a Signer of the 8 April 1867 Treaty at Washington as the Principal Chief [What Treaty is this? Source?] Charles Journeycake was ordained a pastor of a church in Indian territory (Oklahoma) in 1872. (Farley, 1) Sam Berrett@aol.com says that there is considerable information about him at the Southern Baptist Historical Library and Archives in Tennessee. He says that Charles was the first Delaware baptized in the State of Kansas and that his mother, Sally, was a very fervent Christian. Among his other accomplishments, he translated the four gospels of the Bible into Delaware. One of "some prominent men among the Delaware Indians in what is now Leavenworth County. [KS] in 1844" (Remsburg*, p.) All treaties were between the Delaware Tribe/Nation and the United States. He was perhaps the Principal Chief from 1865 to 1872. In 1877 he succeeded James Conner as the Principal Chief of the Delaware. He was the last Chief of the Delaware Nation. Charles Journeycake died 3 January 1894. (Undocumented) (Johnnycake, Jonneycake, and Johneycake, etc.) Lenape name Neshepanahcumin was born 16 December 1817 around the Upper Sandusky in Ohio and he died in Allewe, Indian Territory 3 January 1894. Charles Ketchum had Delaware Registration No. 933.

He married Jane Sosha in 1837. She was born February 1821 and died 13 January 1903. (Jackie Ernst jernst@yahoo.com)* The father of Charles Journeycake, according to Rev. S. M. Mitchell, was a "full-blooded Indian" who married Sally (Castleman) Journeycake. Her parents were an Indian from a "Delaware settlement, on the upper Sandusky [Ohio]... who had traded much with the white people, and who married a white woman by the name of Castleman [emphasis added]. " Sally spoke English and several Indian dialects and was an expert interpreter. She was born about 1797 and died in the Indian Territory [present Oklahoma] on 6 February 1873. Charles Journeycake was born those those parents on 16 December 1817. (S. M. Mitchell, The Indian Chief, Journeycake. (Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society, 1895, p. 20.) Mitchell describes Charles's early life as follows:

In 1827 we find them still in Ohio, but making preparation for their removal to the West. A this time a fatal disease broke out among their horses, and all died except two, belonging to Mr. Journeycake...Late in 1827, Mr. Journeycake took his family some fifty miles west to spend the winter with the Shawnees, and still later penetrated twenty miles farther into the dense forest for a winter's hunt. While in this winter retreat his wife, Mrs. Sally Journeycake, the interpreter, was taken violently ill...[Here follows a story of her conversion to Christianity] [p. 22] The son, Charles, was no ten years old. In 1828 the long, slow march began from Sandusky to the new reservation away to the bank of the Missouri River...Sally Journeycake alone of all that company of dusky exiles knew what it was like to trust in the Christian's God. Around their campsites the Indians would dance their war [p. 23] dances or engage in the wild orgies [Come on now! Editor] of their native life, but she alone stood aloof from all their revelries...Her mother-eye could not fail to see that her son Charles was deeply impressed by her Christian deportment and ardent hopes were inspired in her heart...This journey to the West seems to have taken about a year. There was a tarrying of a part, if not all, of the band for a short time in Indiana on White River, and another stop, and probably an encampment for the winter, in Southwest Missouri. So the Delawares arrived at their Kansas destination in the spring of 1829. (Ibid., pp. 22-24)

Sally (Castleman) Journeycake, Mother of Charles Journeycake (1797-1873)

An incident that took place upon their arrival at the Kansas River illustrates the courageous spirit of Chief Journeycake, and at the same time affords a view of that providence which was preparing for him the career which has distinguished him as a man. On reaching the spot where they were to cross the Kansas River, it was found greatly swollen by recent rains. It was necessary to take a number of horses across the river by causing them to swim. The young brave, then less than [p. 26] twelve years old, mounted the leader and fearlessly plunged into the swollen river.] Reaching the opposite bank in safety, he says, "I noticed a man with a white hat, who proved to be a white man, looking at me" The stranger approached the young rider and addressed him kindly in the few Indian words he had already learned. This stranger was I. D. Blanchard who, with the noted missionary to the Indians, Isaac McCoy, was there already to start a mission among the Delawares and related tribes in this new Indian settlement about forming. This was the beginning of a friendship often appreciatively mentioned by Mr. Journeycake in after years. His mother, Mrs. Sally Journeycake, in 18931, became the first interpreter for the missionaries in the Territory of Kansas...(Ibid, p.p. 25-26)

Arrangements were made at once upon their arrival in 1829, to begin mission work on their Kansas Reservations. As might be expected, progress at first was very slow. I have found no record of organized mission work earlier than 1833 when it appears that the Baptist General Convention had an established mission there. In the meantime, Charles Journeycake fully accepted Christ, [p. 28] and in 1833, was baptized by a missionary by the name of Likins. He [Journeycake] was the first Delaware baptized in the present century and, except his mother, the only Christian of his tribe. In 1835, his father being also converted, father and mother were baptized. This was the beginning and nucleus of a Baptist church among the Delaware indians...It seems highly probable that Charles Journeycake was the first person baptized in what is now the State of Kansas... Mr. Journeycake began preaching when still a young man. He preached in his own language and in the Shawnee, Wyandotte, Seneca, and Ottawa dialects. He was a great traveler, ranging over wide areas of the vast plains of the West, attending Indian councils, and engaging in his favorite pastime of hunting. There is evidence that he went everywhere preaching the gospel...His friends wish him to be ordained to the ministry in these early days in Kansas; but he seems to have had no special ambition for its honors. (Ibid., pp. 28-30)

In 1837 [May 1838, p.85], at the age of twenty, Mr. Journeycake was married to Jane Sosha [Socia], a Delaware maid about sixteen years of age. Of her family little more can be learned than that she was born in February, 1821[p. 7]...Her father, Sylvester Sosha, was a Frenchman, her mother a Delaware Indian. [p. 85] There were eight daughters and two sons who died in early childhood. The daughters were all married, were all converted, and became members of the Baptist church, and five of them are yet living [in 1890]. Some of them were educated in our Baptist institution at Granville, Ohio, and all are women of culture, and efficient workers in the church. ..It is certain that Mr. Journeycake and his family must have been the important factors in the religious life of the Delawares during that period, for when, after their removal to the Indian Territory, they organized the Delaware Baptist Church, on Lightning Creek, of eleven constituent members, seven were members of his family, viz., himself and wife, his mother, and four daughters. (Ibid., pp. 32-33) Jane Sosha Journeycake died at her home at Al-lu-we, Indian Territory January 13, . lacking one month of seventy-two years of age. [p. 85]. The inscription on her tombstone reads, "None knew her but to love her." Charles Journeycake died on 3 January 1894. (Ibid., p. 7)

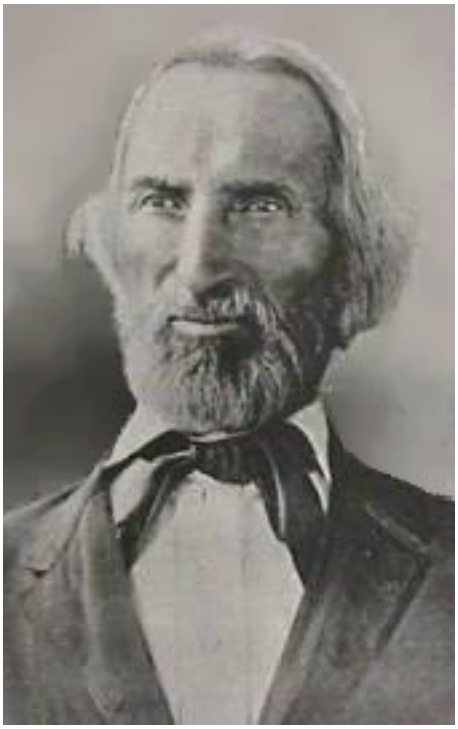
In 1854 Mr. Journeycake made his first visit to Washington, when he was thirty-seven years of age. It was one year prior to his becoming chief of the Wolf Clan, and seven years before he became principal chief. It was at this time that "the influx of white settlers into Kansas was so great that became evident that the Indian reservations there could not be kept intact, and the Delawares made a large cession of their lands to the United States, to be restored to the public domain." It was doubtless about this treaty of cession that he made the trip to Washington. It was the beginning of the leading part borne by him in the affairs of his tribe with the government, which continued till the end of his life. He visited the capital not less than twenty-four times in the interest of his people, usually remaining for weeks, and conferring with leading me in Congress and in the several departments, who he enlisted in behalf of the interests of which he was in charge, and whose friendship he won and retained. [Ibid., p. 65]



In 1855 Mr. Journeycake was chosen one of the chiefs of his tribe--chief of the Wolf Clan...In 1861 Mr. Journeycake became the principal chief of his tribe; so that he stood in that relation during the trying scenes of the war and the incidents that led up to the abandonment of their valuable homes and their tribal government, and the removal again to a new and un tried country. Of his qualifications for that position we can best judge from the knowledge gained of him later in life. But there was in his make-up undoubted indications that he was a born leader. His whole life was distinguished [p. 45]for courage and undaunted bravery. These were combined with a mildness and kindness of disposition that made him one to be trusted and leaned upon. He was naturally of a very reticent disposition, and always spoke with great deliberation, and his influence over his people was very great. Even after the office of chief had ceased, he was still and to the very last the respected adviser in all matters of moment. His home was [p. 48] the meeting-place for consultation, and his hospitality was ungrudging and without stint. (Ibid., pp. 45-49)

[On 23 September 1872] a council convened for the ordination of Charles Journeycake. Fifty-five years of age and abundant in labors. it was fitting that he should be set apart to the gospel ministry and as pastor of the Delaware Baptist Church. Rev. J. G. Pratt, from the old mission in Kansas, Rev. J. B. Jones, of Tahlequah, long a missionary to the Cherokees, and Rev. G. J. Johnson, then of St. Louis, Mo., were present to conduct the services. [The Rev. Johnson of him said, "At the time I first met him he was about fifty years old, [p. 55], slightly gray, and showing age--tall in stature, erect, and of thoughtful, dignified mien. His looks did not misrepresent him. He was intelligent, even well read, ballasted with excellent common sense and good judgment...His residence was a neat frame structure, pleasantly situated in an ample lawn, amid abundant shrubbery and shade, and in the center of a vast tract of land that he regarded as his own, and on which were feeding great herds of his own cattle...An ample library of the best books, the latest periodicals, and the musical instruments that were conspicuous, at once assured you that you were in the abode of intelligence and culture. (Ibid., pp. 55-57)

Our informant Jackie Ernst informs that, "I am Lenape (Delaware), Reg. #1010. My great gramma, Carrie Mae (Everett) Bratcher (Pa-Tah-Ta-Ace) was adopted by the Chief when she was left an orphan at a young age. My gr-gramma in not mentioned in any book, as it was Delaware custom for the lead clan to take in orphans; it wasn't a legal situation that needed to involve the white folks. She was eventually raised by a cousin once he got old enough to care for her....Matilda Journeycake was buried in our Bratcher Cemetery, which was relocated to Nowata Reinternment Cemetery. (Oklahoma) Three Secondine's were buried in the Bratcher C[emetery]... and reinterred at Nowata. Many Journeycake's are buried in the Armstrong Cemetery, also reinterred at Nowata, including Nancy Johney Cake."

[We will add additional data on Charles Journeycake and his family. If you are an ancestor and would like to add a family group sheet or a Descendancy chart for him, we will do so. Editor]

His obituary contained in Ruby Cranor, Some Old Delaware Obituaries, p. 40:

> Chief Charles Journeycake famous Delaware leader and preacher was the last official chief of the Delaware tribe. (Although there is no obituary on record for him, we know he died in 1894 and was buried in the Armstrong Cemetery south of Nowata and then when the Oologah Dam was built the entire cemetery with several others that were in the path of the lake were moved to the south edge of the Nowata Cemetery.

Chief Charles Journeycake signed the treaty of the Delaware-Cherokee agreement of 1867 and led his people to their new homes in the Indian Territory in 1868. He organized the Baptist church in Alluwee in 1871 and was instrumental in building a number of other churches in this locality including the very first church in this vicinity, the of=d Silver Lake Baptist Church just south of town. He had completed a hymn book in the Delaware tongue and in his later life relayed to his successor in his ministry, Reverend S. H. Mitchell, the events of his life and the story of his people.

He was the father of thirteen children, eight daughters living to adulthood/ Among these were Mrs. J. H. (Nannie) Bartles founders of Bartlesville, and Mrs. Mary E. Armstrong who became one of the community's most prominent women, built and occupied the residence on Johnstone Avenue which is now the YMCA...Most of Chief Journeycake's daughters attended the Baptists school at Granville, Ohio and the Female seminar at Tahlequah.

Other than the two daughters mentioned above, Chief Journeycake left three other daughters: Mrs. J. C. Emeline) Campbell, Mrs. Charles W. (Adeline) Merritt. and Mrs. Anna E. Armstrong; at least 25 grandchildren and a host of friends and relatives. He was preceded in death by his wife, Jane Socia Journeycake, two daughters, Rachel Ann Turner and Lucy Jane Armstrong; 3 infant daughters, 2 infant sons; and 14 grandchildren.

JOURNEYCAKE, Isaac - Data to be added. Isaac Journeycake was married to Nancy Ketchum, Lenape name Aupahmundaqua or Aquamdageockwe. Researcher Vickie Wilkins

JOURNEYCAKE, Nannie M.--She was born 28 August 1843, the daughter of Chief Charles Journeycake and Jane Socia. Nannie married first on 2 March 1860 at the Delaware Baptist Mission Lucius Bolles Pratt, the son of Reverend John Gill Pratt and Olivia Evans. Their children were Lavonia (Nonie) I. Pratt who was No. 25 on the 1862 Allotment List, Ella May Pratt, and Ida Florence (Pratt) Paul. These three daughters, and their mother Nannie M. Pratt, were four of the five persons who were added to the Delaware Tribe of Indian Roll in 1951. After the death of Lucius Bolles Pratt, Nannie married Jacob H. Bartles for who Bartlesville, Oklahoma was named. Researchers: Thomas Hahn and Vickie Wilkins.

KETCHUM, Betsy Wilaquenaho (See WILAQUENAHO, Betsy.) Wilaquenaho has been associated with the Ketchum name. We have no hard evidence of whether or not she was a family member, was she adopted by the Ketchum family, or did she adopt the Ketchum name for some other reason? We are including her name here in the index for the convenience of those who have seen a record listing her name as Ketchum with no further explanation. Researchers and Descendants: Thomas Hahn and Vickie Wilkins.

KETCHUM, Charles - (From "Methodist Missions Among the Indians in Kansas, Kansas State Historical Society" Historical Collections, Vol. IX, 1905-1905, p. 206):

> A prominent man among the Delawares was Charles Ketchum, for many years a preacher in the Methodist church. In appearance he was large and portly, of manly appearance and address. He was illiterate, but a man of good intellect and a fluent talker. When the church divided, in 1845, he adhered to the Northern branch, built a church himself, and kept the remnant of the flock together (Outposts of Zion, p. 296.) He was settled on a good farm and received appointments from the conference regularly. He entered the ministry in 1850 and was a regular member of the Kansas conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. Joab Spencer writes: Charles and James Ketchum have both interpreted for me. Charles interpreted a sermon for me at a Delaware camp-meeting that resulted in from fifteen to twenty conversions. He was a notable Christian character, such as Bluejacket." Charles Ketchum died on the Delaware reserve, July 20, 1860, aged forty-nine years.

KETCHUM, Captain - There has been considerable discussion about the "true" name. role, and position of Capt. Ketchum. particularly as to whether or not his name included Jack of John. Deborah Nichols-Ledermann has this to say about the matter:

> 1. His name was Capt. Ketchum and he had no Christian name such as John or Jack. His Lenape name was Tawhelalen, as stated in the treaties he signed. Rodney Staab, Fay Arellano, and I all agreed on this as being true.
> 2. John Ketchum, who died in Kansas about the same time as Capt. Ketchum, was a totally different person. I told this to Fay Arellano, who found his military record and agreed was a much younger man. I have met a man from Kansas whose property once belonged to John Ketchum. John Ketchum and his wife were buried there on his land. Capt. Ketchum is buried at White Church. This was also the John Ketchum who accompanied the Delaware to Washington for a treaty and visited his relatives in Indiana. Fay Arellano, Rodney Staab, and I all agreed this was not Capt. Ketchum.

3. Tahleockwe was the Lenape name for Melinda Wilcoxen. Rodney Staab told me that Pearl Morgan made a mistake in his interview notes and attributed the name to Capt. Ketchum. I have seen her Delaware name as Tweleniqud in one newspaper source, but I agree with Rodney [Staab] that it was his phonetic version of Melinda's name. The "-kwe" or the "qud" is a phonetic version of "qua." the Lenape for "woman." Capt. Ketchum was certainly not named anything that ended with woman. (Deborah Nichols-Ledermann)

KETCHUM, Elizabeth--See Mekinges.

KETCHUM, George - In an interview by Field Worker J. R. Carselowy, on 9 June 1937, at Vinita, Oklahoma, Sol C. Ketchum, son of George Ketchum, said of his grandfather, George Ketchum. "He also lived on the Delaware Reservation in Pennsylvania, but died among the Delawares on the Caney River near Bartlesville, at the age of 100 years." The following item on the Ketchum Family was taken from The History of Craig County: Its People and Places, Vol. I, pp. 439-440. The publishing data are not known at this time. The article is entitled "Ketchum Family," F353:

George Ketchum was born in 1787. About 1807 he married a woman by the name of Lucy (last name unknown). Lucy and George Ketchum were the parents of five children: Lewis, born 1808, died 1904; Elizabeth, born 1810, died 1866; Charles, born 1811, died 1860; Mary, born 1814, died 1872; Jacob, born 1816, died 1866.

After Lucy Ketchum's death, Gorge married a woman named Sarah A. To this union three children were born: James Ketchum, born 1818, died 1890; William Riley Ketchum, born 1827, died 1880; and David B., born 1831. The Ketchums were full blood Delaware Indians, and we know that James, the sixth child of George Ketchum was born in Indiana, but when Ketchum led the Delaware tribesmen to Indian Territory [present Oklahoma], they came from Kansas. After coming to Indian Territory, as the Ketchum children grew up and married they scattered, and settled in various parts of the Cherokee Nation.

Lewis, at age 59 years, and James, age 49 years settled along the Grand River. James Ketchum was an outstanding leader of his tribesmen. He was a Methodist preacher known for his fine character and he was a brilliant orator in the Delaware language and in English. Rev, Ketchum was a man of considerable means when he came to this country. He purchased a large two-story brick mansion that had been built by Johnson and Martin Thompson before the Civil War. The bricks that the houses were built from were made by Thompson's black slaves. There were two large brick homes belonging to each of the Thompson brothers, one on the south side, one on the north side of Grand River. The Ketchums settled in this location, about 3 miles south of present day Ketchum, one mile south of old Ketchum.

Lewis Ketchum was married to Elizabeth Ziegles. To thus union eleven children were born: John born 1843, died 899; Charles, [p. 439] born 1845, died 1868; Mary, born 1847, died 1881; Jane O., born 1850, died 1881; Barbara, born 1852, died 1894; Simon, born 1855, died 1894; Silas, born 1857, 1901; Lucinda, born 1858, died 1869 at the age of 18 years old; Solomon "Sol", born 1860, do not have date of death, but he is buried in the Lewis Ketchum family burial plot, 4 miles west and 1 1/2 miles north of Ketchum. Hatty Ann born in 1868, died in 1869. Lewis Ketchum started his family when he was 35 years old, but made up for lost time. He was 60 years old when his last child was born.

James Ketchum married a full blood Delaware woman by the name of Loa Tai O Qua, who was born in 1823. They had five children: Hester Ann, born 1849, died in 1942 at age of 93; Virginia A., born 1852, died1898; Mary E., born 1855, died at age 18; Thomas E., born 1856, died 1928; and Amanda Ketchum, born 1859, died 1872, age 13 years. After Loa Tai Oqua's death, Rev. James Ketchum married Elizabeth Swannock Connor, born 1827 (died 1925). Elizabeth had one son by a former marriage to Alexander Connor [Delaware?]. James and Elizabeth Ketchum, were the parents of four children: Casandra , born 1862, died 1863 at age 7 year; James, Jr., born 1866, died in 1886 at age 20 years; (both are buried at Ketchum Cemetery);

Jane Ann Ketchum, born 1870, died 1947; and Lucinda, named after Lewis Ketchum's daughter who died five years preceding her birth in 1872, died 1947.

James and Lewis were half brothers, but they were close. Lewis was 10 years older than James, and between the two of them they had 21 children to carry on the Ketchum name. James Ketchum and his son-in-law, T. Wyman Thompson, husband of Jane Ann, were instrumental in establishing the first post office at Ketchum, which was named for James Ketchum.

"Ketchum, James and Lewis Children," F534

Jane Ann Ketchum, eight child of Rev. James and Elizabeth Ketchum was born in 1870. She married T. Wyman. They lived in the brick mansion built by Martin Thompson (thought to be no relation of T. Wyman Thompson) on the South side of the Grand River. T. Wyman and Jane Ann Ketchum were the parents of Clara Ann Thompson, born in 1888; George Lee Thompson, born in 1862 and died 1960; and James C. Thompson, born in 1892.

Lucinda Ketchum, youngest daughter of James and Elizabeth Ketchum, married W. H. Ward on September 19, 1889. To this union five children were born, they were: Connie A. Ward, born in 1889 [?]; Elizabeth and Lisa M. Ward born in 1895; Grace Ward in 1896 and died in infancy, and Jananna [?--a nickname for Jane Ann?] Ward; (Nowlica [?] Ward born in 1899. W. H., often referred to as H. Ward and Lucinda lived in the brick manor on the north side of Grand River. In 1904 a tornado devastated the country as it traveled along Grand River. It almost cleaned the country of houses and several lives were taken. It ripped through the brick mansion and the Wards thought it best not to try to rebuild so they sold the brick to anyone who wanted them. Several of the houses throughout the area were built using brick from the mansion. One was for Elizabeth Ketchum, another was the brick bungalow built by Henry and Stella E. (Careslowry) Crouch, six miles west of Ketchum.

Ketchum was not immune to outlaws and rough characters and T. Wyman Thompson and his son George acted as lawmen for the area. T. Wyman and his brother Riley Thompson were both U.S. Marshalls. T. Wyman had a sister named Belle who married Jane Ketchum. [There is something wrong with the text here. I am checking. Editor] Thompson's half-brother, Thomas E.

"Tom" Ketchum. Tom and Belle (Thompson) Ketchum had four children: Eva Ketchum who married Henry Ward Trout; Willie Ketchum; Wyman Ketchum; and Lucy Ketchum who married O. L. "Res" Epperson.

An interesting finding about one of Lewis and Elizabeth Ketchum's sons, Sol. Solaman [Solomon] C. "Sol" (born 1860) was at one time Champion Indian Boxer of the United States. He was also sparring partner to John L. Sullivan, heavyweight boxing champion of the world from 1889 to 1892. Sol Ketchum married Anna Couch and they were the parents of Charlie, Jim, Mavis, and Bruce Ketchum. They lived four miles west and one and one-half miles north of Ketchum.

When the county road was being built by his home, plans were to build the road straight through., thus Sol would have to move his home but Sol had different ideas. He balked. As a niece described him as a wiry little man, she said, "He reminded me of a bantam rooster getting ready to jump." Needless to say the road curved to the west around the yard fence. As you approach the home it appears to be sitting in the middle of the road. It is the only curve in that road for miles.

KETCHUM, John (or Jack) -- See the discussion about John Ketchum and Captain Ketchum under the latter's entry above. Deborah Nichols-Ledermann had this to say about John (or Jack) Ketchum

> John Ketchum, who died in Kansas about the same time as Capt. Ketchum, was a totally different person. I told this to Fay Arellano, who found his military record and agreed was a much younger man. I have met a man from Kansas City whose property once belonged to John Ketchum. John Ketchum and his wife were buried on his land. Capt. Ketchum is buried at White Church. This was also the John Ketchum who accompanied the Delaware to Washington for a treaty and visited his relatives in Indiana. Fay Arellano, Rodney Staab, and I all agreed this was not Capt. Ketchum.

KETCHUM, Louis or Lewis -- Louis Ketchum was born 1808 near Sandusky, Ohio. (1862 census and tombstone data from James Tyler and Alice T. Timmons, Our People and Where They Rest n.p., 1969), p. 54 covering the Ketchum Cemetery) According to the 1875 Kansas State Census, Wyandotte County Quindaro Township, Family No. 224 , he was born in Indiana. His name is also used and cited as Lewis. He died on 28 March 1904 and was buried in the privately-owned Ketchum Cemetery that he established in Craig County, Indian Territory (SE-NE-NE of Section 10, Township 24, Range 20). His father was George Ketchum, Lenape name Kakeewha. His mother was Nancy, family name not known.

Solomon Ketch, had this to say about his father, Lewis Ketchum, in a 9 June 1937 at

Vinita, Oklahoma by Field Worker J. R. Carselowy:

My father was born in 1808 on the Delaware Reservation in Ohio, near Sandusky. While my father was growing up, he lived near Sandusky, Ohio; from there to White River, near Springfield, Missouri; and from there to Wyandotte [County]. Kansas. My father lived to be 98 [?] years old, and died on his allotment ten miles southeast of Vinita, Craig County, in 1904.

My father, a three-quarter blood Delaware Indian, could talk very little English in his younger days, and talked brokenly up to the time of his death. I believe that he was the greatest hunter and trapper that the United States has ever produced. He was very venturesome in his young days and started out selling furs to the famous Choteau brothers at St. Louis when he was a mere boy. He began learning the use of traps and guns early in the nineteenth century, and made it his life's study. His most valuable fur was the beaver, and he made a specialty of trapping beavers.

The Chateaus later established a trading post at West Port, Missouri, about six miles south of the present site of Salina, Oklahoma, where a stone marker was recently placed commemorating the establishment of the first trading post in the Indian Territory

Nothing could suit my father more than the exploring of new territory. and all alone he followed the trading posts down into Indian Territory long before he came here to settle years afterward. Mustering a herd of five pack ponies at Salina, he set out to the southwest, exploring all the small rivers and streams, and finally winding up at Fort Worth, Texas, but finding very few beaver. He had just about made up his mind that he was too far south for this kind of game when the unexpected happened.

It was about 1848 and General Winfield Scott with a large army of government soldiers. was marching from the north, down the "Old Military Trail" into Mexico, where the United States was at war with Mexico. They captured my father and against his protest made a government scout of him and sent him on ahead of the army as one of the government scouts. He remained with them five days. bit on the night of the fifth day out he slipped away and came back to where the Grand River empties into the Arkansas. It was here he decoded to find out where the big river went, and he set out to the northwest, following the Arkansas River, and trapping as he went.

On his trip to the northwest, my father encountered many wild tribes of Indians. He tried to evade them. They would take after him in great droves but being armed with a good rifle my y father said they quit chasing him after he had shot one or two of them, as they were armed with only bows and arrows.

Others of the tribes tried to be friendly. but were very treacherous and mean. He stayed among them for nearly two years, and learned to talk some of their languages. One tribe offered to bet him a pony that he could not throw their champion wrestler, whom they called "the devil.:" He bet them and threw the devil, and won their pony. They then wanted to bet him three ponies that he could not out-run their champion foot racer. "How far?" asked Father. "Three miles," replied the Indians. "Horses can't run that far. I run two hundred yards - five horses," my father told them, and bet them, and [they] lost their five ponies

This made they so mad that they tried to slip up on him, that night and kill him, but he saw they and slipped away, and went to a government post several miles away and reported the loss of his guns, traps, and furs. The soldiers went with him the next day and got his things, and told him that he had better get out of there as those were bad Indians and would kill anyone, not a member of their tribe. They sent soldiers to accompany my father out of the danger zone. He went back to Wyandotte, Kansas, where he organized a company of went Delawares and went back to where he had been, thinking with twenty men armed with rifles, the whole Indian tribe could be whipped.

The Indians seemed to be friendly when they got back and my father and his party trapped for some time and entered into all kinds of jests with the Indian tribes. They measured their great men by acts of bravery, and it was possibly this that brought on more trouble with the Indians. To beat them at their own game my father slipped up on a buffalo while it was asleep, and cut the buffalo's tail off. He showed the Indians the tail as evidence that he had performed the feat. They seemed to be very jealous of this feat. and that night they attacked my father's camp and bushwhacked and killed every man in his party. He escaped by crawling on his stomach until he was out of their reach and the next day made his way back to West Port, Kansas, where the Choteau's were still located, and retired to a farm in Wyandotte, Kansas, where he lived until 1880.

In 1880, he went before the National Council at Talequah and paid $287.00 per head for an equal right with the Cherokees, and the following year, in 1881, he settled on a farm ten miles southeast of Vinita, near the town of Ketchum, where two of his brothers were living. They were James and George Ketchum, and it was from these three brothers that the town of Ketchum received its name.

When my father was hunting and trapping in the west he kept three buffalo robes with him, with which he made his bed at night, and he said that no matter how cold the weather, he could keep warm.

When he settled in Craig County, then Delaware District, Indian Territory, there was plenty of game, and he kept right on hunting. His principal meat while hunting in the west was buffalo, but since moving to the Territory he had to content himself with deer, turkey, prairie chicken and the smaller game. However, he said that he had tasted every kind of meat there was, but the worst meat he ever tried was wolf. As amusement for his old days he got himself a pack of fox hounds and chased deer,, fox, and wolves. He loved the music that a pack of dogs made and usually kept one small dog with a fine voice that he said was his "tenor" singer.

To catch a deer quickly, he got himself two big wolf hounds (greyhounds). These two dogs would catch the deer on short run, until the old hunter and his fox hounds caught up, when the deer would either be shot or the dogs would kill him.

My father had an old mule, that he rode during his last hunting days, that could swim any stream and if the deer plunged into the river and swam across, his dogs and the old mule with its rider would plunger right after him. Like the hounds, he would clean out of country to get a deer and carry the deer back behind his saddle

On the day he died, he made a date with Dr. B. F. Fortner, of Vinita, to go squirrel hunting with him as soon as he got well. He is now sleeping in the happy hunting ground where there is no wild tribe to disturb him. He is buried on the old homestead where he settled in 1881, ten miles southeast of Vinita.

My father lived to be 96 years old.... in 1904. (The interview was a part of the Indian Pioneer History Project for Oklahoma.)

According to an affidavit on 27 January 1900 at Vinita, Oklahoma by Sarah Ann MacCamish of Vinita, Indian Territory, age 58 [born ca.1842], Lewis married first Lucy French [an Indian] about 1837. She died about 1855 near White Church [present Kansas City], Wyandotte County, Kansas and was buried in the White Church Cemetery at that place. She states further that their children were Samuel Ketchum, John Ketchum, and Charles Ketchum:
1. Samuel Ketchum [died Sep. 1870 and was buried in the White Church Cemetery in present Kansas City, Kansas].
2. John Ketchum [was born 1843, died 1892, and was buried in Little Rock, Arkansas].
3. Charles W. Ketchum [was born 1845 and died 1868].Charles had been in Co. E, 15th Regiment of the Kansas Calvary.
Sol Ketchum and O. D. Neville witnessed the affidavit.

Louis Ketchum's married second Elizabeth Zeigler, daughter of Phillip Zeigler and Elizabeth (Betsy) Taylor. (*See Taylor, Elizabeth (Betsey/Betsy). Elizabeth Zeigler Ketchum was born in November 1834, died in 1913, and was buried in the same cemetery as Lewis, in Craig County, Oklahoma. Both Lewis and Betsy and their children appear in the Census of the Delaware Tribe of Indians within the Delaware Agency (present Kansas) on 15 February 1862 and on the List of Delaware Indians Who Elected to Dissolve Their Tribal Relations and Become Citizens of the United States Under Treaty of July 4, 1866 with the following 15 December 1862 Allotment Numbers. The first age cited is that under the 1862 Census and the second age cited is that of in the 1866 listing of Delaware Who Elected to Remain in Kansas: Lewis Ketchum is shown as #349/1862 Allotment #155, age 50/52; 1898 Dawes Roll #32529, Cherokee 1904 Census #10429 and his wife Elizabeth Ziegler as #350/156 age 28/31; 1898 Dawes Roll #32530, Census #10849:
1. John W. Ketchum #351/47, age 19/24) [Note that John is actually the son of Lewis Ketchum and Lucy French in Lewis Ketchum's first marriage.]
2. Mary L. Ketchum #352/157, age 14/20
3. Jane Ketchum #353/158, age 12/17
4. Barbara Ketchum #354/159 age 10/16
5. Simon Ketchum #355/160, age 8/12
6. Silas Ketchum #356/161, age 6/10
7. Lucinda Ketchum #357/162, age 4/8
8. Solomon Ketchum #358/163, age 2/5.

Two of the children survived him at his death in 1904. Lewis and Elizabeth were married until his death. Whereupon Elizabeth claimed his Indian allotment. They were both buried at the private cemetery (the Ketchum Cemetery) at their allotment.

A Family Group Record for Lewis Ketchum and Elizabeth Zeigler , gives the following as their children:
1. #157 Mary Louise Ketchum, born 1846-1848, in Kansas [1875 Kansas State Census, Wyandotte County, Quindaro Township, Family 224], died 1 April 1928, married Joseph Thatcher, daughter Sarah Elizabeth Ketchum.
2. #158 Jane Ketchum, born 1849-1850 [although William Connelley's 1903 copy of White Church tombstone inscriptions, in the Kansas State Historical Society Archives, gives the birth as 21 June 1844)] in Kansas. [Ibid.]. She married 18 Oct. 1877 at her father's house, Robert O. Donnell (Marriage Record, p. 427, Probate Court, Wyandotte County, Kansas Court House). He was born 1830 and died 1909. She died 8 September 1881, two children-Louis O'Donnell and Mary Ellen O'Donnell. Mary Ellen married an unknown Busey whose son Delmar Lloyd Busey married Virginia Arnett.
3. #354 Barbara E. Ketchum, born 1850-1852, in Kansas. [1875 Kansas Census). She married 29 March 1872 at her father's house, John K. Evans. [Marriage records, Vol. 2, p. 410), Probate Court, Wyandotte Co., Court House, Kansas City, KS]. Barbara died January 1894. They had two children: Elizabeth Evans and John K. Evans, Jr.
4. #355 Simon W. Ketchum, born [27 February] 1855 in Kansas. [187 Kansas Census] He died 2 March 1894. Simon married 5 October 1879 Emmaline Turner (born 26 November 1858, died 13 December 1948), five children: Louis E. Ketchum, Prudence Ketchum, Maude Ketchum, Samuel Ketchum, and Olive Elizabeth Ketchum.
5. #161 Silas Ketchum, born 1 Dec. 1857, in Kansas [1875 Kansas Census], died 2 December 1901. [Tyler and Timmons, Our People and Where They Rest. p. 54], married Katie Long. [Marriage Records, vol. 2, p. 480, Probate Court, Wyandotte County] His birth date also appears as 12 January 1857. He died 2 December 1901, married Cora Neville, four children: Myrtle Ketchum, George Ketchum, Samuel Ketchum, and Frank Ketchum.
6. Lucinda M. Ketchum, born Jan. 1859 in Kansas [1875 Kansas Census], died 3 August 1877 [Probate Court Cases, Vol. A, Case No. 697, Probate Court, Wyandotte County. She apparently was unmarried with no children.
7. #163 Solomon Ketchum, born 1860-1862, in Kansas [1875 Kansas Census]. He is also reported as having been born 27 Jan. 1861. Solomon died 2 December 1901, married Cora Neville, four children: Myrtle Ketchum, George Ketchum, Samuel Ketchum, and Frank Ketchum.

8. John W. Ketchum, born 1843 [Tombstone Marker at White Church Christian Church Cemetery, Kansas City Kansas]. But here again, John is actually the son of Lewis Ketchum and his first wife, Lucy French.]
9. [Missing] born April 1868, died 14 July 1869. [Ibid.]

In another listing of the children of Lewis and Elizabeth , they had the following children:
1. Mary Louise Ketchum was born about 1846/1847, died 1 April 1928, and was buried in the Carselowery Cemetery. 1862 Allotment #157.
2. Jane O. Ketchum was born about 1849/1850 and died 2 March 1894. [1862 Allotment #158]
3. Barbara Ketchum was born about 1850/1852, lived in Marion, Kansas. and died 1894. 1862 Allotment #160.
4. Simon W. Ketchum was born 27 Feb. 1855 and died 2 Decmber 1901.
5. Silas Ketchum was born 12 Jan. 1857, died 2 December 1901, and was buried in the Ketchum Private Cemetery near Vinita, Oklahoma. 1862 Allotment #161. [According to one source (not known at the present), a daughter was Katy Long. Another source (not specified at the present time) says that she was the daughter of Isaac Journeycake. Does anyone have further information on her? Editor]
6. Lucinda Ketchum was born about 1858 and died 2 December 1876. 1862 Allotment #162.
7. Solomon or Solomon C. Ketchum was born 27 Jan. 1861, died 1945, and was buried in The Private Ketchum Cemetery near Vinita, Oklahoma. 1862 Allotment #163. He was a noted boxer in Kansas City and was declared to be the Champion Indian Fighter of the World. Solomon was one of the Delaware who remained in Kansas, but later moved to Indian Territory and became a member of the Eastern Delaware Tribe.
8. Hatty Ann Ketchum was born 1868, died 1869, and was buried in the Ketchum Private Cemetery near Vinita, OK.

He said that his mother was Elizabeth Zeigles [Zeigler].

Lewis Ketchum was on the list of Delaware Indians who decided to remain in Kansas. In 1870 he was in the U. S., Kansas, Wyandotte Co., Quindaro census at age 55, a harnesser, real estate worth $18,900, personal property worth $700, born in Indiana. In the 1880 Census for Quindaro, Wyandotte County, Kansas (LDS Family Search Census/ Index 2001, LDS Family History Library Film 1254400, National Archives Film T9-0400, p. 305D), Lewis Ketchum is listed as a farmer, age 44, born Indiana with and parents born Ohio. His wife, Elizabeth Ketchum is keeping house at age 44. She was born in Kansas, her father was born in Pennsylvania, and her mother was born in New York. Their children listed were Silas Ketchum age 21, Mary Ketchum age 33, and Solomon Ketchum age 19, all born in Kansas, were helping on the farm. A Thomas Campbell, farm laborer, age 14 born Missouri, father born Indiana, and mother born in Kansas was living in their household. Their Son Simon Ketchum is listed in the same census (p. 425C) in his own household in Wyandotte Township, Wyandotte Co., Kansas as a farmer, age 25, with this wife Emma Ketchum, keeping house, age 21. She is listed as having been born in North Carolina and her parents in South Carolina. Sometime later, the Lewis Ketchum Family moved to Indian Territory (present Oklahoma) and became members of the Eastern Delaware Tribe of Indians. He settled near Ketchum, southeast of Vinita, in 1882. Lewis Ketchum had Cherokee Enrollment #36 in the Delaware District. He was on the Dawes Commission 1898 Roll as #32529 and in the 1904 Cherokee Census as #10429. He died in Indian Territory (present Oklahoma) on 28 March 1904 and was buried in the Sol Ketchum Cemetery (private), in Craig County, Oklahoma. [Tyler and Timmons, Our People and Where They Rest, p. 54.] Lewis had Dawes Commission 1898 Roll as #32529 and on the 1904 Cherokee Census as #10429. Lewis Ketchum's Delaware citizenship status was made official in 1951 when, the Delaware Tribe of Indians added him and four other persons who had remained in Kansas to their 1906 roll.

Much of the data above on the Ketchum Family was provided by Sol Ketchum's granddaughter and Lewis Ketchum's great-granddaughter. Researchers: Vickie Wilkins and Thomas F. Hahn

KETCHUM, Nancy - The Lenape name of Nancy Ketchum was Lenape name Aupamundaqua or Aquamdegaockwe. We are using the Ketchum family name of her mother because we are not yet certain who her father is. Nancy Ketchum was married to Isaac Journeycake. To add to the confusion, her mother also went by the name of Nancy Ketchum. The biography of the latter will be added. We are currently working on verifying who her parents were. One family record shows them as William Long and Katy Ketchum. We had previously thought that her mother was Echelangonaockwe and her father Twehullahlah (Chief George Ketchum of Pennsylvania) . It is possible that these two women, both named Nancy Ketchum, were the sisters of Elizabeth (Betsy) Wilaquenaho. Researcher: Vickie Wilkins KETCHUM, Nancy [1] - Lenape name Aupheehiliqua, the mother of Sally Owl Honeywell.

This image may be of Aupheeheliqua, English name Nancy Ketchum, the mother of Sally Owl Honeywell, ca.1880. We are working on the identification. It was furnished by Flora Jane Wilson.

KETCHUM, Solomon "Sol" C. - In an interview on 9 June 1937, at Vinita, Oklahoma, in an interview by Field Worker, J. R. Carselowy, found in the Indian Pioneer Papers, Sol Ketchum said:

My name is Sol. C. Ketchum. I was born February 22, 1861, in Wyandotte County, Kansas. I now live at Vinita, Oklahoma.

When my father sold our homestead in Kansas and came to the Indian Territory I was just 22 years old, and decided I would sow a few wild oats before settling down in a new country. We got $50 an acre for our land in Wyandotte County, Kansas, and I took my part and went to Kansas City where I trained for a prize fighter. I got good enough that a promoter took me up, and after a little more training he became my manager and we began matching fights.

My manager's name was Billie Morris of Kansas City and he matched me first with John P. Clow of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Our managers got into a squabble and this fight was called off/ My next match was with Paddy Dunn, champion heavyweight of Kansas. He weighed in at about 185 pounds and I weighed in at 156, which put me in the middle weight class. The fight was staged at Vinita and I won in the eighth round and was declared the heavyweight champion of Kansas. My next match was with Billie McCarty of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. This fight was staged at the old fair grounds in Vinita, and I won it in 15 rounds. My next fight was with Ed Burk champion middleweight of Arkansas. While in training for this fight, Burk married a rich woman at Fort Smith where the fight was to be staged and she induced him to call off the fight, and retire from the ring. My manager then matched me with Billie _____, the champion prize fighter of Old Mexico. We fought this battle at Choctaw Park, Fort Smith, Arkansas. It was the hardest fight I ever had in my life. That man nearly broke my neck before I got my Indian up enough to hold my own against him. He was a real fighter, and he had set in to K. O. me in the first few rounds. I soon had both his eyes bunged up so that he couldn't see very well, and in the sixth round I broke his nose and mashed his mouth so badly that he was a mess of blood at the end of the round, I knocked him out in the seventh round. A reporter for the St. Louis Republic was present and had me issue a challenge, through his paper, to any Indian in America, and when none appeared I was declared the champion Indian fighter in the world, and retired.

Cookie Brown, a Cherokee fighter from Pueblo, Colorado, and I decided to put on an exhibition fight at Muscogee, but as both of us were Indians we had to get the permission of Leo E. Bennett, then Indian Agent at the Five Civilized Tribes. Bennett told us that we could fight all right, but if either one of us got to hitting too hard, he was going to shoot us. We fought a few rounds and soon forgot all about Bennett's caution and were soon pecking away like a river welder, when old Leo raised up from a ring side seat, drew a big old .45 from his holster, and I thought sure he was going to make his word good, but it was only a gentle reminder.

Comments by a field worker: When I called on this man, Sol C. Ketchum, now 76 years old, I found him plowing corn on the old homestead where his father settled in 1881. He is the old child left living out of five. He had two grown boys living with him. One was out hoeing out in the orchard and the other was sitting around the house. I asked his wife if this grown boy sitting in the house couldn't go and plow for him, and let him give me his story. She said that they couldn't plow to please him, and that he never let them plow corn for him.; but he did, long enough to give me this story. Sol Ketchum had been a powerful man, physically, all his life, and in a way he has kept up his athletics. I had a young man, who was very strong, and looked to be much of a man, tell me a short time ago that he would just as soon a mule kick him as to have Sol Ketchum hit him one good lick. Sol's address at the time of the interview in 1937 was RFD 3, Vinita, Oklahoma.

KIKTHAWENUND--William Anderson is the English name for Delaware Chief KikThaWeNund, also spelled as Kechkawhanund, Kechlawwhenind, Kithteellund, and Kithtuwhelund, all of whom may be the same person. He was born in the 1740s in Anderson's Ferry (present Marietta) Pennsylvania. His father was a Swedish trader and his mother was a Delaware, the daughter of Delaware Tribal Chief Netawatwees. During the Revolutionary War, Anderson sided with pro-American, Chief White Eyes. After the war, when Anderson was the chief of the Turkey Clan, the Delaware made an arrangement with the Miami to settle on their land along the White River in present Indiana, Chief Anderson settled in a small village in what is now Anderson in a two-story log house. Kikthawenund was an important leader who helped keep the Delaware out of the uprising led by the Shawnee Prophet and his brother. In 1818, he signed the Treaty of St. Mary's for the Delaware and made his preparations for relocation. He was with the tribe on their journey to Kansas and spent much of his life trying to negotiate a better settlement for the Delaware. Chief Anderson had four known sons and daughters. According to some, his daughter Mekingis married William Conner, a white trader, and had six children by him. [We are seeking the proof for that. Editor]. Conner decided to remain behind in Indiana when his wife and six children left with the tribes to receive their land in the west. Although he re-married a white woman three months later while Mekingis was still in Indiana, her reportedly paid her a fair price for her Indian lands in Indiana, gave half of his money and a large number of horses. A missionary in 1823 described Anderson as "a very dignified man in character and appearance, upward of six feet tall, well proportioned, a man of great benevolence and power, of excellent understanding, but not a public speaker." [To be continued.] For more detailed information, see Ruby Cranor, KIK-Tha-We-Nund, The Delaware Chief. (Based on an article in the Conner Prairie web site http://www.connerprairie.org/cp/connbiol.html) Researcher: Tom Swiftwater Hahn

Another version of the life of Kikthawenund or Chief William Anderson has been provided by Laurence D. Heady:

Kikthawenund or Chief William Anderson was principal chief of the Delaware Nation during the period of our "Diaspora" from Pennsylvania to Ohio and Indiana, or the Northwest Territory, and finally to the Trans-Mississippi-Missouri and Kansas. Kikthawenund was born in the 1740s in Anderson's Ferry (now Marietta). Pennsylvania. His mother was a daughter of the Delaware's principal chief Netaawatwees and his father was the Swedish Indian trader John Anderson, of the Susquehanna country. Throughout his life, went by both his Lenape name and his father's name. Not much is known about his early life, but he was much influenced by his grandfather [Netaawatwees] with whom he spent much of his time. Tribal strife during the Revolutionary War divided the Delaware. Kikthawenund sided with Wicocalind, who was pro-American. After the war, increasing white settlement in Pennsylvania drove the tribe west. The Delaware struck a bargain with the Miami to settle some of their territory and Kikthawenund (by then the Head Chief of the Turkey Clan of the Unami Delaware) and his tribe settled in several villages along the White River [in Indiana]. Kikthawenund himself settled in a small village located in what is now downtown Anderson, Indiana. During the uprising of Tecumseh and his brother The Prophet, he kept his tribe out of war. In 1818, he sign the Treaty Of St. Mary's for the Delaware and reluctantly prepared to be relocated. The tribe left Indiana and had a troubled journey to Kansas, where they settled briefly [about thirty five years] before the final removal to Indian Territory. He spent most of the rest of his life trying to negotiate a better settlement for our people. Kikthawenund had four known sons and one daughter. His sons became famous scouts and guides for the western-bound wagon trains. His daughter, Mekingees, was born of his union with his second wife, Achechelungunaqua, the daughter of Chief Captain Patterson. Mekinges, also known as Elizabeth Anderson, married William Conner, a white trader, and had six children by him. When the Delaware left Indiana, Conner decided that his wife and children should go to receive their land in the West, but that he would stay. He re-married (to a white woman) before Mekinges left Indiana, but otherwise was fair to her, giving her half his money and a large group of horses. He also bought the family's Indian lands, and gave a fair price for them. A missionary who met Kikthawenund described him as "A very dignified man in character and appearance, upward of six feet tall, well proportioned, a man of great benevolence and power, of excellent understanding, but not a public speaker." He was probably a wise businessman as well. When the Moravian missionaries living in the Anderson area lefty after a five-year residence, the Chief charged them "one young ox, three hogs and a table made from the wood of the place," as rent before he would allow them to go. In Indiana, romantic legends abound about Chief Anderson. It is told that he died there, by riding his pony off a high bluff into the White River. Another story credits him with a second daughter who also married a trader and who stayed in Indiana when the tribe left. Kikthawhenund is said to have returned to visit her and to have died during the visit. In the 1890's, when the Anderson Hotel was being built, a skeleton was found which many locals were convinced belonged to him. However, tribal historians record that he died 1831 in the tribe's new home in Missouri. (Laurence "Larry" D. Heady, a descendant of Kikthawhenund, is a Member of the Delaware Tribe of Indians. He lives in Minnesota. Any comments regarding this entry should be sent to him, lenapelh@hotmail.com, with a copy to the Editor swiftwater@lenapedelawarehistory.net) [There is as yet no proof of where he was buried. Died: William Anderson, aged head chief of the Delaware nation, in the latter part of September, 1832 at his home on the Delaware reserve, present Wyandotte county. He had been a Kansas resident less than one year. Though Anderson had some white blood, according to Missionary Johston Lykins, he had "shewed but little disposition to embrace [white man's] manners and customs."

The chief's deah (possibly from the then-prevalent smallpox) occurred after September 22 1832 on wich date Anderson wrote a letter in which he made mention of his four sons: Captains Shounack (Shawanock), Pushkies, Secondyan (Secondine), and Sacacoxy (Sarcoxie).

At a later time " Secondine " was the name of a Wyandotte county post office (from 1856-1859) " Sarcoxie " was the name of a Jefferson county post office (from 1889-1901). (The Kansas Historical Quarterly Summer 1962.

The address of William Patterson a Delaware Indian Chief to William Wells Agent of Indian Affairs, delivered at Fort Wayne in the Indiana Territory, April 5. 1805

Friend and Brother! listen to what I now say to you I am sent by the Chiefs of my Nation to speak the following words to you.

Friend and Brother! my Chiefs take you by the hand and salute you and inform you that it has pleased God that they should see another Spring.

Friend and Brother, my Chiefs informs you that their minds are troubled concerning the visit they made Governor Harrison last summer at Vincennes they were invited to that place by the Governor and on their arrival they were much pleased to hear him say that he wished to brighten the chain of friendship between the White and Red people and that he had invited them to see them for that purpose.

Friend and Brother! our Chiefs was told by the Governor that he wished them to become more civilized and that he would give them an addition to their annuity of Five hundred Dollars a year to enable them to procure the necessary articles for the purpose of enabling them to cultivate their Lands and that he was present when the Miamies gave all White River to the Delawares and that he would give them an instrument of writing that would shew that the Country on White River belonged to the Delawares- he farther told our Chiefs that the Piankishaw did not acknowledge the right of the Delawares to the lands on White River, but he would satisfy them on this head and would give them money out of his own pocket in order to get them to acknowledge the right of the Delawares to the Lands on White River, and that the road from Vincennes to the Falls should in future be the boundary line between the Lands of the Delawares and Piankishaws.

words was spoke to our Chiefs by the Governor they were much pleased with what he said, the Governor then wrote two papers which he told our chiefs contained the words he had just spoken to them and that he wished them to sign them both that he would send one to the President of the United States and one they could keep themselves, in order that the good words he had spoke might be kept in remembrance by the white and Red people- our chiefs chearfully signed these papers.

Friend and Brother! you may judge how our chiefs felt when they returned home and found that the Governor had been shutting up their eys and stopping their Ears with his good words and got them to sign a Deed for their Lands without their Knowledge.

Friend and Brother, the Chiefs of my Nation now declare to you from the bottom of their hearts in the presence of God that they never sold Governor Harrison or the United States any land at Vincennes last summer to their knowledge.

Friend and Brother, my Chiefs well remembers that all disputes between them and the United States are to be settled in a peaceable manner and I am directed by them to tell you that they place confidence in you and it is their wish that you take such immediate steps as may appear to you to be best for bringing about a fair understanding on the subject of the Treaty that it appears they signed last summer at Vincennes, and that you as soon as possible inform our great father the President of the United States how Governor Harrison has attempted to impose on his Red Children

Friend and Brother, my chiefs declare to you that they are not willing to sell the lands on the Ohio from the mouth of the Wabash to Clarks grant at the Falls, and that they consider it out of their power to do any such thing without the consent of the other Nations in this Country.

Friend and Brother, my Chiefs wishes you to prevent this land being settled by the white people Friend and Brother these are the words that was put in my mouth by the chiefs of my nation in order that I might deliver them to you. {signed} William Patterson + his mark

LYKINS, Dr. Johnston

Johnston Lykins was a Baptist minister, teacher and self-taught doctor who worked with several American Indian tribes, including the Potawatomi, in Indiana, Michigan, Missouri and Kansas during the first half of the nineteenth century. He was a follower and son-in-law of the Baptist missionary to the Indians, Isaac McCoy. Lykins joined the McCoy mission among the Wea in northern Indiana as a young man of 20 in 1819. He was hired as a schoolteacher. He was not a Christian, much less a missionary. The work was arduous; he spent more time getting supplies and running other errands required to keep the missions going than he did teaching school. He quit several times over the first several years but always came back.

McCoy moved his mission to Fort Wayne, home of the Miamis, in 1820. In late 1822, the little group moved again, this time founding the Carey Mission among the Potawatomi in Michigan. Lykins was baptized in that year and was appointed to the post of missionary by the Baptist Board of Missions for the United States. By 1824, Lykins was able to read religious discourses in Potawatomi. Although an additional mission working with the Ottawa on the Grand River was started later, the Carey Mission remained open and Lykins continued to serve there part of the time. Lykins married McCoy's daughter in 1828.

The Removal was well underway in 1831 when Lykins went west to found a mission in Missouri, near the Shawnee reservation. The McCoy group had begged the Baptist mission board for a printing press for some time, and finally received funding for their project to prepare reading materials in the various Native American languages. Jotham Meeker, another of McCoy's missionaries, brought the first printing press to Kansas in 1833. The printing operation was located at the Shawnee mission. Books in Delaware, Shawnee, Potawatomi and other native languages were rapidly put to work in missionary educational programs. Lykins was actively involved and edited the Sinwiowe Kesibwi (Shawnee Sun), a small newspaper published entirely in Shawnee. From time to time throughout his career, Lykins was called upon to negotiate with tribal leaders on various matters, generally having to do with their leaving their homes and moving west. He was not very successful in these efforts. In 1841, he attempted to convince the Potawatomi residing in Council Bluffs to move to Kansas, to no avail.

His part-time medical career went better, at least for a time. He had no formal training, but medical training was often casual in those days. Faced by the desperate need of his Native American students and their families, who were succumbing to one disease after another, he read and did what he could. He already had achieved a reputation as an effective physician when he first went to Missouri. There he was confronted by a smallpox epidemic on the Shawnee reservation and began a vaccination program. This simple and practical response hardly seems noteworthy to the modern reader, but it is always mentioned by Lykins' biographers. The conclusion that such vaccination programs were unusual is a sad one, and difficult to avoid.

In the spring of 1843, Lykins founded a mission among the Potawatomi, at a location near Topeka. In 1843, some of the Potawatomi requested that he be named their tribal physician, a government post that provided him with a salary that was necessary to support the mission. His appointment was opposed by the Jesuits and the Potawatomi allied with them, but was finally granted in 1844. Today the restored mission, which was improved and expanded in later years, is a museum. Lykins began a trade school at the mission in March, 1848; by September of 1851, attendance had grown to 90. Quarrels abounded between clergy of the different Christian religions and even clerics of the same faith. Lykins was an enthusiastic participant in these, and made many enemies. The criticism of his lack of medical credentials never let up and he was dismissed from his official post as Physician to the Potawatomi in 1851. He left the Potawatomi mission shortly thereafter. He served at his former post until it was closed in 1855. He then moved to Kansas City, to be near his son, and remained there until his death in 1876.

Johnston Lykins' translation of the Gospel of Saint Matthew and the Acts of the Apostles into Potawatomi was published in 1844 by William C. Buck's printing firm in Louisville, Kentucky. One of the rare copies is held by the Library of the Indiana Historical Society in Indianapolis. It is available on microfilm through the Interlibrary Loan Program.
(This article was submitted by Martha Sue Likins Faulkner msfaulkner@glasgow-ky.com . She has considerable data on the Lycon/ Likin/Lykin Family, The original source of the article is not known.)

Dr. Johnston Lykins commenced his labors among the Indians in 1819, as teacher in the school established among the Weas and Kickapoos of Indiana by Rev. Isaac McCoy. He removed to Fort Wayne with Mr. McCoy, and in 1822, when the Carey Mission was established among the Pottawatomies on the St. Joseph River in Michigan, was appointed teacher at that station. At the age of twenty-two, he was appointed missionary, and on the 15th of June, 1822, went to the Carey Station with Mr. McCoy to make preparations for opening the mission, erecting buildings, etc. Mr. Lykins had charge of the school at Carey until July, 1825, when he was appointed teacher for the Ottawas at Thomas Mission, also in Michigan. Of his labors while associated with himself, Mr. McCoy says: "Neither the performance of the most disagreeable services for the sick, whether they were missionaries, their children, or Indian children, nor their peevishness and unreasonable demands, nor the deathlike disappointments, which, in various forms, hovered around our abode, moved him from his noble determination to do right." On the 7th of June, 1826, he was licensed to preach, and in the autumn of that year, the schools being somewhat impoverished, he made a journey of 100 miles through the wilderness to Chicago to procure supplies for Carey, and another by way of Lake Michigan for the benefit of Thomas Mission." On the 25th of February, 1827, he was married to the eldest daughter of Mr. McCoy.

After the sale of the Carey property, in the fall of 1828, Dr. Lykins remained at that station for a time to aid in settling the Indian affairs, and in July, 1831, with his family, came to the Indian Territory, and at his own expense purchased a small tract of land contiguous to the Shawnees, put up a small building and commenced teaching the Indians. The small pox soon broke out among them, and Dr. Lykins, who had studied and practiced medicine with his other labors, made himself useful now by visiting, doctoring and vaccinating the Shawnee sick. In 1832, he was authorized by the Baptist Board to erect mission buildings, and, the following year, was authorized by Lewis Cass, Secretary of War, to visit the various tribes west of the Mississippi and report favorable sites for missionary establishments. From this time, his work was chiefly that of superintending the formation and work of the various Baptist missions in the Indian Territory--a position for which he was especially fitted. He was ordained a minister October 18, 1835, then having special charge of the Shawnee and Delaware Missions. After the abandonment of missionary work in Kansas, Dr. Lykins continued to reside at Kansas City, and died at that place a few years ago.

MARSHALL, Mary Ann

MARSHALL, Rosanna

MC COY, Reverend Isaac --The name of Rev. Isaac McCoy is thoroughly identified with the history of the establishment of the Indian Territory. All the best years of his life were spent in efforts and sacrifices for the advancement of the Indians, his work for fourteen years--from 1828 to 1842--being chiefly in Kansas. Mr. McCoy was born near Uniontown, Fayette Co., Penn., June 13, 1784. His youth was spent in Kentucky. In 1817, he commenced his missionary work among the Miami Indians on the Wabash River in Indiana, the first mission being near the present site of the town of Roseville. He remained at that point until May 1820, when he removed to Fort Wayne, re-opened his school, and continued it until the Pottawatomies were granted a reservation on the St. Joseph River, in Michigan, when he removed to that point and established the Carey Mission, December, 1822. Thomas Mission, on Grand River, Michigan, was established in 1826, by Messrs. McCoy, Lykins, Meeker and others. The latter mission was among the Ottawas. During his labors at Carey, Mr. McCoy became convinced that much missionary toil and effort was, and would be, wasted, unless the Indians could be removed farther from the vicinity of the white settlements, where the precepts and example of the missionaries were continually counteracted by the evil habits and the alluring vices of the frontier traders.

In January, 1824, Mr. McCoy visited Washington, and submitted a scheme for the removal of the Eastern tribes to the west of the Mississippi, to Hon. John C. Calhoun, Secretary of War. He approved the idea, and from that time was a faithful and valuable friend to the measure. In regard to this visit, Mr. McCoy naively writes: "I was so much afraid that his (Mr. Calhoun's) answer would be unfavorable, that, after mentioning the outlines of the plan, I proceeded to offer many reasons for adopting it, before I paused to allow room for his reply. Somewhat contrary to my expectation, but greatly to my satisfaction, his answer was such as I desired. He not only approved the plan, but urged its practicability, and said nothing was wanting to insure success but a right feeling in Congress."

From 1824 until 1828, various efforts were made by Mr. McCoy and others to further the object they deemed so essential to the welfare of the Indians, but no bill was passed providing for the emigration of the Indians. An appropriation was, however, made in 1828, for an exploration of the territory designed eventually for the tribes, and on the 15th of July, Mr. McCoy, one of the Commissioners appointed for the purpose, arrived at St. Louis, with three Pottawatomies and three Ottawas, to explore the country now Kansas, and, if desirable, select homes for those tribes. On the 21st of August, Mr. McCoy, with his Northern Indians, set out on his tour of exploration in advance of the other Commissioner, Mr. Kennerly, who, with his delegation of Choctaws and Creeks, had not yet arrived at St. Louis. According to instructions from Mr. Clark, Superintendent of Indian Affairs at St. Louis, the delegation explored a portion of the territory purchased of the Osages and Kanzas, and east of the country of the Pawnees. The party crossed Missouri to the Presbyterian Mission of Harmony, on the Marais des Cygnes, and, with a half-breed Osage for a guide, followed the Osage and Neosho Rivers until they arrived at the head-waters of the latter, when they crossed to the Kansas and returned on its south bank to the Shawanoe settlement on the Missouri State line.

On his return to Missouri, Mr. McCoy selected the town of Fayette, in that State, as a temporary residence for himself and Mr. Lykins, until they should locate permanently in the Territory. He afterward accompanied the Southern delegation to the Territory, entering on the 30th of November, at the Shawnee settlement. Their instructions were to explore the northern and western portions of the Territory as far as practicable, but, receiving word at the western line of Missouri from Maj. John Dougherty, Agent at Fort Leavenworth, that 1,500 Pawnees were on the war-path, they turned to the south, visited the Osages at White Hair's village, on the Neosho, and thence proceeded to the Arkansas River, where they visited the Creeks. The Southern delegation of Indians left the party near the junction of the Arkansas and Canadian Rivers. The remainder of the party went west as far as the Rocky Mountains, and returned to St. Louis December 24, 1828.

In January, 1829, Mr. McCoy visited Washington and submitted his report of these explorations to the Department of Indian Affairs, a map of the region explored accompanying the report. The bill for the organization of the Indian Territory, which was finally adopted, described the boundaries of the Territory according to the recommendation contained in this report. On the 27th of July, 1829, he again started for the West, accompanied by Mr. Lykins, and, in the fall of that year, made an expedition of twenty days into the interior of the Territory. The act of May 26, 1830, organizing the Indian Territory, finally passed the Senate by a vote of twenty- eight to twenty.

In l837, Mr. McCoy was sent by Government to survey the Delaware lands. He started with his two sons and a small party, comprising several Delawares, on the 16th of August, and was absent about four months-- ninety-six nights without the shelter of a roof. During this expedition, he made arrangements for the establishment of missions among the Omahas and Otoes. he also visited the Kanzas at their villages, and held a council with a party of Pawnees at Fort Leavenworth. On this expedition Mr. McCoy explored the country 200 miles west of Missouri, along the Kansas Creeks, and adjusted the unsettled boundaries of their reservations; also proposed locations for the remainder of the Pottawatomies, Ottawas, New York Indians, Miamis and other tribes, which selections were confirmed by the department.

From this time until his removal to Louisville, Ky., in 1842, Mr. McCoy labored unceasingly for the advancement of the tribes in the West. He thoroughly believed in the possibility and almost certainty of elevating the Indians in the Territory to a condition where they should be at least industrious, honest and self-supporting; and the strength and energy of the best years of his life were devoted to this work. After removing to Louisville, Mr. McCoy took charge of the work of the American Indian Mission Association, and remained in that position until his death, which occurred in Louisville in 1846. (Submitted by Arlene Micucci from William G. Cutler's History of the State of Kansas, Chicago, 1883, Part 6, Indian History, "Early Missionaries." This article was a part of the Kansas Collection of Books from the University of Kansas.

MEKINGEES/MEKINGES/MEKINGIS Elizabeth possibly KETCHUM--[Data are being entered and edited. This is a difficult entry. I would appreciate any of your comments or ideas. Editor swifthahn@aol.com]

Revised 12 November 2002. Mekinges and its other spellings, is a variation of the Lenape word Macunchis, meaning "Last Born," that is, "the Youngest". Her English name is Elizabeth (possibly Ketchum). She was born after 1780. Some have said that Mekinges may have been the daughter of Chief William Anderson, but there is evidence to the contrary and nothing to support the Anderson connection. (See end notes 1 and 2 for a further discussion of her ancestry). In any event, she grew up in Chief Anderson's home on the White River in Indiana on the lands reserved to the Delaware.[1] Mekinges's mother was Ahkechelungunaqua. Her mother is said to have been the sister of Mehshayquowha (Captain Patterson) and the widow of Twehullalla or Tweehulala (George Ketchum). William Anderson married second Ahkechelungunaqua who brought with her two sons, Lapahnihe (Big Bear) Ketchum and Queshatowha (John Ketchum), and a daughter, Aukeelenqua (Nancy Ketchum).[2] Mary Smith Witcher, the compiler of Cherokee-Delaware Heritage, lists Makengiss as the eighth child of "Delaware George." Witcher, p. 145). She says, "Various names in this list were given to me by George Bullette, Jr. [...Henry Armstrong...and Sol C. Ketchum." She also says that Mekinges is a corruption of Muchenchase.[3] Regarding Lenape family relationships and oral history, Ruby Cranor said "All children born to one mother are brothers and sisters regardless of who their father was." And, speaking of Sarah Finney's affidavit, said that Sarah Finney , "…was an old lady at the time she gave these affidavits, so perhaps she had forgotten some of her history."[4]

Mekingees was the common-law wife, in the Delaware custom, of William Conner (whom see in Biographies). He and his brother John moved to Indiana in 1800. They were the sons of Richard Conner and his wife Margaret Boyer, a white woman who was raised by the Shawnee.[5] Mekinges and William Conner lived in Chief Anderson's town from 1802 until 1812, then moved south of there, to a site four miles south of present Noblesville, on the east side of the White River.[6] Thompson states also states on page 43, using the same footnotes cited above above, "...the town of Chief Anderson, whose daughter, Mekinges, he married at at unrecorded time. (See 7 and 8 for a discussion of Mekinges's family relationship) William Conner built and operated a trading post there on the east side of the White River. [I will try to include a map of the area in the future.-Editor.] Because of his service to the United States Government, he was secretly promised title to the 640 acres occupied by him and his family. He eventually received title to the land.[9]

1. John (Jack) Conner born 1802 at Wapeminskin, near present Anderson, Indiana[10]
2. Harry or Howard Conner.
3. Nancy Conner died before 1856.
4. William Marshall Conner, undoubtedly named after William Conner's partner/friend, William Marshall.
5. James Conner born 1817.
6. Eliza Conner born 1818.[11]

Timothy Crumrin of Conner Prairie, said that they had seven children. More detailed entries for Nancy Conner and Eliza Conner can be found just below at the end of this entry for Mekinges]

William Conner became a successful trader. When he was away, it is possible that Mekinges helped run the trading post with William's partner, William Marshall.[12] Mekinges's and William Conner's relationship changed completely as a result of the Treaty of Greenville in 1818, under terms of which the Delaware were forced to agree to move west of the Mississippi River into Missouri. After the treaty, Chief Anderson began gathering his people together as they had to make the move within three years of the treaty. According to tribal custom, Me-king-es was expected to move with the tribe. Because William Conner became increasingly involved in political affairs in Indiana and did not want to leave there, he decided not to move west with Mekinges and the Delaware.[13]

When the Delaware began their move out of Indiana to their new home in southwest Missouri in September 1821, Mekingees and her children went with them under the protection of William Marshall, the partner of William Conner. The latter provided with Mekinges with sixty horses and supposedly her share of the business.[14] In addition, William Conner made the promise that his Indian children should return to visit him from time-to-time and that if land came to him through the United States' government, he would pay them for their interest in the land.[15] William Conner married Elizabeth Chapman, the step-daughter of John Finch on 30 November 1820, just a few months after the departure of Mekinges.[16] The Conners had considerable land that could not be legally divided in 1820. Me-king-es and her six children began the hazardous trip to southwest Missouri in 1821 down the west fork of the White River to the mouth of the Wabash River. They forded this river and made their way across southwest Illinois to Fort Kaskaskias where they camped.[17] They had spent several months on the trail before arriving at Fort Kaskaskias on 2 December 1820.[18] Many Delaware encountered hunger, sickness, and starvation on that dangerous journey, and white people along the way threatened them and stole their horses.[19] It was noted that when the vanguard reached Kaskaskias that the Delaware were "poor starving humans without any means of caring for themselves.[20] Me-king-es and her family were better off than most of the emigrants because of what she had received from William Conner and because of the guardianship of William Marshall who also had his wife, Betsy Wilaquenaho (whom see) with him. [Some time in the future I will attempt to cover the entire migration in more detail and will probably put it in a separate article in the History section.-Editor]

Because of inclement weather, Mekinges and her family and the tribe could not leave Fort Kaskaskias for their new home on the James River in southwest Missouri until the spring of 1822. The mainstream of the Delaware finally made their way to Nixa, about four miles south of Springfield, Missouri, where they remained until 1830.[21] William Marshall was with the advance party of the Delaware. Mekinges and her family went with him and was with him when he established a trading post on the Jack Fork of the Current River. They were there in 1821 and 1822. It is possible that Me-king-es and her family went with William Marshall when he went to a place near the mouth of the Sulphur Fork of the Red River in southern Arkansas where he opened a trading post.[22] Ferguson suggests that, "It is possible that Me-king-ees and her family moved to this area because Mekinges had been working in the store when it was in Indiana and knew the Delaware language. [23] Though there is no evidence to support her presence there, it is an interesting idea. When the tribe moved to the Delaware Reserve in present Kansas, Mekinges and her younger children migrated there.[24]

There is a lack of information dealing with the life of Me-king-es on the Delaware Reserve. She is in the "Roll or Census of the Delaware Tribe of Indians within the Fort Leavenworth Agency for the Year 1842" as No. 151Muck-cun-chase with one male under 10, two males 10 and under 40, one female under 10, three females 10 and under 40, and one female over 40.[25] Assuming one son (probably John) was off on his own, who are the two extra females who are with her in 1842, and who is the father? One would think that she would have died before 3 July 1861, on which date a suit was brought by her survivors against the estate of William Conner in the United States Circuit Court in Indianapolis.[26] But perhaps the word "survivors" is misleading. William Conner and Mekinges had petitioned for land that they felt was due them under the St, Mary's Treaty of 1818. Conner received deeds for the land beginning in 1830 and ending in 1855.[27] On his death in 1855, he left his 6,000-acre estate to his second family.[28] In 1861, his Indian family brought suit against William Conner's white children heirs. The claim was "quieted" against the Indian plaintiffs in 1863.[29] There is a Mu-cun-chus #58 on "Delaware Allotments Treaty May 1860" with an 1862 Census Roll #473. That person's allotment was W/2 SW/4 of Section 36. Township 10, Range 23, 80 acres.[30] This person appears to be Ma-cun-chis because in the "Delaware Census of February 15, 1862" she is listed again as #473, 12-15-1862 #58, at age 73, that is born about 1879. On that record, there is a Macunchis Kecharleequa, #474, 2-15-1862 Allotment #59, listed with her.[31] Weslager states that "Mekinges, who lived to an old age, is believed to have married into the Ketchum family, although there is some doubt about this. She died a much-respected matron among her people in Oklahoma."[32] (Weslager, The Delaware Indian Westward Migration, p. __.)

If Mekinges were 79 in 1862, then she would have been about 84 when the mainstream of the tribe moved to Indian Territory in 1867. One wonders why, If she is in the records in 1860 as Macunchus, and in the 1862 records as Macunchis, then why isn't she on the "Delaware Payroll of April, 1857" or the

"Delaware Payroll of January 1, 1858"? Perhaps she was there but simply didn't qualify to be on those listings. The absence of her name on Delaware Dwelling Structures, Crop Products and Livestock ca. October 1, 1865, indicates that she might be living with someone else, but whom?[33] Mekinges does not appear on the listing of for the Delaware Semi-Annual Annuity Payment in October 1865 nor for 1866. (Arellano, pp. 153-164 and pp. 171-184, respectively. She also does not appear in the listing of "Delaware Indians Who Elected to Dissolve Their Tribal Relations and Become Citizens of the United States on 18 February, 1866."[34] She is not in [text missing] nor in the listing of "Delaware Persons Who Have Elected to Retain Their Tribal Relations at the Delaware Agency, Kansas-February 1867."[35] An enigmatical "Index" with a penciled in 1862 includes the name Macumchis, 761.[36] The name Macumchis, No. 761, Dead, appears in a Listing entitled "Delawares" by Arellano in which she describe the document as a small paperback which contained the names of Delaware Indians who moved from their Kansas home into Indian Territory. The list was supposedly published in Tahlequah, I. T. between 1898 and 1904.[37] Mekinges appears to be in "The Delaware Indians Residing in the Cherokee Nation, As a Tribe and Individuals Showing Their Lands, Improvements, Location and Valuation of Improvements in Possession of Them Prior to and on August 4, 1898" under Register No. 761 (as it was also in the document above) under the name Nacumchis, dead, niece Mary White age 50 and under Child Living 8-4-1898: a. H. M. Adams, Jno Bullette. b. See Reg. 768 for improvements. c. Apr. 11, 1899. Those three items were also listed under Register No. 758 Lomoose white, dead. The Register No. 768 just mentioned with the name Ohlenow, dead, with Mary White, grandchild living as heir 8-4-1898 60 acres cultivated, 160 acres enclosed, value $500 and child living 8-4-1898. a. H. M. Adams, Jno Bullette (as it was in No. 761). b. On Double Creek 3 miles west Ringo IT. c. Apr. 11, 1899. The name H. M. Adams also appears with the names Joseph Griffy and Elias Griffy.[38]

The later documents indicate that the person known as Macumchis and Nacumchis moved from the Delaware Reserve in Kansas to Indian Territory in Oklahoma. It is not certain that these names all represent the same person, that is, Mekinges, however. People tend to mix up Elizabeth (Macunchis) with Elizabeth Ziegler who married Lewis Ketchum and also with Elizabeth Swannock who married John Conner and as his widow, married James Ketchum. Did Me-king-es remarry after leaving William Conner in Indiana? It would have been the natural thing for a woman with six children to do. Did Mekinges have another English name on the Delaware Reserve or in Indian Territory? Did she remarry? Did she live with one of her children in later years? And where did she die and where is she buried? Some of her descendants believe that she went back to Missouri. These are all questions that need to be answered. Let us know if you know any of the answers!

[7] According to the Delaware historian C. A. Weslager in The Delawares: A critical Bibliography (See Bibliography), "The major study of the sojourn in Indiana is treated in an unpublished dissertation by Roger James Ferguson, "The White River Indiana Delawares: An Ethnographic Synthesis, 1795-1867" (See Bibliography). Ferguson made liberal use of Charles N. Thompson's Sons of the Wilderness: John and William Conner (See Bibliography)...Thompson, however, made an error that Ferguson and others perpetuated. He mistakenly identified Mekinges (mother of the Delaware chiefs John and James Conner) as the daughter of Chief William Anderson." Weslager, The Delaware Indian Westward Migration introduces evidence that she was a member of the Ketchum family." In the latter work, Weslager writes, "Charles N. Thompson...stated in Sons of the Wilderness That Mekinges, Conner's Delaware wife, was the daughter of Chief Anderson. This has been repeated by others quoting from Thompson, including the present author [Weslager] in The Delaware Indians, A History. Information has since come to life causes one to doubt that Mekinges was Anderson's daughter, and a reexamination of the sources cited by Thompson indicates that there is no documentary support for his statement in these references. An affidavit regarding the genealogy of a number of Indian families was taken in Oklahoma in 1925 from an old Delaware woman named Sarah Kinney. In this affidavit she referred to the Ketchum family which she said she knew very well, adding that there were four brothers (whom she did not name) and the two daughters, Nancy and Elizabeth. She stated that Elizabeth married William Conner and six children were born to them, John, James, William, Nancy, Eliza, and Howard. Assuming that Elizabeth and Mekinges were one and the same person, which seems likely, then she was a Ketchum and could not have been the daughter of Chief Anderson" (pp. 763-74).

[8] Weslager (The Delaware Indian Westward Migration, p. 74), states : For further evidence that Mekinges was a Ketchum is found in the Morgan Journals, 1859-1862, based on information Morgan obtained from an elderly Delaware female informant in Kansas. This is what he wrote: "Captain Ketchum at the time of his death [July 12, 1857] was head chief, a principal chief of the Turtle Tribe of the Delawares. This title or office is hereditary as she thought in the tribe, for she said the Turtles could not have a man of the Wolf or Turkey for their chief, Ketchum's name was Ta-whe-la-la (Catch Me). He died leaving a son, but was succeeded by John Konner, the present principal or hereditary chief who was the son of the youngest sister of Captain Ketchum of the Turtle Tribe." Weslager continues saying, "What this seems to me is that Mekinges and the chief called Captain Ketchum were brother and sister, and that Ketchum's successor as principal chief was his nephew John Conner, oldest son of Mekinges by William Conner."

An additional item on Mekinges was submitted by Descendant Laurence C. Heady: MeKingEes (sometimes spelled Mekinges) English name was Elizabeth Anderson Conner. She was the only daughter of Kikthawenund-Chief Anderson and his last wife Ahkechelungunaqua, and was born sometime around 1780. Mekingees grew up on the White River in Indiana and eventually married the white trader, William Conner, when she was still in her teens. Conner settled in Chief Anderson's Town operating a trading post there with the help of Mekingees. The first of their six children was born in 1802. After the 1818 Treaty of Greenville, the Delaware prepared for the Tran Mississippi removal. Mekingees and her children were among those to leave Indiana. However, her husband had become involved in political and economic development there and decided to send hi [something missing here] (For documentation or further comment or questions on this item, please contact Laurence Heady lenapelh@hotmail.com with an information copy to the Editor swifthahn@aol.com)

The children of Mekinges and William Conner are:

1. John (Jack) Conner born 1802 at Wapeminskin, near present Anderson, IN (Thompson, Sons of the Wilderness, p. 46).
2. Harry or Howard Conner.
3. Nancy Conner - The birth date for Nancy Conner is not known, but it would probably have been between 1805 and 1815 in the White River area of Indiana near present Noblesville. She died in 1833 or 1834 in Delaware Territory (in probably present Wyandotte County, Kansas). Nancy was also known as Elizabeth Ketchum. She was probably the third of six (possibly seven) children. She married Mutsetutsese (on son William Adam's Cherokee Roll File), a Delaware from Missouri, a son of Paymarhting. (Laurence D. Heady, lenapelh@hotmail.com) The children of Nancy Conner and Mututsesse are to be added. Editor]
(Researchers: kal@annapolis.net, zoe@txcyber.com, swifthahn@aol.com , lenapelh@hotmail.com)
4. William Marshall Conner, undoubtedly named after William Conner's partner and friend, William Marshall.
5. James Conner born 1817.
6. Eliza Conner was born in 1818. (Thompson, Sons of the Wilderness, p. 19) Eliza Conner was probably the sixth of six (but possibly seven) children. She was born at her father's trading post in Indiana. Eliza was only two years old during the migration of the Delaware People from Indiana to Missouri. She grew up on the banks of Big Stranger Creek [in Missouri]. When she was about twenty-one years old, she married Delaware Bill Halfmoon. It is not known what became of Bill Halfmoon, but one child, Sarah Halfmoon, was born of that union. Eliza then married Delaware Tom Wilson. He was killed soon thereafter by a bull buffalo. Eliza then married Pendoxie, or George Bullette. He was one-half Delaware and one-half French and much older than Eliza. He was a trader on Spavinaw Creek. Pendoxie had commanded Delaware warriors in the battle of Claremore Mound in 1818 and had fought in the Mexican War. Pendoxie raised Eliza's children, Sarah Halfmoon and Laura Wilson, and he fathered four children with Eliza. Pendoxie died in 1855. Eliza died in 1877.

[Timothy Crumrin of Conner Prairie, said that they had seven children.] One of their children was:
1. HALFMOON, Sarah - Sarah Halfmoon was born on the Delaware Indian Reservation near Fort Leavenworth, Kansas in October of 1839 or 1840. Her mother was Eliza Conner, the daughter of Mekinges and granddaughter of Ahkechelungunaqua of the Turtle Clan, matrilineal descent. Sarah's father, Bill Halfmoon, died either shortly before or after her birth. Her stepfather was George Bullette, a man of French and Lenape heritage. During the final removal of the Delaware in the late 1860s, she moved with members of her family to lands along the Verdigris River, Cooweescoowee District, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory (Nowata County, Oklahoma). She was noted for her eccentricities, including the fact that she would speak only Lenape of French and pretend not to understand English. Sarah could not abide fools and often advised others not to trust anyone who didn't like horses or dogs. She was officially a full-blood Delaware. She was married several times to mixed-blood Cherokee and Delaware men. She apparently already had two children by the time of her first marriage to Albert Compston. (See the Biography of their daughter Ella Eliza Compston, just below) Tradition holds that she was a great supporter of the Dalton Boys, often giving them, food and shelter when they were fugitives. After their violent death on the streets of Coffeyville, an ordinance was passed making it a crime to decorate their graves. Ignoring the law, Sarah continued to place flowers on the outlaws' graves until she died. She was a devout Baptist for over 80 years. She died in Bartlesville, Oklahoma, on December 7, 1934, the oldest member of the Delaware Tribe.

1. COMPSTON, Ella Eliza - Ella Eliza Compston was the daughter of Sarah Halfmoon and Albert Euing (or Ewing) Compston, described above. Ella was presumably born on the Verdigris River, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory in 1970. She went by the name "Ella". Ella married Joshua Bonaparte Heady, also known as "J. B" or "Bud" Heady, sometime after legal charges against her mother, Sarah Halfmoon, were resolved. J. B. had been the deputy U.S. Marshal who was dispatched from Fort Smith to arrest her. Apparently he was born in Green County, Missouri, in 1858 or 1859, and lived in Missouri and Arkansas for much of his early life. He was the son of Eli P. Heady and Mary Ann "Polly" Presley and was of undocumented mixed Cherokee and Anglo-American heritage. He first wife was Elizabeth Berlew (1860-1929) and he had two or three children of that union. It is unknown under what circumstances J. B left his former wife and children. He served as a deputy United States marshal for the Western District of Arkansas--the district of "Hanging Judge" Isaac Parker of Fort Smith. J. B. was among the marshals that maintained peace and order in the lawless Indian Territory immediately after the Civil War. He swore oaths of office in 1887, 1889, and 1895, all signed by Judge Parker. He was probably an Indian Territory "posse man" prior to 1887 and he rode with Frank Dalton and others. J. B. served as a deputy U. S. Marshal for the Western District of Arkansas--the district of "Hanging Judge" Isaac Parker of Fort Smith. J. B. was among the marshals who maintained peace and order in the lawless Indian Territory after the Civil War. He swore oaths of office in 1887, 1889, and 1895, all signed by Judge Parker. J. B. Heady and Ella (Compston) Heady maintained a large house in Watova, Cooweescoowee District, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, that still stands today. There are many stories about J. B.'s adventures as a marshal and as an oil company agent. He wasn't beyond making whiskey during the Prohibition or hiding a fugitive who was a friend of the family. J. B. died in Nowata County, Oklahoma, in 1935. Ella has been described as a very warm, loving and long-suffering woman, simply referred to as "Mother". She is on the Dawes Roll No. 31501, along with her children. and is listed as one-half Delaware blood quantum. Ella died in Nowata County, Oklahoma, in 1949. She and J.

B. had nine children:

1. Alba Heady married Chance
2. Frank Heady, named for Frank Dalton
3. Ada Heady
4. Leona Heady, also known as Princess Wyhnemah, was born in Cooweescoowee District, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, the daughter of Ella Eliza Compston and James Bonaparte "J. B." Heady. Leona was a screen actress of some notoriety. Princess Wyhnemah was her screen name. She played in numerous B-movies of the period and was a founding member of the Indian Screen Actors Guild. She apparently was a good friend of Indian actor Jay Silverwheels. She spent most of her life in Southern California pursuing her acting career. She was loving and supportive of her younger siblings. Her brother Euing [James Euing] Heady was much influenced by her and spent much time with her in California. Leona Heady died in California, but was buried in Nowata County, Oklahoma.
5. Oneida Heady
6. Clay (for Henry Clay) Heady
7. James Euing Heady was born in Cooweescoowee District Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, in 1901, the son of Ella Eliza Compston and James Bonaparte Heady. He appears on the Dawes Cherokee Roll, No. 31508, along with his mother Ella and all her other children. He was of dark complexion and very handsome. Toward the end of World War One, Euing enlisted in the army and was attached to a cavalry unit stationed in Southern California. According to oral history, Euing got homesick for a girl in Kansas and rode a horse all the way from California to Kansas. He married an unknown woman in Kansas, but the marriage was later annulled. There was one child of that union. Sometime later he married Violet May Hightower and had two children, Zelda Heady and Edythe Wyvonna Heady. He then married Sylvia Remington Price. They had one child, Arthur Euing Heady who was born 1930 and who died in 1959. He married Pauline Anita Babb (living). They had two children, Laurence D. Heady and Cathy Lynn Heady (both living). He was later estranged from Sylvia, but apparently they didn't divorce. Later, he had a common-law marriage with Eva Althea Young. Karee (Heady) Hada was the only child of that union. Euing role the rodeo circuit for a while, during which time he met Eva Althea. Euing spent much of his life in and out of hospitals while being treated for tuberculosis, and he died in 1949 in a Veterans Administration hospital in Southern California. After hearing of Euing's death, his wife, Sylvia took her own life.

MUNDY, ISAAC -- Isaac Mundy and his wife Lucy Hines Mundy came from Patrick County, Virginia by wagon train to Westport, Missouri in 1835. They were accompanied by two slaves, George and Ruth, given to them by Lucy's father, Henry Hines, a plantation owner. When Isaac and his family first came to the are they found shelter at the Methodist Delaware Indian Mission, but soon thereafter a log cabin was built for the, behind the church. [The White Church in present Kansas, City, Kansas?] They may later later moved to Nebraska Territory. According to a letter dated 1/29/1842 from Fort Leavenworth Indian Agent Richard Cummins, Isaac was nominated to be blacksmith for the Delawares in Kansas Indian Territory. His first assistant was to be Powhatan Phifer. They moved from Westport sometime that year and continued to live and work among the Delaware until Isaac's death in February, 1858. Some records suggest he was also a paymaster and supervised a government farm near Fort Leavenworth. Isaac Mundy was possibly a delegate to the at Wyandotte Council House, 25 July 1853, where the provisional government of the Nebraska Territory was established. Isaac was elected to the office of councilman in that government. He held other positions in te Government as was a leader in the early community. In 1858 Isaac Mundy, age 43, was killed by the accidental discharge of his own gun while he was hunting wit [Delaware] Indian friends. The Delaware honored him by burying him in their cemetery at White Church beside Chief Ketchum. The inscription Isaac Mundy's tombstone reads, "A man among a thousand distinguished for his integrity, his piety and his extensive influence in [the' community." 1859, with the help of Delaware friends, Lucy, her seven surviving children, George Mundy and Ruth Mundy and probably their three children, moved to Weston, Missouri. Contact for Isaac Mundy is young@jatnet.wcmo.edu (Bill Young, Professor of Religious Studies, Westminster College, Fuller, MO. He reports: My descent is through Isaac and Lucy's daughter Annie Elizabeth Mundy, who married Thomas Magers of Weston. My mother Rhoda Magers Young, now 90, remembers both Annie and Thomas well from her childhood. Along with about a dozen other Mundy descendants I attended the April, 1997, re-dedication of the White Church Delaware cemetery coordinated by Deborah Nichols. It was an inspirational event. I am now engaged in a long-term research and writing project focusing on the story of the Mundey's, their slaves, and the Ketchum family in the context of the tumultuous events during the period when the Mundey's were living at Delaware Crossing. I am particularly interested in trying to learn how these families interacted and succeeded in crossing cultural and religious boundaries in a multi-ethnic community. A photograph of his grave marker can be found under White Church Cemetery under Cemeteries. Isaac Mundy is listed in the 1855 Territory of Kansas Census as being "from Virginia."

MUTSETUTSESE--Mutsetutsese was a Delaware from Missouri, whose son was William Adams and whose father was Paymarhting. William Adams recorded his father as being a Delaware from Missouri named Mutsetutsese. > Among the Delawares was a chief, who bade fair to equal in fame, the most distinguished of his predecessors. Not many moons before, Ni-co-man had awakened from a dream of conquest and beheld, in the pale light, a shadowy figure wrapped in a blanket of snowy white. Its bony finger motioned the chief to arise and follow. Mechanically, like one asleep, he obeyed the phantom warrior, the strange chill that crept over him increasing with each step. On they went, beyond the confines of the village, toward one of the highest points along the river that shone like silver with reflected brightness. Pausing upon a spot from where the undulating prairie could be seen, reaching for miles to westward, the spirit chief stretched out a ghostly arm and addressed the awe-struck leader.

"Go thou, Ni-co-man, noblest of thy people, and lead them on to glory. Take all thy bravest warriors. Journey west; there shalt thou find upon the distant plains, our enemies, the Sioux. Rest not until thou hast avenged my death, for by their hands was I, thy father's father, slain." Slowly he vanished, and Ni-co-man, pondering over these words, returned to his abode. Thenceforward he agitated the question of an advance, with full assurance of meeting and overcoming the murderous Sioux.

Around the council-fire were plans perfected. The pipe of peace was passed from hand to hand. Old men led the discussion while their juniors listened in silent respect. When all the wiser heads had given advice, the youthful braves, in turn, expressed opinions. The latter being unanimously in favor of adopting extreme measures, the council of Ni-co-man prevailed; and having completed arrangements, the flower of the nation, mounted upon mettlesome ponies, went forth, as did the challengers of old, to seek renown.

Over the rolling prairies, the tall grass waving in the sunlight, rode the dusky knights, heavy war-paint giving greater fierceness to faces already glowing with excitement. The second day, a long distance from the starting place, they stopped at night beside a flowing stream. The tired ponies, relieved of their burdens, were turned out to graze, a guard being stationed nearby. After a meal of savory buffalo meat, and a quiet smoke around the camp-fire, the Delawares, drawing their blankets over their heads, threw themselves upon the ground and were soon wrapped in profound slumber.

At early dawn, ere they had proceeded many leagues, a fresh breeze started from the Southwest, and close to the horizon a faint rose color tinged the sky. This suddenly changed to a lurid hue, as a sheet of flame, accompanied by volumes of smoke, swept rapidly toward them. "Fly! Tun-dahe Wel-seet-num-et (The God of Fire)!" shouted the Indians, as, turning on the trail, they lashed the horses to the highest possible speed, while the fire made steady headway. On rushed the fugitives, bending every energy to reach the water; but the breath of the Fire God was at their shoulders. Then the hardy little ponies made a final heroic dash and landed in the creek -- safe, all but one. As the terrible cloud passed swiftly over the half suffocated band, they saw the angry spirit in the great, dark, curling chariot, bend low and smite their comrade; and when the seething whirlwind had gone by, he lay, face down, a lifeless heap, upon the blackened cinders. A hasty burial, with few of the usual ceremonies, and the party was traversing the now desolate region, in the direction of the far-away mountains.

They entered what the white man calls the Great American Desert. A level country the short-grass district, extended as far as the eye could see on every side. Its monotony was broken by an occasional "draw," where wandering tribes often found refuge in defeat, or lay in ambush, ready to spring out at the approach of foes. These draws were caused by erosion, and may have been the beds of rivers, long since dried up. The plains were dotted with wild flowers, for in Kansas each weed, at some season of the year, bursts forth in all the glory of rich or delicate blossoms. The fall had brought its wealth of gold and purple, and the buffalo grass, more nutritious when "cured" by the sun and hot winds of Summer, had turned to a rich brown, the ruling note of color. Birds, and even the prairie dogs, barking and chattering at the entrances to their underground towns, conformed to the prevailing tint.

The "Loco" weed had gone to seed, and the Indians, well knowing its dangerous properties, kept their horses, while grazing, away from the plant, which is said to cause animals to become "locoed," or insane. A similar effect is produced on human beings, by the use of certain herbs compounded by the medicine men. Winding through the sandy territory, was the Arkansas River, in the autumn a seemingly harmless layer of reddish brown soil with apparently stagnant water here and there upon its surface. Underneath the quick-sand flowed a deep stream, promising certain death to him who essayed to cross with any but the lightest of vehicles.

The travelers had reached the heart of the buffalo country, and all abundance of game was found on every hand. A buffalo hunt, according to an Indian's views, was second only to victorious battle, therefore Ni-co-man called a halt and the entire company joined in a grand slaughter. The hunters, familiar with the habits of the animals, first arranged themselves in groups in one of the draws, at the foot of a steep embankment or precipice, taking care to be well sheltered. Then a warrior, grotesquely arrayed, and astride a strangely caparisoned steed, galloped toward the herd, frantically waving a bright-hued blanket. The leader, an immense creature, scented danger and took his stand in front of the rest. However, curiosity, which is one of the characteristics of the buffalo, prompted him to draw cautiously nearer the queer figure. The herd followed. Gradually the decoy backed toward the precipice, still gesticulating violently.

At last, the animals, thoroughly frightened, stampeded, accelerating speed as they approached the embankment, over which they rolled and tumbled in the mad effort to escape. Those not injured in the fall, recovered their feet and dashed away to the opposite slope, being easily shot in attempting the toilsome ascent. Thus, the majority were at the mercy of the red men.

The wanton destruction of these beasts at the hands of both Indians and white men is to be deplored. Where, two score years ago, thousands roamed the plains, now nothing remains to prove their having existed save slight depressions in the earth called "wallows," and large numbers of horns, scattered over the ranches. Once in a while the buffalo ring may he seen, still barren of grass. Here the ever watchful sentinel had tramped around and around in a circle. A feast succeeded the favorable termination of the hunt. Only the finest portions of the meat, which resembles beef in flavor, were reserved as food. Tongues were considered a great delicacy. Up to this time, a few straggling Comanches and Arapahoes were observed, but as yet no traces of the Sioux appeared. Ni-co-man, remembering his vision, still had faith that here, upon the plains, would the enemy be vanquished.

Early one morning a scout came in with the news that, far to the north, a stray band of Sioux had encamped the previous night. In a moment all was excitement. As soon as possible the entire cavalcade, well armed and ready for the fray, was galloping in the direction indicated. At sunset the Delawares halted for rest and food, waiting for darkness to make an attack. But the enemy, too, were watchful; and knowing the presence of danger almost by intuition, had prepared for encounters. They were in a deep cut, not easily accessible. Where the natural defenses are limited, the natives learn to take advantage of every means of protection. Piling up large masses of hard earth, that had fallen from one portion of the crumbling bank, they had built a rude fortification, which extended entirely across the entrance. In the rear was a narrow pass, with a steep acclivity on either side. Guards were stationed here and on the highest ridges. These gave the alarm as the Delawares, in three divisions, came silently forward at midnight.

Ni-co-man sent a detachment of good marksmen to the top of the embankment overlooking the Sioux, the second was despatched to the rear to force a way through the narrow passage, while he boldly led the remainder to attempt the low earthworks at the entrance. The war-cry of the Lenape now filled the air. The Sioux, crouching behind the fort and before the opening at the hack of the camp, fought savagely. Occasionally marksmen on the elevation picked off one of their men, though it was a somewhat difficult task in the semi-darkness.

Ni-co-man, being taller than his companions, and always at the front, was a welcome target for his wild opponents. Again and again a shadowy figure intervened as the bullets sped toward him. He bore, in truth, a charmed life. As the moon passed under a cloud, for the elements were preparing for a conflict, the Delawares rushed forward, climbing recklessly over the heaps of hardened earth, scattering great lumps right and left. Some of the braves fell, mortally wounded -- some pressed upon the retreating Sioux, who found themselves in a trap. The shadowy figure, invisible to all but the chief, was ever present, hewing down the enemy with his great tomahawk. The sun rose upon a frightful scene. The carnage was over, but ghastly upturned faces, smeared with war-paint and distorted with terror, even in death, told the tale of the night's work. Ere long it sought retirement, and the day grew dark. Ni-co-man gazed at the heavens in wonder. Did the Great Spirit manifest displeasure? A storm followed. Lightning flashed and the ground seemed to shake with thunder. Rain fell in torrents, a most unusual occurrence in that locality. When the atmosphere had cleared, and the drenched warriors again beheld the battle-field, lo! all blood was washed away. The Great Spirit had stamped with approval the triumph of his chosen people, the Lenape PATIACOW, "Grandma" - "Grandma" Patiacow was born in 1817 and she died in 1924. At the time of her death, at 107-years old, she was the oldest living Indian in the State of Oklahoma. She was seven--years old at the time of the great meteoric disturbance which occurred years ago. During the terrifying days of the Civil War, she rode her pony from Texas to Kansas, taking her son with her. They rode by night and they hid out by day in order to escape the soldiers she believed to be after her. "Grandma, as she was known, and as she is memorialized on her gravestone, lived alone near the Sand Creek bluffs, and received her allotment there. Her Dawes Roll Number was D36. Grandma Patiacow traded the beadwork she made for groceries. Her friends attributed her long life to her method of living close to nature. She was her own doctor and made her medicines from herbs she gather in the woods near her home. She was interred at the White Rose Cemetery located at Eleventh and Virginia Streets, Bartlesville, Oklahoma, in Site 06, Lot Ed, Block 3. (Submitted by Jackie Brown jacbrown@mail.uflib.ufl.edu) According to her obituary, she died at the home of her grand daughter, Mrs. Davis, five miles south of Bartlesville [Oklahoma], and she was buried in the White Rose Cemetery. "Deceased formerly lived across Sand Creek near the bluffs and in the vicinity of what was known as Patiaco Lake which was on the property...March 12, 1924.

TAHLEOCKWE -

She was also known as Melinda Wilcoxen and Melinda Statler. (Kansas Delaware) [Needs revision. Editor] The Lenape name of Melinda Wilcoxen was Talaockwe. She was born in the spring of 1830, near White Church (now Kansas City, Wyandotte County, Kansas and died 15 January 1911 in Kansas City, Wyandotte, Kansas. Her mother was Aquamdegaockwe or Aupahmundaqua, English name Nancy. Talaockwe married 1854 Rezin Wilcoxen, a white man from Virginia. Rezin was married earlier to Sabilla Caleb, whom see in the Biographies. Talaockwe went to the Shawnee Mission School at the age of ten and lived with her teachers, Reverend and Mrs. Melinda Statler. She took the name Melinda Statler as her own. She was on the List of Delaware Who Elected to Remain in Kansas as No. 173, age 36 under the 1862 Allotment, along with her children (Kansas Delaware) No. 174 Lucinda Wilcoxen, age 14 and (Kansas Delaware) Emmet Wilcoxen, age 1. Lucinda married James L. Buckland. They resided in Wyandotte, County as farmers. Rezin and Melinda also had a son, (Kansas Delaware) Oscar Buckland and a daughter (Kansas Delaware) Leanora Buckland, born 23 February 1868, who died 22 December 1884.
In Perl Morgan, History of Wyandotte County, published in 1911, Melinda Wilcoxen is quoted as saying:

> I was born a few miles south of White Church, some time in 1830. I never knew the month or the day. My mother's name was Aquam-da-ge-ockwe. My father was killed during a hunt two months before my birth. When I was about ten years old the government agents started me in a school near where Stony Point now is. Father Stateler was the teacher, but I did not learn much English. In 1851 I was married to Rezin Wilcoxsen, a West Virginian, who ran a store for the American Fur Company at Secondine, now called Muncie, Kansas. The Delawares were very much opposed to intermarrying with the whites, but my aunt and two of my cousins [considered to be Wilaquenaho and Anna and Rosanna Marshall. Editor] had married white men and my mother couldn't object much. The chief of the tribe, Captain Ketchum, was a brother of my grandmother, Eche-lango-na-ockwe. His Indian name was Tah-lee-a-ockwe, and signified to 'grab them' or 'catch them' and the whites called him 'Ketchum.' I had no brothers or sisters, but had six half brothers, and three half sisters.

I was happy with my white husband until a year or two after we were married, when the government moved the Delawares to the Indian Territory. All of my friends and loved ones went away then, and I was sad and cried many days. I wanted to go too, but I had to stay with my husband. Finally, however, I became contented and my husband used to send me on frequent visits to my people in the territory. We owned a farm near Secondine, but when the survey of lands of the Wyandot Indians was made, in 1866, it was found that we were on their land, and we moved north and settled in our present home in 1867.

We built our home in the early '80s, and here we raised our children. We had five children. My husband died in 1890, and now all of my children are married, or dead, and I am left alone.

Perl Morgan continued by saying:

> While Mrs. Wilcoxen spoke English fluently, she constantly deplored the fact that no one is left who speaks her language. She did not teach her children Delaware, because she said she thought as all her people had moved away, they would have no use for it. For almost all of their lives Mrs. Wilcoxen and her cousin, (Kansas Delaware) Kate Grinter [Frances Catherine Grinter, died 1908], a quarter blood Delaware Indian who died three years ago, attended the South Methodist church at White Church. The Sunday school children used to stand around in interested groups and listen to them converse in their beautiful Delaware tongue. But after Kate was gone Mrs. Wilcoxen had to croon to herself the accents of her 'dead' language. She used to go too into Kansas City, Kansas, to the home of Mrs. William Honeywell, a widow living at 1925 Hallock street, and talk with her in the Delaware tongue. But Mrs. Honeywell became deaf and could no longer converse.

An article in the [Kansas City?] Gazette Globe, dated 16 January 1911, p. 4, said

> Mrs. Melinda Wilcoxen, the last full-blood Delaware Iner Grandfather, known as Captain James Ketchum, was not only the head chief of the Delawares, but was a missionary among his people. His wife, "EcheLangoNaOckwe" was the daughter of a chief. Mrs. Wilcoxon's [sic] was also a chief and her mother was AquamDeGeOckwe (also known as AuPahMunDaQua). Her father was killed while hunting two months before Mrs. Wilcoxen was born. In 1851 she became married. [This conflicts with other information that said she was married in 1854.] A son, Oscar [Wilcoxen], and a daughter, Mrs. Buckland, both of whom live near White Church, survive Mrs. Wilcoxen. Another son, Emmett [Wilcoxen] died about a year ago. Funeral services will be held tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock at the Grinter Chapel, near White Church. Burial will be at the Grinter Chapel.

For years she had been known in the neighborhood as "Grandma Wilcoxen" and not even she herself knew her exact age, although it is believed to be about 82 years. Her husband, Rezin, was known at one time to be one of the wealthiest men in Wyandotte county, having owned more than a thousand acres of land, now valued at several hundred dollars per acre.

TAYLOR, Elizabeth "Betsy" [Needs link. Editor] --This family history is still being entered and has not been checked for typos, etc. as yet. This entry also covers the Zeigler Family. The two will be separated at some point. Use with caution while we are working on this family. In any event, there are some discrepancies, mostly minor, in two versions of the Taylor/Zeigler Family Histories we are using. We are attempting to reconcile them. The histories that we are using are both entitled, "Zeigler Family History." One was submitted by Virginia Lee Zeigler-Webb-Miller to Kansas Delaware Wanda Weeks many years ago. The other, prepared by Ruby Abbott, was submitted by John Zeigler recently with the permission of his father, Jimmy D. Zeigler. I am attempting to "meld" the two into one version. When there is a discrepancy between the two, I will give both versions. If the discrepancy is from Abbott, I will cite the datum in question as it differs from the Lee-Zeigler-Webb earlier submission. We encourage anyone with different information to help us ensure that we present a correct record. It should be noted that neither history cites the references for any information used. We will provide citations when they become available. As noted elsewhere, this is a research site. As such, our policy is to provide all "reasonable" information as leads for those working on family history. Having said so, it is then particularly important that the information not be used or passed along as "gospel." This is contrary to my training as a professional historian, but I believe that Native American research depends heavily on oral and family histories. Your cooperation is required to make it work for all of us. Editor.

According to family history, Betsy Taylor was born 1812 or 1813 in Delaware and her father, R. C. Taylor, was born ca. 1790-1798 in Pennsylvania. We are particularly interested in verifying the State of Delaware and Lenape-Delaware roots of the Taylors. R. C. Taylor operated a sawmill near Leavenworth ca. 1840-1850. We do not know the family name of her mother, but it appears that she was also named Betsy. We know that the Betsy Taylor who married Phillip Zeigler was a Lenape Delaware, as she appears on the listing of those Delaware who chose to remain in Kansas in 1966. She and Phillip married, possibly in 1825 in Missouri. He was born ca. 1805, possibly in Pennsylvania. Betsy was on a small list of names of the charter members of the first Delaware Church formed in 1841. [Presumably the White Church" in present, Kansas City, Kansas. Editor] Phillip died between 1866 and 1860. We are also interested in the early history of the Zeiglers. Betsy Taylor died in October 1867 and was buried in the Delaware Cemetery at Eudora, east of Lawrence, in Douglas County, Kansas. (See Cemeteries for details of the cemetery and of the persons buried therein. Submission of Descendant John Zeigler who notes that there is a Phillip Ziegler in the LDS Church Records of a Phillip Ziegler born 25 July 1804 in Rehrersburg, Berks Co., Pennsylvania. John's submission is based primarily on "Zeigler History" by Ruby Abbott.) Betsy had 1862 Allotment #134, Dawes Commission #32530, and 1904 Cherokee Census #10428. Although Betsy Taylor Zeigler was on the list of those who elected to remain in Kansas, she moved to Indian Territory (present Oklahoma) sometime after 1867.

The children of Elizabeth (Taylor) Ziegler as listed in the List of Delaware Who Elected to Remain in Kansas (with their 1862 Allotment Numbers and ages at that time) are: #135 Henry Zigler, age 17 and #136 Charles Zigler, age 14.

[The name "Zeigler, now preferred by the family, was variously spelled in the records as Zigler, Zeigler, and Ziegler. We will use the family preference Ziegler unless the record cited shows a different spelling. In Germany, the name is usually spelled Ziegler, which gives us the "ee" pronunciation of the name. Editor].

Betsy Taylor and Philip Zigler had seven children. The first four were born in Missouri, the last three in Kansas:

1. Logan Zeigler was born 3 April 1826 in St. Joseph, Buchanan County, Missouri [Charles Gleed, ed., Kansas Memorial, A Report of the Old Settlers' Meeting Held at Bismark Grove, Kansas, September 15th and 16th, 1879. Kansas City, 1879, p. 255, says that he was born in Stone Co., MO. and that he was the oldest inhabitant of Leavenworth County at that time. Logan died 19 December 1895. He married in 1860 [ca.1855, Abbott, p. 1] Sophia Schulze [also spelled as Schultz, [Ibid., p. 1). She was born 22 September 1834 in Neu Langsow, East Prussia, [Germany] and died 5 April 1925. They are buried in the Delaware Cemetery at Eudora, Kansas. Logan and Sophia became U.S. Citizens in 1870 (Ibid., p. 2). Logan and Sophia Zeigler's family were born and raised in the Fall Leaf area of Leavenworth County, Kansas. They all had land allotments from the Delaware Treaty of 1862 with the U.S. Government for their farms. All of them remained in the area, except John, who moved south with his family to Coffeyville, Kansas in the early 1900s. Emily Zeigler never married and stayed on with her mother.

Logan and Sophia had five children:

(1) Barbara Zeigler was born 1856 and died before 1866. She was buried in the Delaware Cemetery at Eudora, Kansas.

(2) John Johnson Zeigler was born in Big Stranger, Leavenworth County, Kansas on 22 August 1862. He married 6 June 1885 [6 May 1858, Ibid.,] at Lawrence, Kansas [Fall Leaf, Kansas], Ibid.] Emma Caroline Warren born 27 March 1864 [24 March 1864, Ibid.] at Grain Valley, Missouri . She died 5 February 1932 in Coffeyville and was buried there. Emma was the daughter of Thomas Warren and Mary Catherine Perkins.). John became a citizen of the United States in 1870. John died 21 January 1952 and was buried in Coffeyville, Kansas. John and Emma had eight children:

1. Ida M. Zeigler born 6 July 1887 at Fall Leaf, Kansas, died 25 December 1959, married 4 April 1907 [15 April, Ibid., p. 3] at Lawrence, Kansas Fred M. Merrel, born 1850. They had one child. They divorced and she married 11 February 1911 at Independence, Kansas, Deskin D. Day, who was born 17 September 1875 and who died 17 February 1961). Cora and Deskin had no children.

2. Cora Alice (or Ellen) Zeigler, born 1 May 1889 [6 November 1889, Ibid.] , died 1903 in a flood [1902, Ibid., p. 2].

3. Henry Earl Zeigler (Ibid., p. 2, has "Rose" after his name), born 6 September 1891 [Ibid., 1890, p. 2], died 17 November 1967, married 4 July 1914 at Nowata, Oklahoma, Lucy Hedrick. They divorced. Henry Earl died in Coffeyville, Kansas and was buried in the Fairview Cemetery there. They had one child, Vernon C. Zeigler born 17 July 1915, died 9 March 1977 had three children. Henry and Lucy divorced and she died February 1939.

4. Logan Walter Zeigler, born 11 December 1893, died 14 June 1920, married 9 February 1914 Estella Cotton born 23 June 1891, died 20 June 1979. They had a daughter, Pearl Oliver Zeigler born 26 April 1917, died 28 July 1990, married 1 May 1948 Hazel May Faulkner , no children.

5. Mary Hattie Zeigler was born 5 September 1896 [1897, Ibid., p. 3) at Fall Leaf, Kansas and died 28 December 1978. She married 7 February 1918 at Nowata, Oklahoma, Alfred Vernon "Vernie" Forth. He was born 1 October 1896 and died 6 October 1936. She married first on 2 July 1918 [7 February, Ibid.] at Nowata, Oklahoma. He was born 1 October 1896 and died 6 October 1936 at the Veterans Hospital at Lawrence, Kansas. They had no children. She married second on 18 June 1938 [1940, Ibid.] Leo Edward Gaughan (born 16 July 1909, died 1 June 1977. They had no children.

6. Richard "Dick" (Ibid., p. 9) Arthur Zeigler born 27 October 1898 [1899, Ibid.] at Fall Leaf, Leavenworth County, Kansas, died 4 August 1952, buried in the Fairview Cemetery at Coffeyville, Kansas, married 3 April 1923 at Nowata, Oklahoma, Maude Faye Debo, born 16 August 1901, the daughter of John Ranson Debo and Luellen Brown. She was born in Elk City, Kansas, the daughter of John Ranson Debo and Luellen Brown. They had 12 children: Emma Luellan Zeigler, Virginia Lee Zeigler, Lionel Leon Zeigler, John Darrel Zeigler, Chester Vernon Zeigler, Pinkston Richard Zeigler, Philip Eugene Zeigler, Ronald Gene Zeigler, Donald Dean Zeigler, Lloyd Dale Zeigler, Floyd Gail Zeigler, and Caroline Faye Zeigler.

TIBLOW, Henry--He was born on 9 February 1818. Henry attended schools in the Shawnee Mission, Kansas, area. He settled in an area called "four houses" in the Delaware Reserve (present Kansas). The area in which he lived became known as Tiblow, later changed to Bonner Springs, Kansas. Citizens of Bonner Springs celebrate "TIBLOW DAYS" annually each August. Henry helped his brother, Moses, run the ferry across the Kaw River. Henry married Mary Ann "Polly"

Marshall (whom see). Their children are listed under her name. Henry was a medical doctor, a chief, and an Interpreter for the United States for several treaties. The treaties included the Agreement with the Delaware and Wyandot Nations of Indians on 14 December 1843, the Treaty between the Delaware and the United States at Washington, District of Columbia, on 6 May 1854, the Treaty of Sarcoxieville, Kansas, on 30 May 30 1860, and as a member of the Delaware-Cherokee Delegation in 1866. He could speak seven different languages including English, French, and five different Indian languages. The photograph below was from a group photograph taken in 1866. His 1862 Allotment number is 116; 1862 Delaware Census No. 780; and on the list of those who retained their tribal status 1862 as No. 3. (Faye Louise Smith Arellano, transcriber, Delaware Trails: Some Tribal Records 1842-1907, "Delaware Indians Who Have Elected to Retain Their Tribal Relations At the Delaware Agency, February, 1867", p. 189.) Henry died on 16 December 1881.Henry is buried in the Armstrong-Secondine Cemetery located approximately five miles east of Nowata, Oklahoma in a remote wooded area. According to his grave marker, he was born 9 February 1818 and died 6 December 1881 at the age of 64. A photograph of the grave monument of Henry Tiblow can be found under the Armstrong-Secondine Cemetery under Cemeteries. The research on Henry Tiblow and his family and the location of his grave was done by researcher and descendant Vickie Wilkins.
(We are perplexed as to why we cannot seem to find the ancestors or very much about the early life of this prominent Delaware. We would appreciate knowing if there is anyone out there who can help us learn more about Henry Tiblow. Editor)

The Tiblow Cabin. The photograph was probably taken in 1907 or 1908. The cabin was probably torn down in 1910. (The image was submitted by Researcher/Descendant Vickie Wilkins on 9 December 2003.)

TWEHULLAHLAH

The Ketchums are a difficult entry, full of complications and conflicting information. At this point, we are merely reflecting what is available in the literature about the Ketchum Family. Contributions from Ketchum descendants would be helpful to help us provide accurate information. The two "critics" we have had of these entries have not been willing to share their own information for inclusion. The data presented are meant to be used as an aid by Ketchum researchers and are not definitive..

The first entry is based on Helen York Rose, I Walked in the Footsteps of My Grandfather, pp. 174a, 177-180, 182, published in 1989. Some of the data conflicts with other sources. As Helen York Rose says on page 175, "The Ketchum Family is a little harder to work on...[as] in the other families I worked on.

1. Twehullahlah. [Possibly born about 1760] His names supposedly translates into "Could Run and Catch Deer" or Catchum=Ketchum, hence the family English name of Ketchum. Twehullahlah was brave of the Delaware tribe, not a chief. He married first Ahkechelungunaqua, a sister of Memshaquaowha (Captain Patterson). (According to Helen York Rose, I Walked in the Footsteps..., p. 177, she was of the Turtle Clan). She died about 1805. Their children were:

2. Lapinnihe had a daughter killed about 1820 or 1821 by the Miami who stole her horses and personal possessions, including a ceremonial doll. He was chief of the Cape Girardeau Delaware and joined Chief Anderson at James Fork, MO, where he died in 1826.

2. Tawhelalen signed the 1832 peace treaty as the third Delaware signature.

3. Jonas Ketchum born 1807 and was married by 1893.

3. Walustamoqua, born 1817, married first Gen. Jackson and married second Billy Panchael.

3. Lemuel P. Ketchum, born 1836.

2. Tahleeockwhe (Captain Jack, or possibly James Ketchum), was born 1780 in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, died 11 July 1857 at White Church, Kansas and was buried there in the White Church Cemetery. He served in the War of 1812 under General Cass, enlisting 18 June 1812 and being discharged 1 October 1812 at Fort Wayne, Indiana. Tahleeockwhe became the Chief of the Turtle

Clan in 1826, and was Head Chief from 1849 until his death in 1857. He applied for bounty land on 3 March , Jacket No. 183943

Tahleeockwhe was a member of the Methodist Church South for 22 years. His wife is not mentioned. National Archive Records)

3. Quaanoxie was born in born 1802. An entry on page 179, that "appears" to be children of Tahleeockwhe, says, that she gave gives Henry Armstrong as a nephew and Rachel Anderson as a niece.

3. Son Toome was killed while on the Platte River in Sioux country in 1848. (Trail Guide, "The Kansas City Posse," Sept. 1955, p. 12 and Allen W. Farley, "Delaware Indians in Kansas 1829-1867 (1966).

3. Son Teehee was killed while on the Platte River in Sioux country in 1852. (Ibid.)

3. Rebecca Ketchum, born 1804

3. Elizabeth Ketchum, born 1810

3. Neshenoktase, born 1812, married Buffalo Woman, born 1809, died 1863, Kansas.

4. Walepahkeno, born 1842, married first French Wilson and second Joseph Thompson. Her children, spouse not specified:

Helen York Rose, I Walked in the Steps of My Ancestors, p.175:

In May 1854, the Honorable Andrew H. Reeder, first Governor of the new Territory of Kansas, first visited the Delawares on the reservation in Kansas. Their Chief at that time was Captain Ketchum. At that time, he was more than 80 years of age. He told Governor Reeder that he was born in Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania, but being very young when his folks left the valley, he did not remember anything about the valley. (Oscar Jewell Harvey, History of Wilkes Barre ((1909)), p. 423.

Interestedly, Helen York Rose, ibid, also said,

I read where a white boy was captured by the Delaware Indians in the Wyoming Valley, Pennsylvania. His name was Ketchum.
He was a captive for some time and escaped. Could he have fathered a child while he was a captive? It had happened many times before.

The following item by Helen York York, I walked in the Footsteps of My Ancestors, p.

176, because I don't know where exactly to put it at the moment. It is entitled, "Aunt Barbara."

> In Kentucky, the men had gone away from the fort for days. They had been lulled into a false feeling that things were safe. The Indians hadn't been active for some time. The ladies and children were busy with the family chores of pioneer life. Quietly the Indians had crept up to the edge of the trees and all at once with frightening yells, they attacked the fort.
>
> When it was over, the Delaware Indians took a mother and her daughter as hostages. The father was a German man, fearless. His wife prayed that the men would come back before they had been taken too far away. The mother was frail and couldn't keep up with the fleeing Delawares, and they killed her. On they raced with the little girl, Barbara. The girl wasn't rescued and was adopted by an elderly Delaware woman. She was kind to her white daughter. When she died, all of her possessions went to the white girl.
>
> Barbara lived alone in the cabin for some time and, at last, she gave up hopes of getting back to her white family. She married an Indian and bore one daughter. Barbara's Delaware husband died, and she and her daughter lived alone for a while. The traders were very attentive toward Barbara and she married a French trader. Her second husband soon died, and again she and her daughter were alone. They were quite well-to-do as Barbara had all her husbands trader goods.
>
> Barbara's daughter married a full blood Indian and had six children by him. They all removed to the Delaware Reservation in Kansas in the Indian removal. They had been converted in Ohio and were among the first to join the Methodist Church in Kansas. Barbara was about 70 years old at that time and lived very well. Two of her grandsons were Charles and James Ketchum who became Methodist preachers. Charles and James Ketchum were the sons of George Ketchum, so he would have been the son of Aunt Barbara's daughter. George was the son of Chief Jack/James Ketchum and his first wife.

Helen York Rose, ibid, adds:

> My great-uncle William C. Smith told his daughter, Nina Smith Swanson, that Aunt Barbara moved to Indian Territory with the Delawares. He said that she lived at Big Cabin, Oklahoma, and he remembered he because of her beautiful blue eyes (Family Legend)

Relative to the above is a Ketchum origin story that may have come from Rev. L. B. Statler's Journal, perhaps. p. 70. It is disjointed and rather hard to follow, but should probably be kept in kind for anyone doing Ketchum Family research:

He tells of the capture of a fort located where Louisville, Kentruckyy now stands and the killing of all the inmates except a mother and a little girl who were led away in captivity. The mother not being strong enough to travel as fast as the march, was tomahawked but they carried the little girl with them to their distant home in the North. She was reared among the Indians, but never forgot her home. She married an Indian by whom she had one daughter. In the course of time the daughter grew up and married a Delaware Indian. She raised up quite a family of sons, who were almost like white men, their complexions were so fair. They were men of intelligence, and spoke English very readily. When the Missionaries came among the Delawares they found this white woman , then a venerable woman of seventy years, living in a comfortable hewed log house like any other civilized woman. She was the first to welcome the Missionaries when they came. She could converse in Indian, French and English and made a good interpreter. She and her daughter and grandchildren were the first to come and united with the Church, and thus formed a little nucleus. The grandsons subsequently became very ready interpreters and two of the m afterwards became preachers of the gospel. The family name of the grandsons was Ketchum. The two preachers were Charles and James Ketchum. The person submitting this item, said that there must be more to this is the Statler Journal as Edith Ketchum of California wrote her that the kidnapped white child married an Indian and had one daughter and when he (the Indian) died then she married a French trader who also died and then she moved back with the tribe with her little girl and lived until she died. She was known only as "Aunt Barbara. by the missionaries. [I am trying to find the name of the person who submitted the article, If anyone knows of the whereabouts of the Statler Journal, I would be pleased to know, Editor]

Readers please note that submitters of family data are responsible for the accuracy of the data and obtaining the permission of living persons.

There are are some problems in above items. but they are included here for the benefit of Ketchum Family researchers in having all that has been printed about the family. As usual. use the above and other data with caution.

AUDLEY PAUL DEFRIES

Audley Paul Defries was the son of Nathan F. Defries and Jane (family name unknown) Defries. Audley Paul was born in 1832 in Barren County, Kentucky. He died on 27 July 1882 and was buried in the Grinter Chapel Cemetery in present Kansas City, Wyandotte County, Kansas. He is believed to be the first Defries to go to Wyandotte County, Kansas, about 1860. As noted, he married Mary Jane Grinter, who was born 3 May 1843 on the Kansas Delaware Reserve, now Kansas City, in Wyandotte County, Kansas. In the 1880 Census for Wyandotte County, Mary Jane [Grinter] Defries is listed at age 37 as keeping house, her father born in Kentucky, and her mother born in Arkansas. [It should be noted that her mother was supposedly born in Ohio, but in the 1880 census she is also reported to have been born in Indiana.] In that census, Audley Paul (erroneously listed as "S. P. Defries") at age 49, was occupied as a farmer born in Kentucky, and his parents were born in Kentucky. [The principal source for the Defries data given hereafter is Genealogy of the Defries Family of Wyandotte County, Kansas by Mrs. Delores Potter of Kansas City, Missouri, published privately possibly in the 1960s. [I have fund some errors on my family and others in this source . If you find errors on yours, let me know, and I will correct them. Editor] This source is the best for the Defrees/Defries/Deforest families beginning with Asher Defrees who married Jane _____. The name of this branch of family originally was De Forrest or spelling variations thereto, then Defrees with various spellings, then Defries with its variations. Other branches of the family have kept the Deforest name as well as Defreest. The children of Audley Paul Defries and Martha Jane Grinter listed herein are described more fully in the biography of Mary Jane Grinter.

The contact for those interested in Randolph Elementary School information is Michelle Durkes. She and her husband, Kevin, are collecting memorabilia and would welcome anything that you who attended Randolph would like to contribute. Tier email address is kdurkes40@cox.netHerewith her answer to my letter on 26 July 2006:

> It is always wonderful to hear from a former Randolph student. I am the school historian for Randolph Elementary, a place very dear to our hearts here in the Durkes household. My husband attended Randolph in the late 60's and early 70's and then all four of our children attended there over a span of about 18 years from the middle 80's until 2003. We have a granddaughter who will start kindergarten there next fall (2007). Randolph has been like a second home to us for many years. I am honored to be able to discover and preserve all the history I can about the school. Three years ago we held the 75th anniversary at the school and I met many wonderful alumni, all with great stories to tell. I had several of them come and speak to different classes at Randolph to give the students a taste of what the school was like over the first 75 years. The kids and teachers loved hearing all about Randolph's past. I also had the 5th grade students each interview an alumni from each of the years at Randolph so they could get a one on one view of Randolph history. It was a great project, the students learned so much and so did I. At the 75th anniversary celebration I had everyone who attended fill out a form telling me about themselves and when they attended the school as well as any special memories they wanted to share. I also arranged for the walkway out front to be uncovered and the flowering crabapple trees to be re-planted as a 75th anniversary commemorative project. One of my sons best friends was looking for an Eagle Project for Boy Scouts and since he was an alumni of Randolph I thought it made a perfect project. When the walkway was uncovered and it was discovered to be just gravel we decided to start a commemorative brick drive and so we have been selling bricks for the walkway for three years now and we are about ready to lay the final bricks. I would like to mail you one of the forms for you to tell me a little about yourself and your history at the school. I will also include a brick order form in case you would like to be included in the walkway. I would love to have the newspaper clippings and anything else you want to share for our history collection. You can mail the form I send you back with your donated history items to my home at --- 1737 SW Webster Ave. Topeka, Ks 66604. Thank you so much for sharing some historical items with me, I look forward to receiving them. It's always so exciting to see and hear more about Randolph. I will be happy to look through my alumni list and send you contact information on anyone who attended during your years at Randolph. I will get their permission to give out their information first, of course. Please feel free to contact me anytime regarding Randolph. Michelle Durkes, Randolph Historian kdurkes40@cox.net

Randolph Elementary School 1932-1938 (age 6 to age 13). Tommy walked to Randolph Elementary School, about .6 mile away, twice a day, going home for lunch, rain, snow or sunshine. Some streets had back alleys that added to the variation of the walk. Sometimes I walked alone and sometimes with a neighboring classmate.

From Home at 1120 SW High Avenue to Randolph Elementary School, at 1400 SW Randolph Avenue

(From a March 1983 letter from Florence Hahn to Tom Hahn: "So have had a walk. There is a slight chill at times and sun goes under for a few minutes and then out. You want a sweater on and turn the corner and want it off. You know how that goes and I thot about one time in kindergarten r 1st grade. You didn't want to wear a sweater to school in afternoon. It was one of those changeable days in early spring, our first one, and you begged me to let you go without and a norther wind came up in afternoon. and it was very cold, then you came all sniffly and almost bawling you were so cold."

From grade cards:
Kindergarten, school year 1932-1933, teacher Vivian Peak. Enrolled Sept 12th, 1932, school year 1932 to 1933

To Parents:

The kindergarten is a place where little children play and work together. We have attempted to have the play directed toward useful purposes and to offer types of work so interesting and desirable that their performance seems a pleasure rather than a task. Both work and play are planned to develop habits and attitudes that are desirable in the development of good citizenship.

We have listed certain items of subject matter and character development to which we shall call your attention on each report card date. We should like to have your hearty co-operation in this work.

Very truly yours,
A. J. STOUT,
Supt. of Schools.

Habits and activities well developed are marked S.

Habits and activities that show improvement are marked I.

Habits and activities that are unsatisfactory and need your co-operation are marked U.

Randolph Cub Pack (article from a Topeka newspaper in 1937): Scout Organization Outlined at Meeting at Randolph School The Randolph Cub Pack completed its organization Tuesday evening at a meeting held at the Randolph school. The Pack has been in the process of organization for the last two months, starting with a training course for the parents, the selection of a Pack committee, and chiefs, who are older serving in neighboring scout troops. The Randolph Pack organization is composed of the following Den Dads serving as the Pack Committee: T. O. Hedrick, Gary Bbeecroft, Dr. Ray Wooodworth, D. H. Leighton, Perry Pitcher, Rae Shrens, Lendrum McEachron, R. E. Wise and Richard Barnett. The Den Mothers are: Mrs. W. F. Hahn, Mrs. Devere Allen, Mrs. Robert Bunten, Mrs. C. W. Menninger, Mrs. H. T. Davis, Mrs. Glenn Romig, Mrs. W. G. Walton, Mrs. Jack Ecord and Mrs. J. Arthur Meyers.

The Randolph School building continues to function as an elementary school and is now, of course integrated. During the Brown [versus the Topeka, Kansas Board of Education], it was the white school cited as the second possible attendance center for the following plaintiff's child: Lena Carpenter's daughter, Catherine. [It is interesting to note that SchoolTree.org reports the following mixture of students among its 316 total.: Native American 12, Black 56, Hispanic 28, White 214. It is too bad that I missed the diversity of students while attending this school.] Gone from the front (north) side of the building ais the graveled walkway and the beautiful cherry trees flanking the walkway.

Boswell Junior High School at SW 12th Street and Boswell Avenue, Topeka, Kansas 1938-1941: Tommy generally rode his bicycle to Boswell Junior High School, about .9 mile a day, again going home to lunch each day. The school building is no longer there. Junior high was very important in forming wonderful friendships and experiencing very good teachers. Tommy was the editor of the Boswell Broadcaster and a cheer leader. Topeka Library Building on the Capitol Grounds. This building was razed and a new library was built on West Tenth Street. The Capitol is to the left. In the 1930s, 1940s, and 1950s one could climb stairs to the top of the building for magnificent views of the city. The street car was used on the Eight Avenue line. In the background to the right is the First Presbyterian Church where Tom Hahn attended meetings of Boy Scout Troop 2.

Topeka High School, 1941-1944 Diploma: Tom sometimes walked, sometimes rode his bike, sometimes took a bus, and sometimes caught a ride with the good Wilcox neighbors behind to Topeka High School some 1.42 miles nearly two miles away. Patty Wilcox was in my 1944 Graduating Class. Topeka High School was, and remains, one of the most beautiful high schools in the country. Being a mid-termer, that is, one who began school in January rather than September, he took extra courses each term and one summer course in order to finish high school in two-and-a-half years. On 10 October 2004, over 60 years after graduation, Tom was inducted into the Topeka High School Hall of Fame.

Designed by Topeka Architect Thomas W. Williamson, Topeka High School was completed in 1931 at a cost of more than $1 million. Today it is one of the city's most distinguished landmarks. The mast spar from "Old Ironsides" can be seen on the east lawn of the school. Visitors are welcome on school days.

The courses Tom Hahn took in high school were geared toward entering college. With this in mind, Tom took advantage of an academic scholarship to attend the University of Kansas, at Lawrence, about 25 miles from Topeka. During his one term there, he lived at the Battenfeld Hall scholarship hall on Louisiana Avenue. During World War II, most colleges and universities were on a tri-semester system. Accordingly, Tom was at KU from July until October in the College of Engineering as an aspiring Chemical Engineer. The term was busy with working for coach Fogg Allen, working at the scholarship hall, being in the symphony orchestra and the band, and being on the track team, and being an active member of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity and the Phi Mu Alpha Music Fraternity, being a member of a Methodist Church choir, going to Topeka on some weekends, and generally engaged on university activities. All this came to a short end when Tom enlisted in the United States Navy at Kansas City, Missouri on 6 October. He was subsequently was sent to Memphis, Tennessee on 22 October. For most of his life, Tom tried to piece together an education, taken advantage of opportunities as they arose, but it was not always easy due to work situations in the navy. His motto regarding education was, and remains, Vek yzhi, vek ychi) Russian saying: Live a hundred years, learn a hundred years. Only twenty-two years to go!

Letter of Introduction from the Director of the Institute of Far Easter Languages, Yale University to "Y-CY" on Graduation from Yale in 1957. Somehow I forgot that I had the letter and never used it when I went to the Republic of China later that year on a navy assignment to the Taiwan Defense Command at Taipei. Probably a missed opportunity.

I mailed you a letter last month. I do not know whether you have received it or not. How are you and Mrs. Han? I hope you let me know soon.

Congratulations! Your father is the Governor of Taiwan. Presently one of my students, Naval Lieutenant Hahn is ordered to go to Taiwan. He has good school grades and is very interested in learning anything about China. He is also very nice to the Chinese people. This letter serves the introduction of him with whom you might like to talk. Perhaps he might need some help during his stay in Taiwan. I would highly appreciate it if [of] any help you might give to him.

36 Sailors Make The Grade; Prepare For V-12 Training

Thomas F. (Tommy) Hahn seaman 1/c, left [Topeka, Kansas] Friday to enter V-12 training at Southern Methodist university, Dallas, after spending a week's delay enroute visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W, F. Hahn, of 1120 High. A former Kansas university student, he entered the Navy last October and recently completed radio training at Memphis. (Topeka Capitol or Journal)

Here Comes The Navy

The Navy has come to the Forty Acres in almost a mass movement. Fifteen hundred Navy men in blues and khakis are a substantial addition to the wartime student body. Capt. Rawson J. Valentine is commander of the unit.

The naval unit here is composed of the V-12 and the Naval ROTC. The larger of these two groups, the V-12's are taking their prerequisite training for midshipman's school. Most of them are taking either engineering or premedical courses as part of their college work.

The khaki-clad NROTCs take technical courses in addition to their normal studies and are commissioned as ensigns at the end of their period of training. From here they go into active service in whatever duty they are assigned.

All the V-12 trainees wear regular sailor uniforms and the NROTSs wear officer-type navy blue uniforms in the winter and khaki in the summer.

Over a year before the nation went to war, students were a little bewildered to see boys in navy blue shooting the sun, working navigation problems, and drilling on the Forty Acres. These were the NROTC who, in 1940, were the first training unit at the University.

Later the V-12 reservists and the V-5 preparatory flight cadets became part of the naval unit, but at the present time only V-12s and NROTCs are in the training program.

With a well-trained staff of experienced Navy officers, the unit has made rapid progress in instilling in the plebes the traditions, training, and principles of the Navy. They have been allowed to continue their college training so as to make better seamen. With the technical courses and modern equipment to be found at the University the Navy is turning out skilled men to handle the highly technical equipment of modern warfare.

Yet the Navy is a definite part of the student body—a large and active part. Both the V-12 trainees and the NROTC group attend regular University classes. They are allowed to become members of fraternities, run for offices, and vote in campus elections, and participate in intramural and Varsity sports.

The trainees have taken an active part in such campus organizations as the "Y," the forensic societies, and student publications.

The university is turning out men not limited to technical knowledge only but having experience in other fields as well. These boys, along with the civilians who study with them, will be the generation which will make the peace.

The brief history of this organization below is from the web site http://www.fas.org/irp/agency/navsecgru/history.htm

> The Naval Security Group traces its origins back to the first days of electromagnetic communications in the early part of the 20th century. The history of naval cryptology has a long tradition of service to the Navy and the nation.
>
> The Navy has been concerned with protecting its signals against unauthorized use since the Civil War. More dramatic developments in cryptology came after the advent of radio communications in the Navy around the start of the 20th century. Beginning almost with the first wireless transmission from a Navy ship in 1899, Sailors and Marines have been assigned duties in communications security and intelligence. They conducted numerous experiments in this new field of warfare during World War I and dedicated themselves to drawing appropriate lessons from this experience in the years following.
>
> The Code and Signal section of the Naval Communications Service undertook some cryptologic duties when the United States entered the war in 1917. In July 1922, it was assigned the familiar organizational title OP-20-G, which was retained until after World War II. Between 1924 and 1935, the Naval cryptology service developed operationally, culminating in the formation of the Naval Security Group effective 11 March 1935. That date marks the first appearance of the word "Group" in the title of the Naval cryptology organization and is observed as the birth of the Naval Security Group.

A handful of officers and small cadre of enlisted personnel trained themselves during the interwar period in the specific skills and knowledge of Naval signals exploitation and security. These pioneers formed the nucleus of the Communications Intelligence Organization during World War II. At the height of the war, nearly 10,000 naval specialists participated in the world-wide activities of the Naval Security Group. Their contributions played a role in all major campaigns of the war.

After 1945, the Navy was reduced in size and the consolidation of functions became necessary. The Navy Cryptologic organization was renamed Communications Supplementary Activities in 1945 and the trend toward centralized control continued. Increasingly complex technology and more sophisticated equipment added new responsibilities and accelerated the movement toward career specialties in signal exploitation and security. In 1948, officer designators and enlisted ratings were established for cryptologic personnel. A closer alliance with Army and Air Force Cryptologists was formalized in 1949 with the establishment of the Armed Forces Security Agency. The title "Naval Security Group" was adopted in late 1950 and has remained the official name. [The Naval Security Group was disestablished on 30 September 2005.]

Arlington Hall Station, Virginia, Location of the Armed Forces Security Agency (AFSA)

Arlington Hall was the headquarters of the US Army Intelligence and Security Command's (INSCOM) cryptography effort during World War II. It was named for its location in Arlington Hall Station, Arlington, Virginia—a private girls' school which was commandeered during the War. Arlington Hall was in many respects similar to Bletchley Park in England, though military and only one of two primary cryptography operations in Washington during the War (the other was the Naval Communications Annex, also housed in a commandeered private girls' school). Arlington concentrated its efforts on the Japanese code PURPLE while Bletchley admitted to the Americans in 1943 that it had broken the Nazi Enigma cypher. Arlington Hall eventually became one of the facilities of the National Security Agency or NSA after it was created. The Arlington Hall effort was comparable in influence to other Anglo-American WW II-era technological efforts, such as the cryptographic work at Bletchley Park, the Naval Communications Annex, development of microwave radar at MIT's Radiation Lab and the Manhattan Project's development of nuclear weapons. 9 April 1950 - 10 November - Communications Unit 34.2 (Sixth Fleet Language Officer. Sixth Fleet (Mediterranean) Heavy Cruisers USS NEWPORT NEWS (CA-148), USS SALEM (CA139), and USS DES MOINES (CA-134) This was probably the best tour of duty that I had from a point of view of location and pleasurable things to do. Visiting various ports and enjoying the exotic life on the Mediterranean at Villefranche-sur-Mer, the home port of the Sixth Fleet, were extremely enjoyable.

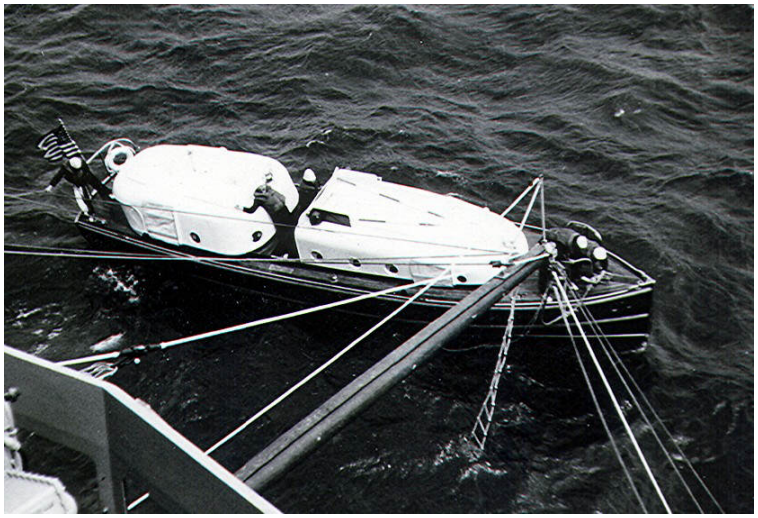
R4D Transport at Algiers 1950 enroute to Naples, Italy (Hahn Collection)



To go from Washington, District of Columbia, to the Sixth Fleet at Naples via Port Lyautey, French Morocco, with the Military Airport Transport Service (MATS) was not simple in 1950. First I flew from Washington National Airport to New York City, then to Westover Field, Massachusetts, where we spent the night, then via PB4Y2 (C-54) to Goose Bay, Labrador, then to the Azores where we spent another night, then to Port Lyautey. An engine in this R4D aircraft in which I flew from Port Lyautey, French Morocco to Naples, Italy. caught fire on the Port Lyautey-Algiers leg.

Heavy Cruiser USS NEWPORT NEWS (CA-148)

The NEWPORT NEWS operated under the Atlantic Fleet Command until she joined the Mediterranean Fleet on January 6, 1950. Relieving the USS Des Moines, she became flagship for Vice Admiral John Ballentine, Commander Sixth Fleet.

She served as Fleet Flagship for Vice Admiral Ballentine for a period of five months, during which she visited 15 ports in the Mediterranean. She was relieved by the USS Salem in Gibraltar, British Colony, May 26, 1950. During the three-month yard period that followed, Captain Edward Parker relieved Captain J. S. Laidlaw as Commanding Officer. The NEWPORT NEWS sailed from Norfolk Naval Shipyard to the Caribbean Sea during September 1950 and underwent a refresher training course for seven weeks, operation from Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

There is a little story that goes along with this photograph. I reported as an ensign to Admiral Ballantine's Staff, the Admiral of the Sixth Fleet, while his flagship, the USS NEWPORT NEWS (CA-148) was anchored at Naples, Italy. The first evening aboard I had liberty and wanted very much to go into Naples, the first place that I would visit in Europe. I went up to the Quarter Deck to see if I could catch a boat going ashore. It was a stormy night and the seas were very rough. The OOD (Officer of the Deck) said, "There is no liberty, but no boats because of the rough sea. " I said, "I would REALLY like to get ashore, so he said, "It is too rough for a gangway but you can climb down the Jacob's Ladder to get to the boat below." This was sort of a flexible metal narrow ladder with round rungs. Halfway down, someone above stepped on my hands, and I yelled, "Get the hell of my hands or I will fall into the drink!" When I got to the bottom I saw this nice boat and I pulled the entry curtain and got it. It was really plush. Just as I was looking around the curtain opened and all I could see at first was one broad strip, and two narrow stripes on a sleeve, the mark of a Vice Admiral. It was Admiral Ballentine. When he got in, I said, "You don't know me, sir, but I reported to your staff this afternoon as the Fleet Language Officer [a cover for intelligence]." Luckily, he thought that amusing and said he admired my zeal for wanted to go ashore!

In a varied operating schedule designed to maintain the readiness of the Navy to meet the constant demands of defense and foreign policy, Des Moines cruised from her home port at Newport, and after 1960, from Norfolk, on exercises of every type in the Caribbean, along the east coast, in the Mediterranean, and in North Atlantic waters. Annually between 1949 and 1967 she deployed to the Mediterranean, during the first 7 years serving as flagship for the 6th Task Fleet (known as the 6th Fleet from1 1960).

As a staff officer of the Admiral of the Sixth Fleet, I was expected to take part in numerous social activities where we were "showing" the American flag. The presence of Prince Phillip as the Commanding Officer of a British Ship, visits from such personages as the King and Queen of Greece, dancing with Rita Hayworth, flirting with Elizabeth Taylor (to the annoyance of her husband, Nicky Hilton, was it? getting a French friend elected as Miss Riviera of 1950, the presence of Gregory Taylor at the filming of one of the Hornblower movies, the presence of Errol Flynn and his yacht, ZACA at Villefranche-sur-Mer, and my confrontation with him on his yacht, being detained in Damascus by the secret police, etc., were among the things that made life hum in the Med.

11 November 1950-1951 -- Military Research Analyst, Russian Interpreter/Instructor, Armed Forces Security Agency, Arlington Hall, Arlington, Virginia,
14 April 1951 - Commissioned Lieutenant (junior grade) (O-2), United States Navy

THE

President of the United States of America.

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know Ye, that reposing special Trust and Confidence in the Patriotism, Valor, Fidelity and Abilities of THOMAS FREDERICK HAHN I do appoint him in the Naval Reserve of The United States Navy to rank from the FOURTEENTH day of APRIL, 1951. He is therefore carefully and diligently to discharge the duties of such office by doing and performing all manner of things thereunto belonging.

LIEUTENANT (JUNIOR GRADE)

And I do strictly charge and require all Officers, Seamen and Marines under his Command to be obedient to his orders. And he is to observe and follow such orders and directions from time to time, as he shall receive from me, or the future President of The United States of America, or his Superior Officer set over him, according to the Rules and Discipline of the Navy.

This Commission to continue in force during the pleasure of the President of the United States for the time being.

Done at the City of Washington this TWENTY-FIFTH day of JANUARY in the year of our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and FIFTY-FOUR and of the Independence of The United States of America the One Hundred and SEVENTY-EIGHTH.

LTJG Tom Hahn was not in the photograph because he was the Officer-of-the-Deck at the time and was aboard the ship. In the middle row, in the lineup of Chief Petty Officers and Officers, the third person from the left is, I believe, LTJG Theodore "Ted" Ted Fish, the Chief Engineer. Ted later played in several navy movies, usually as a tough Chief

Petty Officer. One time when my parents visited Long Beach, Ted and his wife showed up after a stint of gambling at Las Vegas. Among other things on that trip, he managed to flush $10,000--a considerable sum for a navy man in those days--down a toilet stool. I believe the second CPO/officer, second-from right, is Chief Bosun Joseph McElroy (Hahn Collection)

The second Gladiator, originally BAM-6 [HMS Blaze], was launched 7 May 1943 as AM-319 by the General Engineering & Drydock Co., Alameda, Calif.; sponsored by Mrs. Made line A. Silva; and acquired and simultaneously commissioned 25 February 1944 Lt. Comdr. Robert W. Costello in command. Recommissioned 29 February 1952 at Long Beach, Calif., Gladiator sailed 2 September for Japan, closing Sasebo 1 month later, and steaming to Wonsan, Korea, 27 October. She swept mines in those dangerous waters until returning to Sasebo 10 November and subsequently, until the spring of 1953 divided her time between minesweeping operations at Wonsan, Inchon, and Hungnam and replenishment and training exercises; in Sasebo and Yokosuka.

6 June 1952- 1 December 1953 -- Boat Control Officer (Amphibious Landings), Chief Engineer, and Operations Officer, Patrol Craft Escort (Control) USS PCEC 886, Amphibious Forces (Pacific Fleet/Korean Theater).

USS PCEC-886 Operating in the Pacific Ocean. (Collection) Tom Hahn on the bridge as the Officer-of-the-Deck, has the Con (control) of the vessel. The bridge in a PCEC is open to the weather. It was not a comfortable place to be in hot or inclement weather, or when inhaling diesel fumes, a condition caused when the wind from the stern is stronger than the forward speed on the vessel. We ate fumes all the way from Long Beach, California? to Yokosuka, Japan-- at seven knots I think it was. Whenever a diesel bus passes and I get a whiff of the fumes, I think of that trip. (The photo was purchased from a company that specialized in ship portraits.)

A similar vessel, PCE-881 Class Patrol Craft Escort, was laid down on 29 March 1944 by the Albina Engine and Machine Works, Portland, OR; Launched, 10 July 1944; Commissioned USS PCE-886, 31 May 1945; Reclassified Amphibious Control Vessel PCE(C)-886, (date unknown); Named Banning, 15 February 1956; Reclassified back to a Patrol Craft Escort PCE-886, (date unknown); Decommissioned, 1950 and placed in reserve at Columbia River, OR; Struck from the Naval Register, (date unknown). Fate unknown. [Editor: Check this description.] PCEC-886 (Patrol Craft Escort Control) was engaged in amphibious control training and operations operation out of San Diego in 1952. 1952-1953 the ship was engaged in amphibious operations in Japan and Korea during the Korean War. In that conflict, crew members earned the Combat Action Ribbon, the United Nation Service Medal, the Korean Service Medal for three campaigns, the Korean Presidential Unit Citation, and the Republic of Korea Medal. After undergoing preparations at the Hunter's Point Naval Shipyard in San Francis late in 1953, the ship was decommissioned Francisco in early 1954.]

On 4 March 1952, in the afternoon, at Yokosuka, Japan, we received this flash message. We only had part of the crew aboard as most of the crew was ashore. We got underway and were just about to drop depth charges at the designated place when we received another flash message not too. I have always wondered what this was about, as I know of no other attack by any Russian or Chinese submarine during the Korean War. I think that I will send this message to the Naval Institute to see if anyone has an explanation. (Hahn Collection)

U. N. Fake Invasion Costly to Reds

By SEAN CARTER

WITH U. S. JOINT AMPHIBIOUS TASK FORCE OFF NORTHEAST KOREA—(AP). The Army, Navy and Air Force combined today to stage a mock invasion of Communist northeast Korea and drew thousands of Red troops out into the open where they were plastered by Allied warplanes.

Nearly 100 ships including a battleship, six aircraft carriers and four cruisers—the greatest concentration of U. N. naval vessels since the Inchon landing in 1950—participated. So did thousands of well-trained American troops.

Allied warplanes strafed and bombed the beaches.

The troops took only a short ride. They clambered down cargo nets in full view of the Communist shore. Then the landing craft took them around to the other side of their mother ships and the soldiers, in full invasion gear, clambered back aboard.

the beach—but pulled up 4000 yards from shore and returned to the huge fleet.

The operation was the culmination of months of realistic training and planning. There was no plan to land but the operation was completely realistic in every other way.

The mock forces gathered off Kojo, south of the Red port of Wonsan and 33 miles north of the battle line on the east coast.

The sight of the great, gray fleet must have given the Reds the jitters.

One purpose of the mock invasion—dubbed "Operation Trojan Horse"—was to draw the Reds toward the coast so aircraft could strike them.

Three days before, Allied ships and warplanes had moved in to soften the Kojo area, exactly as in a real prelanding bombardment. The Reds returned the fire. Meanwhile, the troops practiced landings at Kangunj to the south in full view of friendly South Koreans.

One purpose of the mock invasion -- dubbed "Operation Trojan Horse" -- was to draw the Reds toward the coast so aircraft could strike them.

Three days before, allied ships and warplanes days before, Allied ships and airplanes had moved in to soften the Kojo area. exactly as in a real prelanding bombardment. The Reds returned the fire. Meanwhile, tnhe troops [one word illegible] at Kangunj [spelling?] in the south in full view of the South Koreans.

[A couple of comments regarding "Operation Trojan Horse." I was a lieutenant junior grade in the PCEC-886. We were a part of the Pacific Frleet Amphibious Forces. Our primary purpose was as an amphibious landing control center. Prior to this operation, our primary duty was the training of troops and ships in amphibious landings, both in California and Hawaii. During our tour of duty in the Korean War, we operated primarily out of Yokosuka and Sasebo, Japan in the Far East We operated pretty much out of Inchon. There was another PCEC or two in this particular operation. The only persons aware of the operation in our ship were the Captain, Ernest L. Carpenter, a full lieutenant, and the Chief Quartermaster. Captain Carpenter was a fine naval officer, the best that I have had. He and I were the only regular navy naval officers aboard. An operation of this sort was known as a form of "communications deception," where partial, misleading, or false information is leaked to the enemy. It is my understanding that that "certain" information or rumor was leaked to some troops and sailors who in turn spoke loosely in bars with each other or with the bar girls, some of whom passed the information along until it reached North Korea Intelligence. I was unaware of this happening, however. I had gone from an intelligence billet to this billet in the Fleet had nothing to do with intelligence. I was a line officer fulfilling sea duty. The trip in the Yellow Sea was a hard one in that the weather was lousy and we lost our navigation capability for a period and had to resort to the older means of navigation. The "bridge" of a PCEC was pretty much out in the open so the elements were doubly experienced by those on duty there. Fortunately, on e could always eat and sleep in the relative comfort of a ship.

The control center of an amphibious landing was a busy, concentrated effort that took place in the CIC (Combat Information Center). A lot of things happened in a relatively short period of time. In this particular operation, I THINK, our beach was "Green Beach," but I am not certain. During the operation a North Korean was attempting to interfere with my job of controlling our portion of the operation by simulating and countering commands in English to the landing craft. The standard procedure was to ignore such interference, but in my frustration I told him that I was having a hard enough time without his interference. To my amazement he stopped for one reason or another!

After the demanding tour at the National Security Agency in the Special Projects Office (1959-1962), the tour in Hawaii almost seemed like a vacation. Somehow I learned that passenger ships carrying the national flag reserved some limited space for military travel. I thought, "What the heck," and applied for it and was pleased to see that I managed to get a great cabin for my family and myself with the Matson Line in the SS LURILINE, I believe it was. An amusing incident happened on our arrival. Though the name Hahn is German (meaning "The Rooster,") with the same pronunciation it is also common as a Chinese or Korean name. In Chinese, "Han Ren" means a Chinese person. So, at the dock there was a Korean Family from the station named Hahn. The family head was "Duck Han." [I hope that I am remembering correctly that this happened in Hawaii and not in the Philippines.] The reception at the dock was with the traditional leis and all.

My sponsor, whose name I do not remember, kindly found us a nice house at the north end of the island, at Kawailoa Beach. It was probably only about 15-20 miles from the station at Wahiawa. The commute was very pleasant as it passed through sugar cane and fields and had very little traffic. The weather was perfect throughout the year and especially so at the beach. A famous beach, four or five miles to the northeast, was well known for its surfing and often depicted in movies at the time. I don't remember whether housing was available or not at that time on the station. Perhaps my department head preferred that I not live in the same place where he did. In any event, the location was very nice. Just down the beach a famous Vietnamese movie star had a house. I will have to look up her name, but it may have been Ngu something. One day, when I was not home, she was seen walking nude along the beach. Somehow, I seemed to miss a lot of good stuff in my life.

We had an interesting family next door. He worked as a salesman in a shoe store but was a part-time minister of the Gospel as well. Theirs was a very strict religion but I can't remember which. As an example, she told my wife that they bathed their two little children with their clothes on. (I certainly hope that they didn't see the Vietnamese movie star when she walked by!) One day, after the husband went to work, the wife was on her way to reach outside the kitchen door to get the milk that she thought that the delivery man had left as she didn't want it to spoil in the sun. For some reason, perhaps having stepped out of the shower or for whatever reason, she had no clothes on. Just as she got to the door, the milkman came up to te steps and startled her. The woman jumped in the broom closet next to the door, when to her utter surprise, the closet door was opened--by her husband, who saw his wife standing there naked. "Embarrassment, she said, " Oh, I thought it was the milkman." It seems that he kept a briefcase in the closet but had forgotten it and went back to the house to pick it up. This is a true story and seems even funnier when you consider how conservative the couple were.

One neighbors next door were Japanese-American and a neighbor a couple of doors down was native Hawaiian. I don't think Betsy was old enough to be in school in that tour. Chris went to high school, or a combination of junior high and high school at Haleiwa, but I will have to check within him on that. In any event, they were both exposed to all sorts of people with all sorts of backgrounds, as they had been in the Republic of China earlier. and I think those and other experiences in the military helped them become the tolerant, fair-minded people that they are.

[Chris Hahn commented on the above in part by saying--and I have added my comments to his:

> The famous surfing area was Waimea Bay to the north of Wailua where we lived. [Tom: We actually lived at Kawailoa Beach. Between us and the road to Haleiwa--Route 83--was an abandoned World War II auxiliary airstrip.]
>
> The fire department had surfboards on the truck for rescues. The surf at Waimea Bay would not even break until the swells were 20 or so feet, and I believe the highest waves there, and surfed! were on the order of 45 feet or so. There are pictures of surfers there, the waves actually look like they are 100 feet high because the surfer looks so small. The waves would sometimes form a pipeline and surfers would disappear in one on the face. It is some of the largest surf in the world.
> [Tom: One day while at that beach or passing there, there had been a drowning, so I took Chris and Betsy over to the body that there were working on to impress them of the danger of the waves--not to be taken lightly! The first time I tried snorkeling in the water off our beach I was slammed to the ocean floor and decided that that kind of sport was not for me. When I was young I was always in the water, but after four water incidents, three involving rescues, I not longer had that pleasure of being active in the water. One was at Blue Beach at Beaulieu near Villefranche, France (spelling?); one was at Kobe, Japan; and the other at a beach in northern Taiwan. Other tales for other days.]

The Luriline was a great ship! On the final leg of the trip back from the Philippines, from Hawaii to Travis Air Base in California, we rode in some turboprop plane and wasn't it about a 14 hour trip? The worst flight I've ever been on.

[Tom: Maybe not that long, but it seemed so, anyway. Perhaps I have a different perspective, having crossed the Pacific Ocean and the Atlantic ocean in prop planes where each of the legs took a long time. One time later, while on TDY from NSA to Japan, when I went to get my plane for the Hawaii--Hickham Air Force Base)--to Tokyo, there were photographers and journalists taking photos as it just happened that when I came along I was the first jet passenger to make the trip! I forget the type of aircraft, but probably a military of contract version of the Boeing 707.]

The school was Waialua Elementary School. Went to Haleiwa High School for part of the 7th grade maybe? before going to Philippines. Won first prize in the story telling class there. Wrote poetry about WWII submarine adventures for music class, much to the surprise, and not displeasure, of the teacher there, who encouraged me.

*[Tom: As mentioned, going to school there was a good experience. As I recall, there were cocoanut palms on the school grounds. Cocoanuts went commonly for five cent*s each.]

Wahiawa had a couple, a doctor and his wife, an Olympic gold medalist. The wife taught me to swim at the base pool, one on one, and gave the confidence to me that I needed to later do anything in the water. This may have been mom's idea, or yours? or both. I had a bad time with swim class at 4 corners elementary school in Silver Spring, just a few trips to a YMCA and mass, group instruction, no individual attention, and I couldn't swim until going to Hawaii. The husband doctor wrote a biology book, we had a copy for many years, after the divorce it was still on mom's bookshelf in Bethesda. What was his name, Holland? I think he was the station doctor maybe?

[Tom: They were an unusual couple, not your typical navy type. I don't remember the Olympic swimmer bit, but Chris would remember better than I. Their name was was Britton, Mel and Mary. One time we were having a lunch in Honolulu and she fainted at the table, but I think it was only a temporary condition. When he had served his obligatory time, they went to Dartmouth in New Hampshire, where I believe he was associated with the college. Later, when we were stationed at Winter Harbor, Maine, we went to visit there for a ski trip and stayed in a sort of small ski lodge with the beds in sort of a dormitory setup. Perhaps Chris and Betsy didn't go on that outing. I don't remembered what happened to them later. Both Chris and Betsy became excellent swimmers due to the training at Wahiawa and in the next tour at San Miguel.

We had an old 40's Packard that had no reverse gear, but otherwise was a great car.

[Tom: I bought a really old 8 or 10 cylinder Packard from Bob Curtin--I think it was, but not certain-- for $200. It had really been a great car in its time. I tried to change the spark plugs one time, but they were frozen in place. It ran so smoothly that a few times I accidentally left the car running as it really purred. One problem was that it didn't have a reverse gear. Once in a while I would forget and park head-in, so a couple of guyts would have to help me push it out to where I could get going. Do you remember that car? One time I was out in the sugar cane fields fishing at a pond and got stuck because of that. The car had a cracked winged window and I was afraid it wouldn't pass inspection. Because of the reverse gear thingy, I found a garage where I could drive in and then out straight through as I was afraid it wouldn't pass. I took it the garage of my Japanese-American neighbor. He saw the crack in the window and said he would fix it, which he did by taking a sledge hammer and breaking it out. I was speechless by his solution! He said the crack wouldn't pass but there was no requirement to have a window, or to have a reverse gear. I also bought a boat and motor from Curtin and kept it at a small lake near or at Wahiawa for a while before taking it home to Kawailoa Beach. It never worked out and I eventually sold it. I never heard anything about Bob Curtin after he left.

We went sports fishing a couple of times, never caught anything with me along, except, one time snagged a wooden sign, with the words "Peanut Pass" on it. One time we returned from a trip from Pearl Harbor, up the Kamehameha highway, stopped alongside the road, and watched with wonder the sight of a waterspout offshore, in a rain squall, that was lazily drinking its fill from the Pacific. It was still there when we got back in the car and continued home.

[Tom Comments: The "Peanut Pass" catch was caught on a tri sponsored by the Wailoa Fishing Club--I think that was the name. It was in contention for the tear for "The Most Unusual Catch," but lost out to a dead cow.]

I had some interesting boy scouts experiences there, experiences in the troop with the army style of camping, walks in the jungle ravine and through pineapple fields, with our Navy patrol, earned my scout hiking requirement for first class by walking up to the Kameya Maya pass and back down to Schoffield Barracks. And I did lots of reading, studying WWII Navy stuff and reading sci-fi from the base library, and dreaming of islands.

[Tom comments: The Boy Scout troop was at Schofield Barracks, not far to the west from the Navy Station. Being on an Army post, a lot of the leaders and events were patterned after army-style things. I had some minor job on a troop committee as I recall. I thin this is the lace where Chris told me being on a camping and hearing the legend of the "Crap Hand.", that ghostly hand that reached up and grabbed when as you sat on the seat of he latrine. Chris will have to affirm or deny the place, and perhaps even my memory of it.

One time there was a tidal wave alert, in the middle of the night, after the great Alaskan earthquake. We were evacuated from our beach home by local police and raced along the road to Haleiwa, then up the Kamehameha highway to Wahiawa where we watched the news for tracking of the possible wave. [Which never came.]

Being the second in charge or command is a hard thing to do, because you not only have to do your job right and please the boss, but be responsible for those under you. In this case, in loyalty I never said anything against my superiors to those working under me in loyalty and to try to be a buffer between them and the other person. The situation became so intolerant, that I went my the Captain in charge of the Navy Security Group for the Pacific area at Pearl Harbor. He sympathized with my situation, but wisely--as I learned better--told me that each of us would face a similar situation in our careers, and how we handled it was part of how were judged. His successor, another Naval Security Group captain, said to me at the change-of command ceremony with the officer concerned when he retired, "Now is the time to tell him off if you wanted to." I approached him with that in mind, then when the time came for me to do so I realized that by not saying anything made me a better, and satisfied, person.

A one-time Naval Security Department Head at Wahiawa was noted for his demanding ways. As an example, first thing each morning his yeoman, Chief Art Namoski (or Chief Buzz Clark brought him a cup of coffee and he invariably complained that the cup was not clean enough. This became boring, so at some point he took the cup to the head and cleaned it out in the urinal. (I won't get too specific here.) On inspection of the coffee cup, the officer in question said, "Chief Namoski, that is the way a coffee cup should gleam." [Once again I am corrected oh how I remember things and how others remember them. When I sent the anecdote to Art Namoski, He replied, "Here's the straight scoop on the coffee cup caper. On that particular morning the demanding LCDR called me into his office and wanted to know where his coffee cup was. I told him I would check it out and take care of the problem. When I went into the head, my seaman striker was bent over the toilet swishing something around. When I asked what he was doing, he turned around and said "nothing." I asked him to show me what he had behind his back and he showed me the coffee cup. I asked him if this is the way he always washes the cup. He said "Yes, Chief, are you going to put me on report?" I told him "No, you are following orders to wash out the coffee cup."]

During this tour the Navy ordered--to the best of my knowledge--the first African-American sailor to the department. As the assistant Department Head. I took the sailor into meet the Department Head. As usual. the latter didn't ask us to sit during the conversation but stand almost at attention in front of his desk. In his inimitable way, the Department Head put the sailor at ease by asking, "Are you a Negro?" The somewhat bewildered sailor answered, "I think I am. My father is a Negro and my mother is a Negro." The poor fellow was probably already sensitive enough about being the only one of his race assigned. I could have dropped through the floor in shame and embarrassment.

(John Gidusko mentioned that it was a real gasser the department head charged 50 cents for calling a Chief a Chief instead of a Chief Petty Officer, I guess. I was once talking to several "Chief" and he chewed me out for calling them "Gents" as that word was reserved for officers.) I don't really know what his problem was. A mustang (an enlisted man who has gone through the ranks) and had the technical skills, but he lacked something that made him a good leader. Sort of like the Captain in the film Mr. Roberts" or in "The Caine Court Martial." When his desk was cleaned out, the only thing that was found a new commander's hat, so perhaps he was disappointed as he didn't reach his goal in life. I found at many years later that he had committed suicide and I felt very sorry for him and his family.

We all had our little escapades as life was pretty laid back in Hawaii and in the service at this time. John Gidusko recalled that " One evening Bob Curtin ... [got this wild idea] and we went out to the Barber's Point NAS BEACH... and he set his chord organ right there on the sand, ran about a 200' extension cord to the rest room there... and we'd play music on the beach. Yeah, I know, weird!!! We weren't that good, we were still learning, I don't know why Dick Kirby put up with us." Dick Kirby was an RCA tech rep, that is, technical representative.

During my tour, the Naval Security Group ordered WAVES to the department. Because there had not been WAVES there before, toilet facilities had to be innovated for them. It just so happened that there was a broom closet across from my office. Because the walls were glass on two sides, I could see everything that went on in the passageways in that area. The tiny broom closet was converted into the WAVE officer's head. There was only one WAVE officer at that time. It was only large enough for a stool and a small sink. The sitter sat facing the door, which was about six inches from her feet. I heard voices in the passageway and looked up and saw two seam outside this head. The seaman who was in charge (apparently) said to the other seaman. "This here is the ladies' head. If the door is closed, knock three times. If there is no answer knock three times again And, just to be on the safe side, knock three times to be on the safe side." So, the trainee did just that and then pulled open the door and there facing him sat LT _____ . I don't know who was more surprised and never learned why she didn't call out that the head was in usual.

I almost got in trouble because of this same WAVE officer. As often happened, many officers stopped by the Officer's Club for a drink or two before heading home. One particular night I stayed a bit longer than usual. After drinking, I thought that this officer should not drive home by herself, so I drove her to Pearl Harbor where was lived, and then had to drive back home to the opposite north end of the island of Oahu where we lived at Kawailoa Beach. In trying to find her quarters I inadvertently went through a stop sign and was given a ticket by a Pearl Harbor policeman. It just happened at that time that the newspaper printed all the arrests made and that column was a column of popular reading. For several days I sweated someone reading my name. It was all done on my part as a gesture to help a fellow officer and someone under my command, but that could have been hard to explain! In those days it was much more common among service people--and probably others--after drinking, than it is now for most people.

One of the things I particularly enjoyed was the fishing and hunting. While there, I served as the President of the Honolulu Road and Gun Club, so had a chance to be in on some some good fishing trips and hunts. One benefit was to arrange fishing trips of the Boat Islander, owned and operated by Captain Bill Dotson and to have Special Services of the station pick up most of the expense. The boat operated put of Pearl Harbor as I recall. Go to Tom Hahn Family, Interest and Hobbies (Part 7), Hunting to see some photos of hunting on the Island of Hawaii. [More later]

The best catch we had on the Islander was this Allison (yellow fin) tuna caught by Chief Art Namoski. It is called an ahi in Hawaiian The fish put up a big battle and nearly wore Art down. The fish weighed about 224 pounds. Art commented in an email that the captain said if he knew that it was near a record fish, he would have stuffed in put a few weights to get the necessary poundage. Those identified so far, left-to-right: Chris Hahn, Tom Hahn, Orville Hinz, a mate on the boat, unidentified man with cap, maybe Seaman Sonny Eanes next to him, Art Namoski with his son, Mike, an, to Art's right, an unidentified man. Captain Bill Dotson probably took the photo. Our Japanese-American cleaning lady came over to the house one night where we had invited some people and made sashimi out of a portion of the of the yellow fin tuna. (Provided by Art Namoski)

Tom with catch from a fishing trip in the Islander in about 1963. The first and second fish were mine, the first a mahi-mahi (dolphin) and the second an ono (kingfish). After one of these fishing trips I put the fish in the station freezer. The electricity went off there and no one bothered to tell me so the fish was/were spoiled and that was a darn shame. (Provided by Art Namoski)

The only overnight trip I took in the Islander turned out to be a bit different than we had intended when we took the station dent, Russ Corio. After we had got out a ways, Russ complained of seasickness and finally begged us to take him back, so we did, rather grudingingly, of course. We probably should have been more sympathetic as it could have happened to anyone of us. He e looked pretty sad there on the dock with his head on his arms waiting for his wife to pick him up.When I mentioned this to Orville Hinz, Orville said that Russ lives in Rockville, Maryland. "Went on a Caribbean cruise last fall with them. the Larry Donovans, and the Leo Pecks, We were concerned that Russ might get very seasick and "demand" that the cruise ship return to port. But he didn't and we had a good cruise. We still kid him about his aborted Hawaii fishing trip." Seasickness can be a very serious illness. When I was in the USS GLADIATOR(AM-319), the recalled lieutenant who was the Executive Officer had such a problem that he was transferred off the ship to other duty

We only caught one kind of fish on this trip, opaka-paka, I think was the name. About 300 of them. Bill Dotson sold them when he got in but I can't remember whether or not we got a share. I sort of doubt it. Maybe the captain's privilege. Out of boredom, Dotson' helper, that same kid as in the yellow fin tuna next to you in the second photo above with the bare feet, out of boredom was fishing with a little rod and reel when I shark took the bait and pulled the rod right out of his hand. Dotson may not have been looking or around right then as he might not have let him mess around. I just don't remember who was on that boat. I can't remember whether Chris was with me, but I think not.

John Gidusko recalled that we played a lot of Ping Pong at the O Club,

> Remember the ping-pong games that we did at noon at the O Club? Seems to me you had a wicked slam, if I remember correctly. I do remember Ron Morgan was a whiz at it. He and I really were competition for each other! And in case you do remember him, his email is:
> Ron Morgan golfer@gulftel.com and is living in Foley, Alabama.
> Tom comments" "We did indeed play a lot of ping pong, I think I began my tour on the first day at the station. There was a ping pong contest and I was invited to join. My recollection is that I and someone else our Department Head and his partner. The former prided himself at being good at ping ping and apparently didn't take kindly to being beat by a subordinate. Never mind that we were both the same rank (lieutenant commanders) and that in sports rank meant nothing and was put aside. Probably a tactical error on my part. So be it! Perhaps John remembers that event better than I and can comment on it.

Marines preparing the defenses of Detachment Alpha, Naval Security Group, Naval Communications Station, at Phubai, Republic of the Philippines in 1964. CDR Tom Hahn (Head of the Navy Security Group at the Navy Communications Station and LCDR Ted Tettelbach (Operations Officer of the Navy Security Group at San Miguel) in August 1964 flew to Phubai via Saigon and Pleiku to help establish Detachment Alpha. There was some urgency to our getting to Phubai in a timely fashion because we had certain classified material that was necessary to start operations. We had difficulty in obtaining air transportation. Because of the sensitivity of our mission in Southeast Asia, we were restricted in the type of aircraft that we could use and were not supposed to use helicopters. The plane we took to Pleiku enroute Phubai was a two-engine Beechcraft. Along the way it developed a problem with one engine while we were over hostile territory. It seemed possible that we might not make the runway at Pleiku, so my recollection is that I--generously--took half of the sensitive documents and Ted took the other half and we were prepared to try to eat them when the engine made a miraculous recovery and we made it to the end of the runway. Ted might remember it differently. It seems to me that there was a question of whether we should have taken the aircraft that we did for security reasons. Ted says there was a second aircraft carrying General Westmoreland and that our aircraft carried five. I will ask him to clarify some of this. We spent a minimum amount of time at Pleiku. I don't know whether we went there for some purpose, or whether it was just the nearest airfield to try to reach when we developed the engine trouble. My only material memory was a primitive set of bows and arrows of the native people there, long since given away. The only other time I had some difficulty in-country on non-operational air transportation was when I decided to to take a helicopter out of Phubai because it was the only means of getting out of there at that time. We were on the way to either Hue or Danang, I don't remember which. I was napping and the doors were open, as I recall. I woke up abruptly to the sound of machinegun fire from the ground which we avoided, and again I thanked my Lucky Stars! On another occasion, I was in a helicopter (it was OK to use them in the R. P.)when we got lost in the fog on the way over the mountains on the way to Clark AFB.

Danang was one of the busiest military areas in Southeast Asia in the Vietnam War. Our detachment from San Miguel was housed and flew with the Danang Detachment of Reconnaissance Squadron One out of Japan. The aircraft used at that time was the electronically-configured Constellation (EC-121). This aircraft carried a crew of about 32, as I recall.

As written in an article entitled "A Dangerous Business: US Nava Group Operations," in the Spring 2006 Issue of NCVA Cryptolog, p.12, intelligence recon missions of this nature are not always routine, as is evidenced from a couple of examples;

> ... "a couple of yeas later, [1968], a VQ1 EC-122IM flying from Atsugi to Danang crashed at Danang with a feathered, burned out engine, resulting in numerous killed and injured crewmen. In July of 1966, I was on a VQ Big Look mission at the northern end of our dogleg track in the Tonkin Gulf when two NVNAF MIGs streaked on an intercept course with us. We aborted tye mission immediately diving to sea level. while two of our escorting Navy F4B Phantoms flew to intercept, followed by the other two which had been refueling. The MIGs went home, no easy prey that day. But in April of 1869. a similar VQ1 flight with an NSG detachment aboard was attacked by NKAF MIGs mo miles off the east coast of Korea over the Sea of Japan. The MIGs fired ATOLL heat seeking missiles at the Willy Victor, shooting down the plane with all 31 crewmembers killed. Despite North Korea's obvious hostile posture, having seized the USS PUEBLO (AGER-2) in January of 1968, inexplicably no fighter escort had been provided.

Conditions at Danang were not quite so primitive as they were many other places in Vietnam, but anyplace in a war zone can be dangerous. There was a mortar attack one night. On day I was sitting on a rubber doughnut, a big-bladder-like container for aviation fuel. I heard a plop and saw noticed a spurt of fluid (gas) three-or four inches high coming out of the doughnut near me. Apparently an errant rifle shot from somewhere off the base had hit it. The planes carrying Agent Orange--not the ones we flew in--were nasty things to be around. All At the time we tended to take things like that rather casually and probably didn't know the long-lasting effect that they would have later. I filed a report or form with the Veterans Administration a few years ago reporting the exposure to Agent Orange just for the record. Over four years ago I was diagnosed with idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis. Agent Orange is a possible contributor. Another factor was histoplasmosis from swimming in the streams of Kansas in the 1930s as discovered by a navy doctor during a physical many years ago. A third possible factor was being dumped on by a C-47 mosquito control plane a week or so after 9-11 in Fort Myers.

Subj: Eligibility to wear the Navy Unit Commendation Ribbon

1. Your name is included in the list of personnel prepared by this command eligible to wear the ribbon for the Navy Unit Commendation awarded to Detachment Alfa, U.S. Naval Communication Station Philippines at Phubai, South Vietnam, for the period 17 August 1964 to 1 August 1965 based on the following periods of Temporary Additional Duty to Detachment Alfa:

a. August 1964 — During which period you established the Detachment from your Department and other units and made the necessary operational, technical and administrative arrangements in South Vietnam. (During this period there were no personnel permanently assigned to Detachment Alfa)

b. December 1964 — During which period you arranged for the transfer of certain operational and technical aspects to be transferred from your Department to Detachment Alfa

c. June 1965 — During which period you rendered technical and operational assistance to Detachment Alfa.

2. You were ordered to Detachment Alfa on all three occasions with CINCPAC authority to render technical and operational assistance based on an outstanding need of skills which you possessed which were not adequately available with Detachment Alfa.

3. During the period of the Commendation for Detachment Alfa you were awarded the Legion of Merit, part of the justification of which was based on your part in the establishment and the subsequent outstanding successes achieved by Detachment Alfa.

Although we were in the middle of the Vietnam War, there was still time for relaxation on the "O" Club. Need some help in identifying our Filipino friends. Tom Hahn on left. Captain D. B. Gaw, Commanding Officer, third from right, and to his right, Commander Miller ?, Executive Officer. (US Navy Photo)

Manuel D, E. "Manoling" Barretto, Governor, Zambales Province, Republic of the Philippines. One of my duties was being the Liaison Officer with the Governor of our Province. We became very good friends and often went hunting in the mountains to "Shangri-La," to other islands, to Manila, and to many official and social occasions. His friendship and the many Filipino friends that I had made a difficult tour in t5he middle of the Vietnam War more pleasant.

When we first arrived at San Miguel the Commanding Officer of The Naval Communications Station, Republic of the Philippines was Captain D. B. Gaw. I believe his Executive Officer was Commander Miller, succeeded later by Commander Chartier. I was the Head of the Naval Security Group (NSG). Many NSG units were a Department in a Naval Communications Station as a security cover and because in general we were specialists (Special Duty Only Cryptology) and not line officers for command of stations and navy vessels. That sometimes made it difficult, as I had units all over Southeast Asia that weren't directly under the CO of the communication station, so it made for some juggling at times. I often went to Vietnam, established a station at Phubai (Detachment Alpha) and flew a number of missions with our outfit out of Danang. All that was on on the Naval Security Group side. I don't remember doing much with the local population in Captain Gaw's tenure, but it was probabkly that operations in Southeast Asia were very hectic and not as much emphasis was placed with the local people as later. I could be wrong there and realize that I really didn't know Captain Gaw very well. But right from the beginning I did people-to-people programs and got engaged in local and area Filipino activities with his successor, Captain Frank. M. Romanick, a great people in People-to-People Programs and showing the American flag at its best. Many of them were really a bit boring after a while, such as the local "festivals" which were centered around the crowning of the local royalty of young people. We sat through all of these in sometimes hot weather. At some early point we arranged that someone would keep us supplied with a cold San Miguel beer under our seats to make it more tolerable. We just relaxed and took oft as part of our duty. I don' know that I will be able to recall all the things that we did, but I will mention them as I think of them. All these events also took us to weddings and all sorts of ceremonies and activities. Many of them brought us wonderful acquaintances and friends as well. I have always enjoyed fitting in wherever we lived and enjoyed the local people, so I did some of that on my own. Note: Captain Romanick died about 2004. I am attempting to establish contact with his daughter, Susanne. Editor

NEGRITOS 1. On my first trip up in Negrito country with Governor Barretto in the mountains I wasn't sure what to take or what to expect. Although before going on a hunting trip to Shangri-La up in the mountains, I went on a hunting expedition with the governor's family and friends. They took along a live goat. I wondered what that was for for and later found out when they hung the goat in a tree and strangled it with a bottle of beer. That was supper! I managed to go along with it, but that part was distasteful to me. There was just a different attitude toward wild things than I had. For example, it wasn't unusual at the Governor's house at (_____ to see exotic birds strung up in a tree or bush just because someone wanted to rather see them rather than to enjoy them in the wild on their own. I don't remember taking anything to Shangri La other than my clothes and a rifle. There were several vehicles in our little convoy, one with sort of bodyguards as I think there were still a few bandits around. One of the vehicles broke down on the first trip, so we were delayed while a major problem was ingeniously repaired with wire and bits of metal. The ride was exciting, of course, as new territory always is, and we gradually climbed up into a mountainous area. Either while we were there or already built for our arrival was a large covered bamboo structure, partially walled, and I think we used cots of iron beds, I am not sure I may have taken a sleeping bag as well. On this first trip was there a Navy captain from Subic, but he and I were the only Americans. There a doctor, and various of the governor's people with rice and other supplies and sources of help for the Negritos. It soon became apparent that part of the purpose of the trip was a political one to hold the support of the Negrito people. The Filipinos in our group spoke English, and the educated ones like the governor also spoke Tagalog and a few knew Spanish. They also knew the local Zambales dialect. I took Tagalog lessons on the base and attempted to learn Ilocano at the same time. One in the mountains, I began learning Sambal or Tina Sambal as well and tried to learn all three in tandem.

I had never been exposed to Negrito people, but being partially an aboriginal person myself (Native American) I was very interested in the original people of the Philippines. They were very short, wiry people and scantily clad. Many of them had respiratory problems. It got quite cool up there in the mountains, but I am not sure whether or not that was part of the reason. They were very curious about us and friendly though a bit shy. Some more than others. There were also several to many of them standing or sitting just outside of shelter house.

As I recall, on the first night of our visit we were sitting around visiting and then the governor and the captain from Subic and a couple of the governor's group decided to play poker. The Negritos were very interested in this and became quite animated when the bets went over ten pesos. At some point, Manoling (Governor Barretto) and I got the idea to put on a little show for them, so with the cooperation of the others we elevated the states to higher and higher levels, never intending to pay off the large amounts of money that were being exchanged. The climax was that the governor owed me a million pesos and couldn't pay up, so couldn't pay up, so he put up the Province of Zambales to cover his bet. By this time the spectators were jumping up and down and the climax of the evening when I won the province from as his debt. Of course I never collected. However, I was interested in buying some land in the province, but the laws were pretty prohibitive. At one point I was attempting to buy one of the Capone Islands. I can't remember which one, so I will have to try to find them on a map to see if I can recall it.

NEGRITOS 2. On the first trip, I believe that the Governor brought along a group they called "doggers" along with their dogs. I don't remember them as being Negrito, but I could be mistaken. My impression in that they were from the lowlands of the Zambales, perhaps near where the Governor lived. They were used to flush out game. None of these involved were adverse to burning down the vegetation to do the same. It seems to me that the Negritos concentrated on small game and birds and. Most of their bows and arrows were constructed to take care of that kind of thing. Most of the arrows were made of old metal files, but for the life of me, I cannot remember where there found them\ to work with. The bows were of wood, of course, and rather small. Them bow strings were mostly of twisted vines as I recall. They were very excited about the hunts, as was I at the time. We mad quite a party with the gun hunters, the diggers, and the bow-and-arrow Negritos. We were hunting for pigs and my mind was all set for that, so on the first hunt I was separated by by someone else by a small gully and I heard a loud, rustling noise and an animal burst out across the ravine. I was all geared up for a pig when to my surprise it was a deer. I believe I have a photo of that deer and will insert it here if I can find it. The deer of Southeast Asia are different from the white-tailed deer that is the most common in the United States. I believe that my daughter Betsy has those antlers in their barn at Amherst, New Hampshire. My little collection of bows and arrows still reside, I believe, in the office of my mentor Dr. Douglas Smith at Shepherdstown, West Virginia, along with my bow and arrow from Pleiku, South Vietnam. reside. Doug is an archer and fully appreciates the origin of the weapons. After I shot it, the Negritos began to gather and to cut off small pieces of the organs of the deer--the lungs, heart, liver, etc. and cast them in different directions as was their practice in their type of worship which was a form of animism. They then made a sort soup of the digestive organs AND THEIR CONTENT from gullet to anus. Of course, that was very appealing to anyone who wasn't brought up in their ways, but I managed to partake of whatever they did in the spirit of being a part of them. I believe that the rest of the deer was consumed rather quickly as they needed the protein. There was no refrigeration and I don't recall that they had any way to preserve meat, except for salting--I think--or drying. I believe it was also in their area that there were colonies of fruit bats hanging from the trees and that we also ate them. But, again, this may have been another part of Zambales where we did this.

At one point in the first trip while we were in the shelter, an old, wizened, leathery, white-haired man showed up and caused quite a commotion. I asked the Governor who this was and it was the King of the Negritos of all the Philippines. During the Second World War, he was in charge of resistance against the Japanese invaders in the mountains and so he was also a United States Brigadier General according to the Governor. The Governor had a large wooden chest, like a sea chest, that he kept his clothes and other things in. He gave a nice khaki shirt to the King and the onlookers really thought that was neat. As I was watching this I wished that I had something nice to give hi, but practically had nothing but the clothes off my back. I also thought that I should "show the American flag" somehow and not let take the spotlight of the proceedings. I wore a khaki shirt and khaki pants, so on impulse, I took off my pants in front of everyone and gave them to the King. Typically, the King wore only a loin cloth. The Governor thought that was very enterprising. He was really a great friend. I forgot about the incident, but the next time I went up when we arrived at the villager, people shouted something as we went by. There was a Catholic priest with us this time and he knew some of the local dialect and so I asked him what they said, and he replied, "Here comes the man who not only would give the shirt off his back to the King but also gave him his trousers." As we drove along a little boy came up to me and felt the hair on my arm, and something something that translated into, "Feels like monkey!" Evolution at work, I guess. What wonderful times those were and how fortunate I was to share a part of their life.

Guns were a part of the Philippines as were machetes for protection. I have seen some pretty mean machetes and the damage that they could do. While in Viet I always carried a Colt Cobra .38 caliber, 4" barrel revolver, and sometimes in the Philippines, but seldom on base. Because the governor and I went hunting together, I either sold or gave him that revolver and a Remington 12 gauge shotgun when I left for Maine. The 1918 Winchester?/Remington rifle that had been captured by the Finns in about 1938 from the Russians that I used for deer and pigs in both Hawaii and the Philippines I took with me to Maine and used it for deer hunting there. It was pretty primitive, but I got a kick out of sing it. Sometimes the Governor would come by the house and say, Let's go hunt the four-legged deer in Manila, Tom." Although I did go to Manila with him, there was nothing of that nature that took place." He just liked to kid around.

NEGRITOS #3. I don't remember what their village/area was called. Governor Barretto called it "Shangri-L," so that is what I called it. It was a beautiful place to go. After visiting there ,I began to wonder what there was that we could do to help them. I would have done much more, but we were actively engaged in the Vietnam War and that took most of our time and energy and resources. Anything to do with the Negritos, and like activities, had to be done on what little spare time we had. Fortunately, I always had the encouragement of Captain Romanick as his goal was do to "everything"; and, he pretty well succeeded at it, though not always to everyone's satisfaction. But, he was my CO and I wholeheartedly went along with him. But, he was my administrative boss or "host" and I had to answer DIRNAVSECGRUPAC (Director Naval Security Group Pacific) for operational matters, making sure that everything was covered there at San Miguel and our units at Phubai, Danang, and Hue in Vietnam and in units at sea in various detachments.

The Negritos, probably with the encouragement of the Catholic priest and maybe the Governor, wanted to build a permanent school house. Even though they they were primitive people and lived in primitive condition with minimal exposure to the modern world, they were aware of the fact that by education their children and future generations would improve their way of living. One thing that they needed for the school house was a roof, that is, the metal and the nails to hold it in place. They had no money as they lived off the land, so I had them give me what weapons they could spare and I sold them to American servicemen, probably mostly at Sam Miguel, but perhaps other places as well. Another thing they desperately needed was warm clothing. They mostly wore loin cloths and maybe a skimpy shirt of some kind, so I got the idea of collecting clothing for them. From some place we scrounged clean 55-gallon steel drums and placed them at San Miguel and Subic and maybe Clark, and Cubi Point, but I am not sure about the latter two places. The barrels were painted and stenciled "OPERATION NEGRITO." Al Eaton and John Glasgow may have got roped into some of this, I am not sure, and probably Public Works placed and gathered up the barrels. I just don't remember the details.

When we had sufficient amount of "clothes" collected, we took them with and under the Governor's auspices, up to the Negritos. I am quite sure the Governor was there and probably organized the trip. Also, I think that the Catholic priest from San Narcisso went along. Bar in mind that the service people who contributed the clothing had been in all parts of the world, so there were odd things inappropriate for the Negritos such as felt boots from Alaska, women's purses, nylon hose, etc, and all sorts of stuff like like. We took it all, including women's all kinds of women's lingerie. Distributing the clothing was a lot of fun for both the donors and the recipients. Although they were a bit shy at first, the Negritos got into the spirit of the thing and there was lots of excitement in trying on all this newly-acquired clothing. Among the women's things were purses and hats which were a great novelty. I think the items of greatest interest and fun were the brassieres. The women had never seen them and were bare breasted. I had a great time "volunteering" to show them how to put them on and somewhere have a couple of 35-mm slides of this. One photo I had was great as it was the surprised look on a baby's face to discover that something had come between him and his mother's breasts! I will try to locate these slides try to get them in a message later.

Toward the last of my tour someone--maybe Al Eaton arranged to bring a few of the Negritos to the station where they put on some of the native dances. They were a great hit and a novelty, of course, but I had some reservation--perhaps as a Native American--at putting people on display. I still have that reluctance on reservations and elsewhere and it makes me uncomfortable when that is done. I am not saying that it is wrong, just that it is not comfortable for me--and perhaps no for them, for, after all, they are in most in many instances trying to make some money for their survival. I may think of more memories of the Negritos, but at the moment that is all I have to offer.

Betsy Hahn bhahn@earethlink.net adds:

> I remember sorting though clothes for the trip to the mountains. Mom and approximately four other ladies were there going through the stuff and laughing uproariously. It was all stored in a screened in area under the house. I found a cowboy outfit that I wanted in the worse way. Buckskin type thing unbecoming a young lady or something of the sort as mom put it. I even hid the outfit but she found it as she knew me too well. That was an interesting trip up to their land. I think that they were equally as fascinated with me being a tow head as I was with them being so dark and wrinkly. I went swimming with their kids. Seemed so freaking hot up there even as a kid.

People-to-People Program: Besides working with the Negritos, I did what I could with and for the local communities. Somehow the station received a large amount of reflective tape. I don't think we asked for it. Perhaps it had been meant for bicycles, so Captain Romanick, as I recall, asked for idea on how it could be used. We had had accidents with Americans running into caribou carts and other vehicles at night, so I got an idea that I called "Operation Stop Light" and put a piece of large reflective tape on every type of Pilipino vehicle that we could find. Some of the farmers seem a bit surprised, some amused, and some a bit apprehensive when I tried to tell them what I was up to. In any event, it took me out into the countryside to meet all kinds of interesting people.

"That is a shot of the various levels of Red Cross Swimming Program. The great looking dude (adult) swam in the Pan Am Games and was the swimming coach." Betsy Hahn. Chris Hahn is next to the instructor. He says, "Also Boy Scouts had awards/ badges for various swimming accomplishments, like swimming and lifesaving. I seem to remember a 50-mile swim patch you could get over a period of time; I hope I'm not confusing it with something else though. There was also a mile swim patch, you were not allowed to rest for that one. I was on the swim team and it all involved a lot of laps every day. Anyone recognize anyone else in the photos? (Photo sent by Chris Hahn) oy Scouts of America at San Miguel:

My son, Chris Hahn, was a Cub Scout and then a Boy Scout for a few years. While I was assigned to the National Security Agency at Fort Meade, Maryland 1959-1962 Chris was a Cub Scout and I was the Assistant Pack Chairman of his Pack in Silver Spring, Maryland, where we lived. When I was assigned to USN-14 at the Naval Communication Station, Wahiawa, Oahu, Hawaii. Chris was a Boy Scout in a Troop at Schofield Barracks, just west of Wahiawa. I was on some committee there, but I can't remember what. When we went to San Miguel, Chris belonged to the Boy Scout Troop there. Perhaps he will share his memories of that some day in this web site. For some reason--and I don't think it had to do with Chris being a scout--I was asked to be the Assistant Commissioner of the Boy Scouts of America in the Philippines. At one time I was on my way to a meeting of officials of the Far East area in Tokyo, Japan. But I never made it? I went to Kadena--I think it was--Okinawa as scheduled where the aircraft made a fueling stop. They announced when the departure time was. I decided to take the base bus around the circuit of the base to kill some time. When I returned to the flight line, the aircraft and my suitcase were making their takeoff at the far end of the field! I didn't know that they had a half-hour time in Okinawa. There I was with only short sleeve khakis and not even a tooth brush. I made the best of it, spent the night, and returned to the Philippines the next day. So, I still don't know what I missed at the big conference, but I guess they didn't miss me. Captain Romanick didn't care and just laughed at my blunder.

A I mentioned earlier, my principal a duty at San Miguel other that running the Naval Security Group was as the liaison to the Governor of Zambales. It may be that duty that led me more deeply into scouting. I remember helping Governor Barretto with the Region 11, Boy Scouts of the Philippines with the Regional Jamboree. I don't remember where it was held or what the camp was named, perhaps Chris Hahn or Bob Lippert can help out there. Like most scouting things I did with the Governor, we made an appearance, walked around and met a few people, then went off to someone's house or someplace else. I quickly learned in the Philippines--and in other countries--showed up, scouting was sort of a political thing and scouts were looked upon as potential party constituents. One scouting activity that I personally sponsored, probably because I was asked to by the Governor, was Sea Scout Ship No. 1 Danacbunga Botolan. My duties seemed primarily to show up on certain occasions and parades. Understand, I enjoyed doing this and met a lot of wonderful people. I have never met any other people in the world that I liked more than the Philippine people.

Perhaps the most memorable scouting experience that I recall was the trip that Governor Barretto and I made to Cebu City, Cebu for the Philippine National Jamboree. A small contingent of scouts from San Miguel went ahead of us. I don't remember how they went or what their experience was. Perhaps I can get my son, Chris, who was there, to give his account of the adventure. I had all the proper scout uniforms with me as befitting an "Assistant Commissioner." The Governor and I first went by Manila. I can't remember whether we were driven or whether a small plane took us. When the Governor went by plane, it landed and took off right on the road leading to the base. The President of the Philippine Airlines)(PAL) was a friend of his, so that may be where he got his air transportation. By the way, my family and I went to an island owned by the President PAL and that was a nice experience. When we arrived at the Manila airport we discovered that something had gone awry with our airline connection to Cebu, so, we tried to find an alternative way to go. At some point we noticed a man write a flight to Cebu on a blackboard outside the little terminal on the wall. The sidewalk was covered by some sort of canopy. A little later the same man set up a card table that said Southern Airline or Southern Air Transport, or something like that. He took our money and said that the plane would leave when there were enough passengers. Finally he folded up the card table and chair and led a few people to a C-47 that was outfitted with picture windows rather than the normal port holes or small windows of the day. The aircraft was fine, but to our surprise the pilot was the same man who had written on the blackboard and who had taken our money. At Cebu we landed on a primitive pasture-like airfield and went to our hotel. Later on, around supper time, we went to the jamboree encampment and met with the American scouts from San Miguel and the Philippine scouts from Zambales Province. I needn't have bothered with any other uniforms, as that is the only time we went there except perhaps to bid they farewell at the end. The rest of the time we spent at parties and casinos and taking in the world championship flyweight-class boxing bout. The Filipino won, but I don't remember his name. It was a big deal in the RP at the time. So, that's all I have to say about that. (Forest Gump)

I don't know whose idea it was to build a Boy Scout Camp at San Miguel, but it was probably a part of the People-to-People Program. It was intended from the beginning to be a joint American-Pilipino venture. Some time at the beginning of the camp I think it was, with the cooperation of Captain Romanick and my wife, I was "captured" as I left the Naval Security Group building and taken to the camp on a vigil. At the time we were in the middle of some operational crisis and the idea didn't appeal to me at all. So, most of the ensuing 24-hour period was spent hewing palm tree logs and such and doing drudgey construction work. I think there were a couple of others involved as well. The culmination was a ceremony where we were inducted as Members of the Order-of-the Arrow. And, I think that was about the end of my involvement in the Boy Scout Movement.

Scouting experience of others:

Bob Lippert, email for the summer of 2006 is rlip37@aol.com and later blippert@halldale.org , son of Chief Bob and Alice Lippert, Says: I look forward to your Boy Scout update. I was a Boy Scout while I was there too. I went on the Bataan Death March too. I think that it was in December of 1964. I remember that there were water trucks from Clark Air Base that traveled with the scouts. I think that it was a three or four day hike. We had a small ceremony in every little town that we went through. I went to a Boy Scout Jamboree on Clark Air Base. That may have been in he summer of 1964. I remember that you could trade anything that said made in USA there. A canteen, pocket knife, utensils. If it said made in USA you could get a lot in trade. If it said BSA made in USA you had a treasure. How times have changed." Perhaps we can get Bob to tell some more his scouting experiences in the Philippines.

This appears to be the Graduating 1965 Class of the Oliver Hazard Perry Elementary School. Captain Frank Romanick on the left; to his right is probably the Principal, Mr. Hardy B. Ross. The man in back on the right end is probably a teacher, Mr. Myron E. Ranny. On the right, front, is Mrs. Janice M. Kendra, their teacher. To her right is Chris Hahn, then Elizabeth Ann Hall, then Faith Lippert is the first girl on the left. Rick Kneal is just behind Chris. Claudette Ann "Cookie" Crozat is to Neal's left. Can anyone identify the others in the photo? (Sent by Chris Hahn "I remember attending 7th grade and 8th grade, there. Interesting, since the classes were so small, both years were spent in the same classroom. We simply traded sides of the room from 7th to 8th grade. Their son, Bob, contributes to this site.], Ronnie Roberts, Robert Alan Simpson

What is the occasion of this photograph? Bob Lippert says, "Could the photo have been taken in front of the base chapel? I don't think it is a field trip." Genie Waterssays that she thinks that it was taken in front of the chapel at a church function. The ages of the subjects vary from a seventh grader in the Oliver Hazard Perry Elementary School to a junior in the George Dewey High School (GDHS). The photo was taken sometime before July 1965. Front row, right-to-left: Chris Hahn (GDHS 1969) (e-mail cfhahn@hotmail.com) left, is holding a program or a brochure of some sort, perhaps a religious tract?; Faith Lippert (GDHS 1969) (e-mail lppfai@aol.com); Marion Cooper (GDHS 1964) (the sister of Carol Cooper GDHS 1966 and Bill Cooper (GDHS 1968); and, unknown girl. Base High School Bus to and from San Miguel to and from Subic Bay where the George Dewey High School was located. (Provided by Chris Hahn)

Ok, above is of from my Freshman year at Dewey High School, getting on the school bus at San Miguel to go to Subic Bay for school. Rick Kneal is wearing the striped shirt, I'm to his right. Pulling himself on the school bus is Gary Hutchcroft. A morning ritual on the bus ride, was for Gary to tease Suzanne (Sam) Romanick about whatever he thought might get a rise from her. Gary and Rick and I were also in a rock band (I have a picture of that band somewhere), along with a guy named Perry, on the drums, who was pretty good. Rick and I played electric guitars, there was someone else who played bass but I don't remember who.

OTHER MEMORIES:

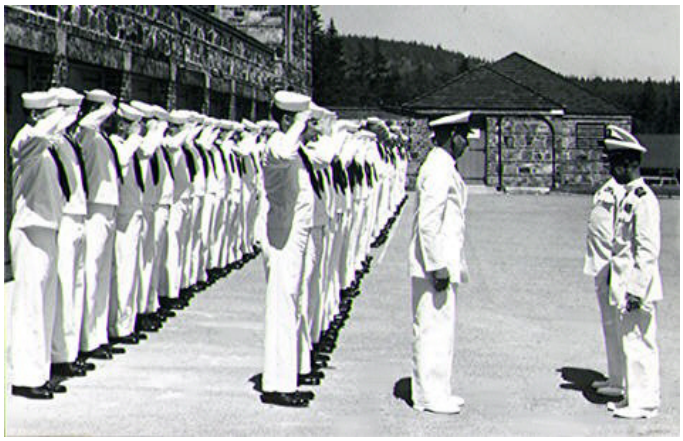
Allan Eaton AEatonii@aol.com amplifies one of the dangers of living in the Philippines.

> My mother told me the story about being in car with the Governor Barretto, coming back to San Miguel from some function. She said there was a gun between the front seats- this made her a bit uneasy- until a shot rang out and flew in the front window, then ricocheted into the back seat and hit my mother in the neck. Luckily it was a glancing blow and she wasn't seriously hurt, but about then she wasn't quite as upset about the machine gun between the seats as she was earlier in the ride.

Life at San Miguel: From Betsy Hahn bhahn@earthlink.net

> One regret about living there is that I did not start a bug collection. I got locked out of the house one morning before dawn and went down to the maid's room to let me in. I was absolutely fascinated by the amount and type of bugs on her screen door at that hour of the morning. I did not wake her but admired the bugs. Guess I hung out in my nipa hut until everyone woke up. I did find that picture and will scan it for a later rendezvous.

A RMC (retired) Nancy Bryim naobryim@hotmail.com summarizes the Philippine experience nicely in a San Miguel Bulletin Board by saying:



> The Filipino people are so kind and generous. They would take us in like family even though they were so poor, and I do know of some nights girlfriends getting me off the streets to their homes before curfew if I was too far from home. The country was so beautiful, the beaches and the forests. And we got to experience things that most ppl will never get to do. Like ride a Victory Liner (bus) or a jeepney [jitney] full of people with chickens or whatever kind of animal ppl could carry with them with the bus going as fast as it can down winding roads scaring you sh*tless. Foods that were so delicious. I am glad that I did learn how to cook lumpia, panict, adobo and pan-de-sal and a few other dishes, my kids love them. I guess I am like the rest of my shipmates, when I want a lift or a grin all I need to do is think back and reminisce to those days long ago.

(John Glasgow) I have the picture from the 4th of July parade, with me and others carrying telephones. NavCommStaPhil was known as "Home of Instant Communications" and I think there was a sign that said that, and one of us was carrying the phone with a sign "Officer's Wives Club" and the other was carrying one that said "CPO Wives Club" - of course they both meant "instant communications etc". Don't think some of the Wives' appreciated it. I also have a picture of Capt Romanick presenting me with what I think was the first place prize from the parade. Also have a Navy Photo of me painting a school in San Antonio for "Operation School House". Anyway, the following is something that happened while I was in charge of the Entertainment Committee for the CPO Club. Now, you must remember that I was 34 when I got to San Miguel. My Wife Mabel and I and another couple went to Olongapo and met with an agent to try and sign some entertainment to come up to the Chief's Club. Mabel was not happy, but the agent took us to 3 or 4 bars where he had entertainment. It was all pretty raunchy. Before we left, we told the agent which group we would like and made arrangements for them to come up the following Saturday to the CPO Club. Well, during the next week, some of us got to thinking and decided that if the word got around that we were having that kind of entertainment, we might get into a little trouble, so decided not to have them. I called and left word for the agent not to come. Well - like most Saturdays, we all went to the Club just to hang out. I had not been there very long when I got a call from the main gate guard, saying I had some visitors. I went up to the gate and there was the agent and about 4 or 5 of him female entertainers. After they had traveled that far, I thought the least we could do is feed them. I took them all to the club, and by the time they got done eating, most of the CPO's had drank just enough that we decided we would let them put on a show in the "stag bar" area - which was not open to the ladies. And we did, and they were good - and Mabel still is mad about that whole thing. But you have to remember we were probably about 10 years younger than you that went to school at San Miguel at the time.

(Allan Eaton April 2006) - I remember the greased pole contest well. Another pole story was Father Pete giving me a quarter to climb a pole in the O Club. This pole climbing evidently was an embarrassment to my mother and every time she turned around there I was on the pole again, another quarter richer. Great memories of the bike parades, colored streamers and playing cards clothes pinned so they would make noise in the spokes. I also remember Halloween and using paper bags to make chaps for my cowboy costume. How about "surfing" on plywood boards during the rainy season in the field ponds. There was also some type of a huge flying bug that I remember tying a string to its legs and "flying" it in circles. Snakes: The adults all told us not to take short cuts through the drainage areas around the housing circles. Did we listen? No. We would all line up, count to three, and make a mad dash for the far side. Doesn't sound like such a brilliant plan in retrospect. I also remember the field hands chasing snakes with machetes while mowing the fields and also seeing the many dead cobras that didn't get out of the mowers way.

WINTER HARBOR MEMORIES

(From Chris Hahn May 2006) You forgot to mention that grocery shopping involved a hundred plus miles trip while we lived there. I remember some long drives to Hays Air Force Base in Bangor (I think that was the name) [Dow Air Force Base] where the commissary was in those days. Now of course the old Base is Bangor International. A lot of things required a lot of traveling in that area, I know that following the coastline was several hundred miles because of the irregularities of the coastline. And hitchhiking. There were a few times I hitched with a friend, or maybe even by myself at least once, to go visit Bar Harbor since I didn't have a driver's license, probably 75 miles or so, another time to Bangor for an afternoon rock concert (Mitch Ryder and the Detroit Wheels), and a few times from Sumner High School in Ellsworth to home not sure how many miles that was. Probably the hardest part of hitching was the road from Winter Harbor to Rt 1, several miles; there were more cars with friendly drivers along there it seemed. Most often though, there was that bicycle ride from Base to Winter Harbor, and then back, to visit my friends at off-base housing. Winter Harbor was where the occasional Saturday night dance was held on Town property [Hamilton Hall], and my high school buddies (and kind parents) would let me stay the night in town there.

What was nice about the [living on the] Point (the Base), for me, was walking across the street to the grassy area to the side of the gatehouse and picking fresh cranberries, not to mention the blackberries and raspberries, in season all along the side of the scenic approach road. And the wildlife, raccoons (in the trash bins at night), deer on the lawn by the flagpole in front of our quarters in that picture, and the more teenage thrills of renting a snowmobile for a dollar or so and riding it at night on the trails, movies, and attempting to find an FM music station on the radio that I liked that was in Boston.

(From Tom Hahn May 2006) You are right about the grocery shopping, although we did some of it at the Cutler Navy Communication Station. It sure was nice for everyone when the commissary opened on the base later. It was hard to get around. I think Bar Harbor was about 45 miles. There were extra trips to go back and forth to Sumner High School as well. I remember Jimmy Cavelle taking you to Sumner a few times to basketball games, perhaps? You did have some good friends in town, but it made it hard for you and Betsy as two of the only three kids living there at that time and no neighbor's kids to do things with. That little patch of cranberries across for the guard shack were bog berries and not too many of men but fun. Also the blueberries, both high bush and low bush. One of the things you did not like doing was taking the trash down to the trash house at the end of the building was because of the raccoons that were kind of spooky at night. Maybe these messages will start a string of the things that we did. We certainly made the most of being a rather remote navy station. I can think of lots of things will will bring them up a couple at a time.

(From Betsy Hahn) I had all of my buddies in that housing area [in Winter Harbor]. The side closest to the homestead (east) there was a sledding hill – when it was iced down it was slick and fast. I creamed myself on someone's clothesline on a saucer. Winging down the hill with two people holding on and turn around for a glorious face plant. Damn that hurt. My best friend in WH was Margaret Faulkingham whose family lived across from K-Park. That's how it sounded phonically back then. Housing details are not important to a second grader. I can't remember what year but it was the best Halloween spooky time ever. I had to cross that property coming from Sergeant St. to get back to K-Park. There were a couple of testy goats that lived there too. I actually crossed the field with my brother Duane [Torrey] and I really think that was the first time I met him. By the way the goats coming across the field in the dark sounded like the demons from HELL.

(From Betsy Hahn) The guards at the gate as I remember always had apples for the deer. The deer were always around that flagpole. Used to wake myself up so I could see them in the moon light. I used to roam that whole property as a kid. Great place to be a kid. It was lonely but I turned the place into a space that was my own. On the south side there was a shack for washed up lobster traps. I liked sitting on the rocks and smell the dried seaweed went back years later to find it but everything was gone. Even then it seemed magical. You know Chris was trying to do that teen age thing as illustrated below but he forgot to tell you that he never forgot his little sister. Chris and I built a raft that we could use when the tide was low to go over to the island. We got caught one time because we were exploring, watching clouds, etc and the tide changed. I will never forget the panic look on Chris's face. Chris never said that we were screwed. We were trapped with the strong tide coming in. Did I mention cold water. Well we talked about it and we determined that going in the water was better than facing the parents if we were not back on time. Damn good thing we were both good swimmers. Thank you the swim team in the Philippines. Did I mention that it was COLD.

(From Tom Hahn) Chris, you are right in a way about the CO Quarters at the base in Winter Harbor, but I guess the CO could have chosen to live wherever he wanted to. Maybe some housing thing that it was set up that way. In general, you just fell into whatever the pattern or custom was/had been. It never occurred to me to wonder whether or not I could have lived in Capehart Housing in town. That large, corner four-bedroom (?) apartment had always been the CO's Quarters and I just took it for granted. The XO was in Capehart, so maybe someone along the line intentionally did it that way. Our quarters were great except for being isolated. We had the whole section of the National Park to ourselves. Each bedroom had a wash basin which was handy. It also made a nice place for entertaining various official visitors to the base. A considerable amount of time was spent doing that, but we enjoyed it.

The base was a great place to try out new ideas. My Security Group boss was in Washington and our nominal administrative boss was ComOne/Commander Naval Base, Boston, so usually I just went ahead and did things and if in doubt sent a UNODIR message or letter, that is Unless otherwise directed I intend to do ____ by ____. I used that often in the fast-war war in Vietnam while in Southeast Asia. Down in the woods on one side I had Public Works improve a trail for an Adirondack Shelter and on another side a place where there could be viewing of the sunset, but I suspect that very few people took advantage of or had in interest in some of the things I did like that. One of the reasons I made friends with the Superintendent and folks at the Acadia National Park Headquarters was to take advantage of the things that they could do for us or that we could do for them in return. The picnic area, for example was done by a Reserve Construction Battalion. The Park Service at Bar Harbor needed a project for the Job Corps, so the Family Campground are seemed fitting for them and we ended up with a nice area that is still there. That also took care of having to cut down some trees that could have been a problem otherwise. Some folks thought that idea foolish and for a while there was a sign up there that named it "SKIPPER'S FOLLY." It was to my knowledge the first Navy Family Campground. The last time I went by there, it was full of people having fun from all over the United States. We needed a pier to use for the 50th Anniversary when my friend and old CO, Captain Romanick brought in the aircraft carrier USS WRIGHT (CC1?) at my request, I got are reserve group of Seabees to build that pier which is still there and still usable to my knowledge. I went around the state visiting groups like that to make friends and because they were all interesting folks. We needed a new Chief's Club, so I went to the Recreation and Welfare Conference (Special Services) Conference with "Suds"

Sunderland at Dallas, Texas. I was the only CO there so I spent considerable time at the bar with the guy in charge in Washington and the result was a new club, which became an all services club later.

(Tom Hahn) Does anyone remember CPO Wayne Smeal? He was a T-brancher at San Miguel then was at Winter Harbor. Wayne was one of a group that I went hunting with. A couple of times I stopped by their house and had a cup of coffee and doughnuts before we set out. Wayne died after they retired there. Maybe someone cam tell me the name of Wayne's wife. I stopped by their later a few times when she was a widow. I think they lived in Steuben.

(John Glasgow) Mike was about 4 years old but he remembers me taking him out to the base and then we walked way down past the ball diamond to cut a Christmas tree and he wandered off while I was cutting the tree. Took an hour or so to find him. Another thing they talk about is the time a friend of mine and I went duck hunting. I had my own gun, but he had to check one out from Special Services. Anyway we launched our boat and pretty soon a couple ducks flew over us. Am not sure which one of us stood up, but anyway, the boat tipped over. I held on to the boat and kept my gun out of the water, but my friend dropped his gun into the water. He looked at me and said - my gun is at the bottom of the lake - and he could not swim - SO, I had dive into the very cold water and get his gun. When I got home, the first thing I did was get the wet clothes off. When my Wife and Son's heard my story, they made me put all the wet clothes on so they could take my picture!!

This is one of the pictures that we had taken. President Bush had just signed my Certificate of Recognition recognizing my service during the Cold War (any service between 2 September 1945 and 26 December 1991). Anyone tho served anytime during that period is eligible to get this certificate. It was already signed by the Secretary of Defense, but I thought it would be nice if I could get President Bush to sign it and he did. That is the President with grey hair standing between the 2 guys near the center. (Provided by John Glasgow)

(Tom Hahn to John Glasgow re above items) The only thing I remember about duck hunting in Maine was what a heck of a job it was to clean the ducks and pick out the bird shot. I can't remember where we went. I did quite a bit of deer hunting and more about that later. I guess a lot of us sneaked a Christmas tree out of the woods even though it was a National Park. The only time I really got mad about anyone doing anything in the park was when a couple of guys I hunted with, maybe [name omitted] and [name omitted]--maybe one of the others--shot a deer with a bow and arrow up at the area where we had the flag. I thought that was tacky and particularly so because we enjoyed the deer so much. As Betsy said in her message she got up to watch the deer in the moonlight. I am trying to think of the names of the other hunters I went with. One was Doug ____ a Chief Petty Officer and Security Group O-brancher, at San Miguel too, I think. Another was Wayne Smeal, also at San Miguel. A Security Group T-brancher. Ring any bells? I didn't hear about my "friends" jacking the deer, but I guess I felt badly that they had taken advantage of our friendship. Luckily at that point I didn't have to do anything about it as a National Park Ranger.

The Superintendent of the Acadia National Park at Bar Harbor, Bob Binnewiess, and I became good friends. Bob became a big gun in the Department of the Interior and at one time was hired by David Rockefeller as the Director of the the Maine Coast Heritage Trust. When I was working for the National Park Service in Washington about 1974 Bob asked me to be assistant at Bar Harbor and then to take over his job as director. We had just bought our house at Shepherdstown, West Virginia, and decided that we didn't want to pull up stakes and move back to Maine. Because they only had a seasonal (summer) park ranger, Bob appointed me as a National Park Ranger and Law Enforcement Officer, so I had to take care of some things beyond what was navy in our part of the Schoodic Annex.

(From Tom Hahn) By the time we got to Winter Harbor after the hectic, enervating tour at San Miguel and Southeast Asia, having lost my father in 1966, trying to help my mother--who had broken a hip in 1965 in the midst of my father's illness with cancer and who was at the Veteran's Hospital at Topeka, Kansas, and trying to take care of some of their affairs in transit to Winter Harbor, getting myself and my family from the Philippines to Maine, and coping with some personal difficulties, I was dead beat by the time that the new tour began in August 1966.

This was the first time that I was a commanding officer. I was looking forward to running the station to try to change some of the things things that had irritated me by various people and by commands all along the way. One of the first things I had to do was to get some much-needed dental work done that had been neglected for a couple of years. Luckily, being a remote command in Downeast Maine, we had a good doctor and dentist and good dental and medical and dental staffs. For major work we went to the hospital at Ellsworth, or to Boston and to Washington for really major or specialized medical stuff. Lt Ron Hatch was our dentist and his dental technician was Hospitalman First Class Piscitelli, I believe. They were in the middle of doing a big filling when a drill broke off in the tooth and they had a heck of a time getting it out. The next time I went, they were a bit apprehensive, so began their when once again. In the middle of the procedure I passed out. I think it was just general fatigue. In any case, when I woke up, Dr. LCDR Hamilton was standing there and I heard Ron ask the doctor, "What do we do if the old man is dead? "(Old Man referring to the co, sort of regardless of age). The third time I went in, everything went well, to everyone's relief, except that when Piscitelli handed me the cone-shape cup of water, he pressed too hard in his relief and the water shot up in my face. That was good for a laugh, later. Piscitelli was a good man with an interest in Downeast Maine. We were both looking for a cabin, and it turned out that we were both trying to acquire the same cabin. I backed out of my offer so as not to create a problem for either one of us. He later went to Vietnam and I see him years later at the base when the Recreation Building was dedicated after I had retired and was living at our camp at Lower Lead Mountain Pond in the summertime.

Tom Hahn Family - Part 3

OCCUPATIONS OTHER THAN MILITARY

1936 - 1944 -- Working at all kinds of jobs where I could find them, not an easy thing to do in the Great Depression. Some of them, according to a work journal I began in 1939, were: Shoveling snow; cutting grass, raking leaves, digging weeds, picking weeds, and other yard maintenance work; washing cars; inside household jobs; collecting and selling milk and pop bottles; collecting and selling old newspapers; selling Liberty magazines; washing windows; picking and selling cherries and plums and pears; picking crops, such as green beans; doing homework for classmates; school delivering hand bills; delivering, newspapers; matching pennies; offering to do anything for pay as the "owner" of "The Wonder Service"; removing wall paper, taking down awnings; putting up storm windows; cutting down trees; catching and selling fish; removing a mouse from a trap; squeezing oranges for a drive-in; digging potatoes; picking beans; casual work at Safeway; drug store clerk; maintenance work at a shoe store; operating machinery making airplane parts.

Prior to 1942 -- Various kid jobs (to be elaborated on)
1942 - 1944 -- Postal Clerk, United States Post Office at Topeka, Kansas, while attending High School during World War II
1946 - 1948 Austin, Texas, while attending the University of Texas: Digging ditches, assembling brochures, proof reader, assistant to an exterminator, janitor, house painter, reader to the blind, yard maintenance.
1954 -- Laborer at a tree nursery in Falls Church, Virginia. Salesman for American-German Chemicals, Incorporated, in preparation for position as Vice President for the Western half of the United States. In training in Washington, District of Columbia as a Pyrometallurgical Engineer for Magnaslag, Incorporated, as a Test supervisor for a project to extract manganese from steel slag. The project ended in failure when the person in charge of operations allowed the furnace at Coxton, Pennsylvania to freeze up.

1954-1956 -- Telecommunication Specialist, Signal Corps Intelligence Agency/G2 (Intelligence) United States Army. Technical Writer. Wrote Telecommunication Studies for the National Intelligence Survey and Signal Technical Intelligence Studies. GS-9 and GS-11. 1972 -- Management Assistant, Assistant for Canals, George Washington Parkway, National Park Service, Washington, District of Columbia, GS-11. Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, Maryland and the Potomac Canal, Great Falls, Virginia.

Description of Position Description as Management Assistant for Canals, George Washington Memorial Parkway:

1. Introduction - This position is located in the office of the Superintendent of the George Washington Memorial Parkway.

2. Duties - Incumbent will provide coordination between George Washington Parkway, National Capital Parks headquarters, and [Denver] Service Center representatives on rehabilitation of historic structures and repairs to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and towpath necessitated by the 1972 flood. Estimates of the flood damage of the canal in the section of the canal under the George Washington Memorial Parkway exceed $5 million and repairs are expected to be continuing for at least one year. He will represent the Superintendent in the extensive contacts with outside organizations and individuals with repairs to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal through meetings, telephone calls, and correspondence. To the extent that the above priorities permit, the incumbent will also develop interpretive materials for signs, publications, and guided walks along the canal from Georgetown to Seneca.

3. Supervision - Incumbent is supervised directly by the Superintendent. He will also be guided by legislation, handbooks, and policies arising from the work of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical Park Commission and the master plan study team.

4. Qualifications - Incumbent should be skilled in public relations and with the techniques of management budgeting. He should also be well versed in the history of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and knowledgeable about the techniques of construction, operation, and maintenance of canals.

1973--Supervisory Ranger, Restored Section, Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, Great Falls, Maryland.

While I was still on active duty in the Navy, I was part of a group called The People's Plan for the Park. The purpose of that organization was to prevent the National Park Service (NPS) from overdeveloping the new Chesapeake & Ohio Canal National Park with paved towpaths, marinas, etc. In the debate at Washington by opponent was Dave Richie the Superintendent of the George Washington Parkway, who resp0ns8ibiity included the C&O Canal and the Potomac Canal. When I retired from the Navy and after the damage to the canal caused by Tropical Storm Agnes, Dave hired me to be his Assistant for Canals. [To be continued.]

Excavation and Restoration of the Tide Lock of the Alexandria Canal at Alexandria, Virginia. Dr. Tom Hahn, Project Archaeologist, Looking West, 1982. (Hahn Collection)

This was the largest contract I undertook in my short career as a canal industrial archaeologist. The first stage in 1982 was an exploratory excavation undertaken for "Historic Alexandria" in an attempt to locate the Tide Lock and Basin. In addition, I had a small contract to write a preliminary "Maritime History of Alexandria, Virginia, and a canal engineering contract to recommend what needed to be done for its rebuilding/preservation. The second stage was in 1985 when we excavated the area and rebuilt the lock and basin. This was a part of the TransPotomac Canal Center Complex. The messy looking plastic was there to keep the wooden canal gates wet so as to help protect them until they could be reburied. I stayed at the Ramada Inn, shown in the background. I worked out of a trailer on the site. At one point, our work office/trailer the trailer was overturned and the contents vandalized, probably by union employees who resented the fact that we were not required to be union members because of our role in historic preservation. My field notes were taken or destroyed in that act of vandalism. The Potomac River at the beginning of the project was 180 feet to the east. At completion, the Tide Lock was at the river itself. The Institute for the History of Technology & Industrial Archaeology at West Virginia published the basic results of the project in the first of its Monograph Series: THE ALEXANDRIA CANAL: Its History & Preservation by Thomas Swiftwater Hahn & Emory L. Kemp, 1992. Dr. Kemp was my boss and the Director of the Institute. In addition to being an industrial archaeologist, Dr. Kemp had skills as a civil engineer that I lacked.

This is the Artist's Conception of the Completion of the Alexandra Canal, Tide Lock and Basin at the TransPotomac Canal Center. The Alexandria Maritime Museum (now defunct) was located on the ground floor of the building to the right of the lock. The white building to the left background is the Ramada Hotel where Emory Kemp and I stayed while working on the project.

Archaeology, West Virginia University.
1994-2004--Adjunct Professor, Institute for the History of Technology and Industrial Archaeology, West Virginia University.

WRITER, EDITOR, PUBLISHER

I was never a very skilled writer in school nor a particularly good writer of letters. Writing for a living came sort of accidentally with a job I took in 1954. When I resigned from the Navy in the Spring of that year, my intent was to get into the field of intelligence. To my surprise I landed a job as a writer with the Signal Corps Intelligence Agency (SCIA), a part of G-3, Army without any previous training or experience in writing. In the first place, the Department of Labor Office seemed an odd place to find a job in intelligence, but is had seemed an equally strange pace to find the job I had had previously as a pyro-metallurgist with Magnaslag, Incorporated. I was literally trained on the job by experts in both fields. At least I had some of the technical knowledge need for the latter job with SCIA. The job with this agency was in the Writing Branch as a technical writer turned out not to be a life-long career, but only for the years 1954-1956. The job consisted mainly of writing telecommunication studies for the National Intelligence Survey (Section 38 - Telecommunications) and for the Signal Technical Intelligence Studies for the Army, with an occasional brief to the Central Intelligence Agency or other branches of intelligence. I started as a GS-9 and was promoted in a year or so to a GS-11. I learned the physical and geographic details of several countries in this job. As I recall, we only had translators for French, German, and Spanish, so we were on own own to work with the documents that we were provided to us by the Collection Branch that weren't in English. That was a challenge that I enjoyed. I knew some languages and quickly picked up the basics others. I particularly working on two books, one a Russian to English Technical Dictionary and the other a book entitled "The Cables of the World." Another man, a naturalized Dutchman by the name of Jap Baay and I worked on the latter work as the branches' "wire men." In that capacity we also were involved with telephone and telegraph communications. Jap was a particularly nice man to work wit. I also became friends with a former Navy Officer [Gil _____], and Afro-American man, _____ [the names will come to me] and an Afro-American woman, Dolores Honey. They were my "buddies" there. When I was promoted to a GS-11. Dolores treated me and my wife and Chris who was about four years old to all all black bar and grill. Blonde-headed Chris was the centerpiece of the restaurant that evening and he loved it. Someplace along the line I began to get itchy feet. This was a small agency and chances of promotion were relatively limited. The average age was about 48 and her I was in my late 20s. Probably I still had a yearning for the Navy left there too. In any event, I began to quietly took around for other opportunities. One place was the National Chamber of Commerce in its Nuclear Energy Division. This was a difficult time to find employment and intelligence jobs were hard to come by. [To be continued.]

INTERESTS AND HOBBIES

ACTING

My experience with acting is very limited, although I although thought that I would be interesting to give it a try. My first attempt was in Topeka, Kansas at Radio Station WIBW during Library Week in about 1934 when I played the part of Pinocchio in the radio version of "Pinocchio. While attending Randolph Elementary School in Topeka, I was in a play called, _____, but I remember little about it. And, when in Boswell Junior High I was in a play called _____. I will have to check on the name.

NATIONAL BOOK WEEK NEXT

"New Books, New Worlds" is Theme for Period, November 13 to 19.

Observance of National Book week, November 13 to 19, begins in Topeka Saturday with a play, "Pinocchi On the Air," that afternon. Displays have been arranged in the public library and six branch school libraries for next week.

The play will be broadcast at 4:15 p. m. Saturday over WIBW and the children's room at the main library will accommodate an audience of about fifty children. The play cast includes Margaret Tillotson as Heidi, Tommy Hahn as Pinocchio, Jimmie Pearson as Otto, and Jimmy Sloan as Dr. Dolittle.

My next experience was sort of an odd one. When working, about 1955, for Army Intelligence G-3/Signal Corps Intelligence Agency in one of the old buildings -- the former Army Department building --near 17th and Constitution Avenue Northwest, I often walked around in back to the Washington Monument Mall during my lunch hour. One particular day I walked up to the Lincoln Memorial, when they were filming "The Solid God Cadillac." Not having had lunch and being a lunch break for the cast, some one invited to share the spread of food they had there. When the call came, "Back to the set," I was swept along with the others as I didn't want to admit that I was having a free lunch. As I recall, as was a bit late getting back to work. To my disappointment, when I saw the movie I saw that they had either removed the entire sequence or the episode in which I played a part the the crowd. I like to think that someone recognized me and realized they would have to give me a lot of money for the wonderful acting that I did if they left me in!

Tom Hahn, Member of the Cast of the Public Broadcasting Movie, "Puddin' Head Wilson, by Mark Twain, Starring Ken Howard. Filmed partially, as here, at the Court House at Charles Town. West Virginia. Though this was a bit part, it was enjoyable to watch the production as it unfolded and to have a better appreciation for the patience it took on the part of the actors to do the same scene over and over. CHAMBERS OF JUSTICE WILLIAM O. DOUGLAS

May 22, 1972

Dear Tom:

I have your letter of May 19. I told Cathy, who is with the River and Canal Rights Association, that it would do well to hire you to run it.

It's being financed by a Foundation and should have a good operating budget.

Yours faithfully,

W. O. Douglas

FISHING

Tom and Walt Hahn at Possum Kingdom Lake. We had gone therefor the bass and crappie fishing. As that didn't turn out to well, Tom discovered that he could lower a cake of cotton meal off the dock and attract the carp, some of which are shown here. Although the family was disdainful of eating carp Tom fixed them in a special way and served them as carp. The family thought that they were delicious. He placed the excess carp in a horse watering trough and traded them off for beer. (Hahn Collection)

GARDENING

At one time when I was a boy in Topeka, my dad had a vegetable garden, but it was before I was old enough to do any of the panting or any of the work involved. For digging holes and caves I do know that the ground was very hard and compact and difficult to work. It was not until I had the first house in Falls Church Virginia on Gallows Road and some room that I was able to have a real vegetable garden and to enjoy planting trees. Being in the Navy, I always had he situation of when planting trees of never seeing them to maturity. But the first vegetable garden was a joy. There was a horse stable just down the road, so I had all the free manure that I could use and some beautiful vegetables as a result.

Where we live in Fort Myers we have very little in which to plant anything, so I resort mostly to pots for flowers and have only a few citrus and mango trees. One bulb that we enjoy annually are the amaryllis given to us by Etts Snyder, a friend in Shepherdstown, West Virginia. Here they after having bloomed for several years in April of this year, 2005.

HUNTING

Tom Hahn with guide, Hasegawa, hunting sheep on Mount Mauna Kea, Hawaii in 1963. Hunting on Mauna Kea could be done only with a licensed guide. The terrain was rocky, like a moonscape, and it was there that NASA trained astronauts for moon landings. The weather would be surprisingly cold for Hawaii. On my first trip there at 10,000 feet it was snowing! That in spite of sunny Hilo below in the distance with the temperature in the 80s. (Hahn Collection)

INTERESTING PERSONALITIES

William O. Douglas

Cathy Douglas, Wife of Associate Justice William O. Douglas, May 1977, at the Dedication of his Bust at Lock 3 of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal at Georgetown, Washington, District of Columbia. Cathy was a wonderful woman. I enjoyed hiking wit her several times on the C & O Canal. (Tom Hahn Photo)
The inscription reads: "In recognition of Justice William O. Douglas for his contributions toward the establishment if the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal National Historical park.

The Mongolian Connection

In the 1950s, as I recall, a National Geographic writer, Jay Johnston wrote an article about the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal for the National Geographic Magazine. In it he wrote of Justice Douglas's relationship with the canal. At the time, I think I was in the Navy in the Republic of China with the Taiwan Defense Command, but I had talked with Jay on several occasions.

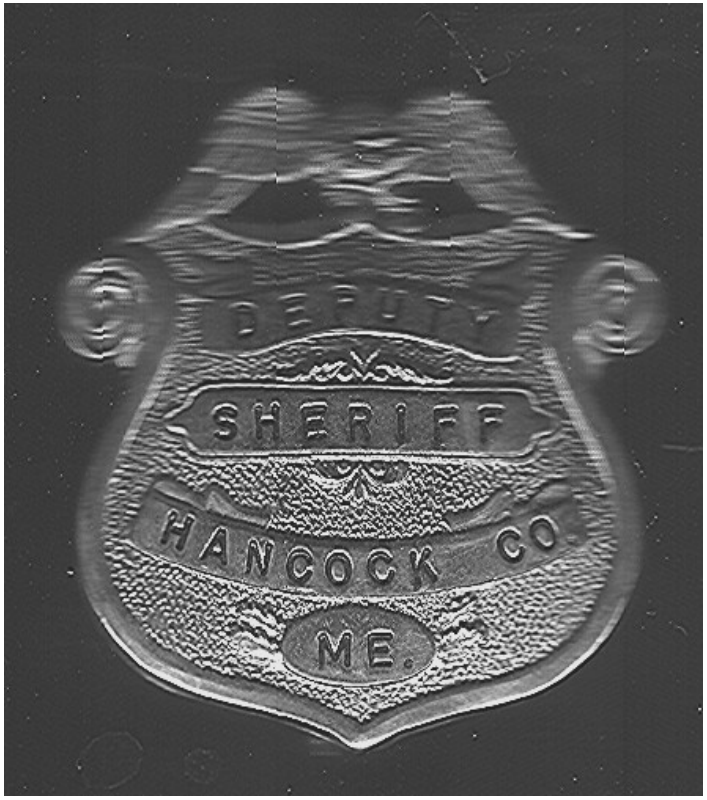
On my return to Washington in 1960, I was on the staff of the National Security Agency at Ft. George G. Meade, Maryland. One day, while waiting for a streetcar in front of the Mayflower Hotel, I think it was, Jay Johnson hailed me and sought my assistance. He said that Justice Douglas had written an article about Mongolia for the National Geographic, and that Owen Lattimore, an authority on China and Mongolia, was assisting him on the article. Jay said that he, as the staff editor assigned to the project, and the National Geographic had questions about Mongolia left unanswered by the Douglas-Lattimore team. Jay mentioned that I seemed to have a lot of contacts, and did I happen to know anyone who knew anything about Mongolia, so that they could make necessary changes and get on with the project?

It so happened, that I was at the time, as a sideline to my normal job, I was taking lessons in the Mongolian language from Prince Urgunge" Peter" Onon, who was also with the Agency. So, I told Jay that I could probably assist him. Prince Onon was an interesting man. To my knowledge, another person and I were the only Americans then studying Mongolian in the United States. There was a Mongolian linguist and authority at another agency named Stu Buck.. Studying on a one-to-one basis with "Peter" Onon, as I called him, was a very interesting experience. I learned much of his life and that of the Mongolian people, then under Communist Rule. It from Peter that I began my interest in shamanism in Mongolia, a subject about which he wrote later. Mongolian, an Urgo-Altaic language, is very difficult. The script is difficult, to learn, so we skipped that to concentrate on the spoken language. We used Russian-language based books and we used Mandarin Chinese as our teaching-learning language. Later on, I helped Prince Onon with his book, Smoke from the Yurt. When I left him, he gave me a nice tribute --I think--in Mongolian script. Someday I will have someone translate it into English to learn the truth.

Prince Onon (born 1919), Dilowa Hutukhtu--the Living Buddha of Mongolia, and Prince Gombojah "John" Hangin, under the auspices of Owen Lattimore, had in the period 1948-1950 been taken from Outer Mongolia, then under the control of the Communists, and brought to Baltimore. The Dilowa was in Baltimore at the time I knew Prince Onon, and when Hangin was at the London School of Economics, as I recall. Lattimore was involved in one of the "espionage scandals" instigated largely by Senator Joe McCarty -- assisted by Richard Nixon -- in his "investigations." In 1950, I believe, McCarty called Lattimore "the top Soviet espionage agent in The United States." Lattimore denied the charge and tried to show that he was framed in his book, Ordeal by Slander. I believe he was later cleared of the charge, but the controversy regarding Lattimore remains.

The ironic thing about the situation was that, as a Naval Officer on the staff of the National Security Agency, it would have been inappropriate for me to have any association with Owen Lattimore. A meeting with him would have taken care of much of the problem, of course, but that was out of the question. Therefore, here we were the Douglas-Lattimore team against the Douglas-Hahn team, without the former team's knowledge. Because of Justice Douglas's concern with Mongolia and the Mongolian people, I took Prince Onon to visit Justice Douglas in his chambers where we had a very cordial conversation. Douglas was unaware to the end of Onon's (and my) involvement with the article. In appreciation for Prince Onon's work, the Geographic presented him with an honorarium. In celebration thereof, Peter Onon took me to a very nice Chinese restaurant to celebrate our "victory." I have not seen him to this day, some forty-five years later; I have not been in contact with him. After that tour at NSA, I went to Hawaii, then to The Republic of the Philippines and to the Vietnam War, to our station in Maine, to our headquarter in Washington, and then, as a member of the NSA staff as a navy captain. I did not check on Onon's whereabouts at the time, as I did not seem to have a particular interest in doing so. I discovered later that he and Hangin were involved with Lattimore at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, and that both became prominent writers. Prince Onon was a true a prince," and I have fund memories of our two-year association. I wonder if he overcame his "guilt" of wasting precious water while taking a shower?

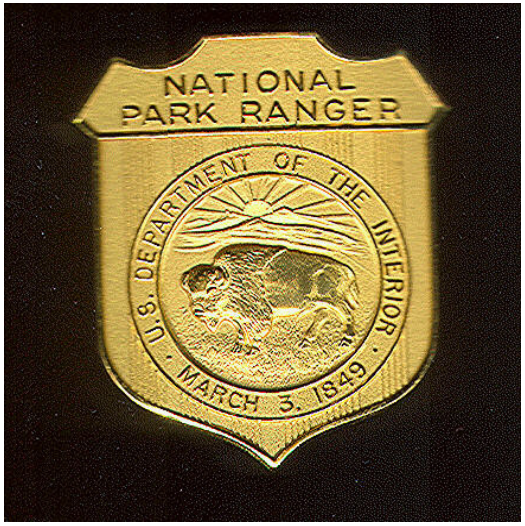
I had occasion to meet Owen Lattimore a bit later. One day I read an article on Lattimore in the Washington Post in which it said that Lattimore was to speak on China at an African-American Church in Northeast Washington. I decided to go. After the lecture, there was a tea and a reception for Lattimore. It was still inappropriate that I have contact tact with him. So, as I went through the reception line in leaving, I told him, in Mongolian, that I had come all the way from Ulan Bator, [the capital of Outer Mongolia] to hear him speak. I glanced back, briefly, as I departed through the door, to note the look of surprise on his face! It was the only use to which I had put my study of the Mongolian language. However, it was worth it!



LAW ENFORCEMENT

Some place early in my naval career, as an officer, I applied for Navy Post Graduate Training in Law School and subsequent assignment to the Judge Advocate General. I was not selected. As an aside, I applied for many things along the way; often I was not selected, but sometimes I was. A change of that kind for any one of those field, would have taken me in an entirely different direction and probably changed the course of my life, as well. For example, it was probably just as well that I was not selected for one, in particular. Being trained as in Naval Intelligence and having graduated from the Naval Intelligence School as a Russian Linguist and Translator, and having served in the capacity of an intelligence analyst in Soviet Affairs, I applied for a job as being placed inside the Soviet Union as an agent. A highly impracticable thing for a family man to do. I never had a response to that request and I am not sure that it is in my official record. I will check. Unbelievably, this "job" was announced in the Navy's Newspaper, Navy Times !!

As did many naval officers, I served on Courts Martial for the Defense and Prosecution. As a commanding officer, I held my own Commanding Officer's Non-Judicial Punishment (Captain's Mast) and was Convening Authority for of Special Courts Martial.



Deputy Sheriff, Hancock County, Maine

When I was the Commanding Officer at the Naval Security Group Activity, Winter Harbor, Maine, we had activities at the Administrative Site at Schoodic Point, Schoodic Point, our housing in the Town of Winter Harbor, and at our Operations Site at Corea. There was no immediate law enforcement officer available, especially when it involved naval personnel. According, the Sheriff of Hancock County appointed me as one of his deputies to hand law enforcement activities in the county. I remained a Deputy Sheriff for a few years after as spent the summers in Hancock County. This was an unpaid position except for reimbursement of expenses.

Deputy Park Ranger, Schoodic Annex of the Arcadia National Park

The Schoodic Annex of the Arcadia National Park had a Seasonal Ranger (summer), there was no law enforcement officer to handle accidents. hunting violations, etc. in the Annex. The Superintendent of the Arcadia National Park, at Bar Harbor, Maine, appointed me a Deputy National Park Ranger in the Schoodic Annex of the Ranger. This was an unpaid position.

In one of my jobs with the National Park Service, I was the Supervisory Ranger of the Restored Section of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal National Historical Park at Great Falls, Maryland. A part of that job included the responsibility of being a National Park Ranger.

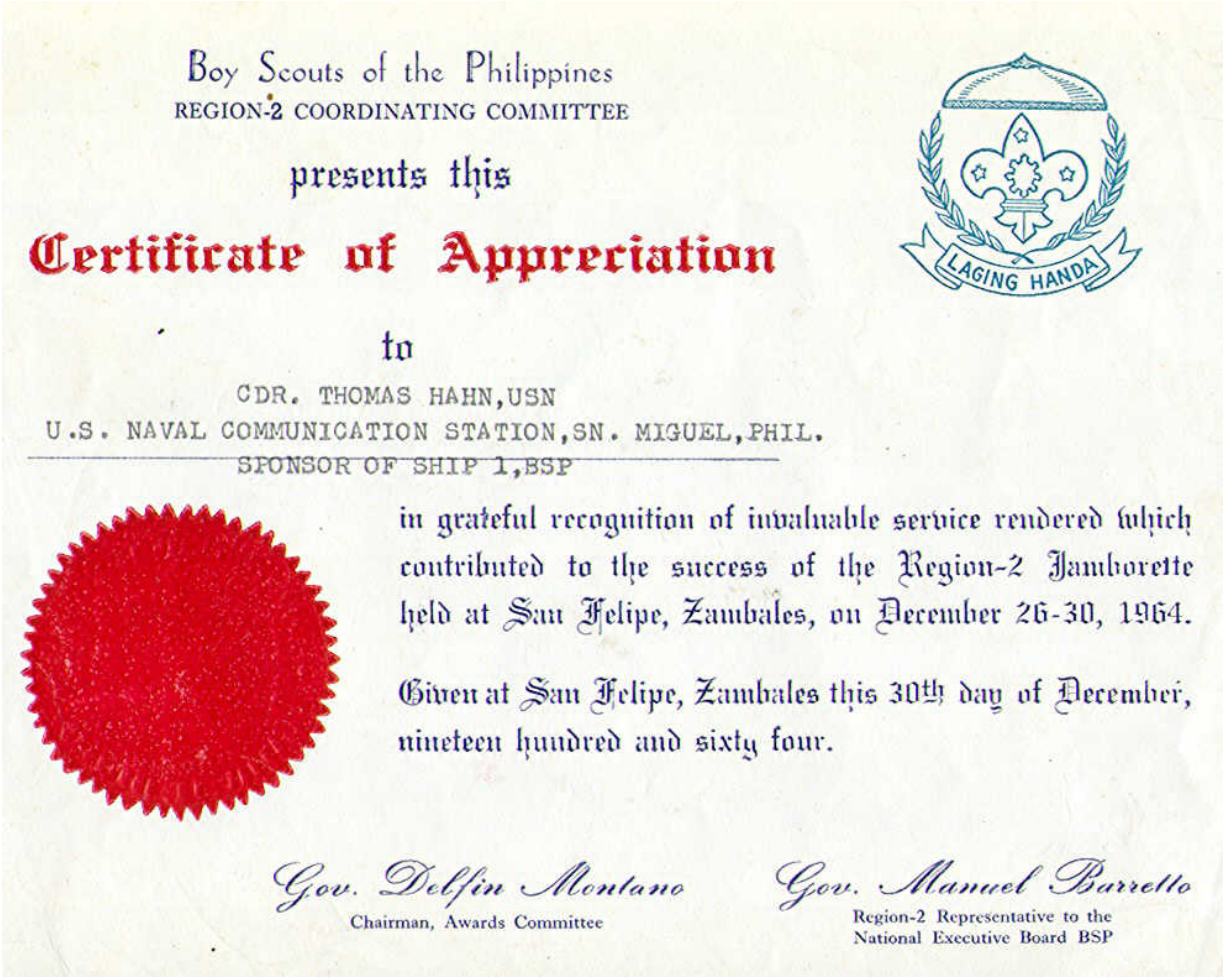
SCOUTING (Additions to be made)

Letter from Tommy Hahn to his parents from Camp Shawnee:

Dear Mother:



I have been having a good time at camp but some of the food is rotten. I would like to have a good meal of home cooked food.

I am writing this letter on Charles typewrite. CHARLEY lets me help him in the Canteen. I make his bed every morning. Charley is a swell guy and he lets me buy candy and pop when ever I want to. All the rest of Guys have to buy their pop at seven at night. I go swimming and canoeing every day. I have three targets for my pro marksman in rifling. It rained last night a little. It rained lie heck this morning. I had to get u and fix the tent in the mile of the night.

I have been making handicraft things for Charley to put on a board to show the rest of the fellows what to do. Roy [Menninger] has been making some to. I have mad a bracelet and I have made some other things.

Bring me something good to eat when you come out.

Goodby Tommy

About 2000, a family of sand hill cranes appeared on the golf course behind our house. They appeared occasionally for a couple of years and then did not return. In 2003, while sitting at the breakfast room window, I heard the older pair with their offspring. They brought the young one for me to see, stayed a few hours resting under the shade of a pine tree, then went away for two years. In 2005 the older par returned with two offspring. I gave their call from where I was across the little lake behind me, and they came over. The two young ones were skittish as they did not know me. They stayed around for a brief period, and then departed and have not returned as of March 2005/. This winter I became friendly with them and they would come up to me. They stayed for a brief time and then departed, and have not returned as of March 2005.

Peter Rabbit

Peter Rabbit is your ordinary, domestic white rabbit, right? Wrong! Peter Rabbit was a VERY SPECIAL RABBIT. In summers in the late 1960s into the 1990s, we spent much of our summers at a cabin on Lower Lead Mountain Pond in Township 28. The nearest store was a small one at the crossroads of Amherst, Hancock County, Maine, ten miles away. One day, to our surprise, we saw a domestic white rabbit munching away at some grass in front of our cabin. We had no idea where he could have come from. Perhaps someone had dumped him on Route 9 about a mile away? In any event, he came and went all that summer. At about seven each evening, he would come thumping home up the gravel road that led to our cabin. Sometimes at night he would go down to our tiny beach and lie with his hind feet in the water. Peter would come up to be fed, but never to be picked up, and occasionally to be petted. Peter died on 22 August 1980(More narrative about and photos of Peter Rabbit later. Editor)

This was in a letter from my mother, in which she said, "I think this is the most unique and downright plain, but it speaks an unknown language. What do you think, and who are you thinking about?" You guessed it, PETER RABBIT acquired from a neighbor at Kawailoa Beach, Oahu, Hawaii c1963. In the right hand corner is one of her kittens. The fish are tilapia caught in a pond in a sugar cane field. Tom belonged to the Haleiwa Fishing Club; one of the members, who was a vice-president of a sugar company, gave Tom a pass to fish in the ponds and lakes that belonged to the company. Duane Torrey and Possibly Ranger. The cat looks like Ranger who adopted us by coming to our Lock House in Brookmont, Maryland on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. Unfortunately, Ranger did not live very long as he was sick when he came. The difficulty with the photo is that the back says October 1971 and we didn't move to the Lock House until 1972, but the note may be wrong. (Tom Hahn Photo)

DOVEY

The smartest cat that I have had was Dovey, a part-Siamese tortoise shell who was born in Pennsylvania. Dovey was my son's family cat, but at an early age we took her in when they moved to an apartment that didn't allow cats. She lived with us until she was eighteen years old.

After this photograph was returned by the photo shop, I was amused to see that Dovey looked a bit like a unicorn. "The " unicorn" was in fact a young pear tree in its protective wrapping. Occasion, at night, and usually at the full full which greatly animated Dovey, she (and I) like to play tag in the yard. Dovey would run up to me and slap my leg with a paw and take off for some part in the yard. When I found her I gave her a tap on her hiny and I would "hide." She often came to this particular tree as a base when she and the tree -- and I suppose, I -- were older. This photo replicates pretty well the beautiful markings and color of a true tortie.

Dovey at Our Home at Tropical Palms, Charlotte County, Florida. In this place I first used a laptop computer on a coffee table while I sat on a sofa. Dovey, my faithful companion, was usually at my side. One day before I started working, the screen saver, an aquarium scene, was on the computer. Dovey immediately became interested in the fish swimming by. She watched them, then circled around the computer to see where they were on the back of the computer. This seems to frustrate her. See next image for the conclusion.

So, she sat back down, studied the computer screen, then hit one of the keyboard keys with her paw and turned off the screen saver. Then she looked at me as if saying, "That takes care of those buggers." I thought it was a fluke and that she had removed the fish randomly. However, the next morning she did the same thing. So, I changed the screen saver to something less irritating to her. Note the white "hole in the stocking effect" on her left paw, one of the characteristics of the "classis" tortie. (Computer photos by her "Grandpa" Tom Hahn)

Dovey Circle Design
When Dovey was quite small, she brought up a picture wire from the basement to play with. From then on she collected bits and pieces of wires and then. We put them in a basket. Soon old necklaces went there and then wires from champagne bottle. Then, at some point, Dovey began to make designs with them when we were away. The longer we were away, the more intricate the design. Shown here in 1883 in our kitchen in the old house at Shepherdstown, West Virginia is an empty food dish of hers surrounded by

Dovey with Another Design of Her Toys. These champagne wires lead up to al old collar in her dry food dish. Note the other "former collar" in front of her food. Dovey did not mind wearing collars at all. In point of fact, one time her collar fell off in the yard and she came in carrying it in her mouth and placed it in front of one of us. (Photo by Tom Hahn)

Dovey's Toad (Photograph by Tom Hahn)

You may be wondering why a toad is here on the section on Dovey. Dovey did not have any other cats to play with in our house. She was a "singe grandchild" living with her grandparents. Dovey did not care for other cats. The only cat who ever was a match was a handsome male who came to the little slab of concrete in front of our kitchen door at the old house in Shepherdstown, West Virginia. We called him "Bully Cat," but he was was antagonistic and never was Dovey. They simply sat and stared at each other. Dovey had been spayed as a very young cat. To our knowledge she had never had sexual intercourse with another cat. Perhaps she she looked at Bully Cat and wondered what life would have been like in the Fast Lane? Dovey despised kittens kittens and small children. She was bane of many a dog who even dared to pass by our house. She was attracted to mice, shrews, chipmunks, birds, and the occasional lobster, and, a TOAD. This particular toad on occasion came to the screen door of our cabin in Maine to visit in the evening. I would let Dovey out and she and the toad faced each other and simply looked at each other for long periods of time. That was it! Maybe Dovey thought the toad would turn into a Prince!

OTHER NON-FAMILY KITTIES

When we lived in Cherryfield, Washington County, Maine, in the mid-1990s, there was an odd family down the down who had all sorts of uncared-for cats. Most of these cats had various problems, mostly transmitted one from the other. I did what I could for them. I took Muffy (middle right) to a veterinarian to see what was wrong with her -- as an example of the others -- and talked him into selling me with medicine for all of them. To my knowledge, they all died, one at a time, and were probably succeeded by others. One family member told me that they were sick "from eating grass!" I did what

Some of my earliest memories are of weeding my grandmother's garden for a dime or just the sheer pleasure of it. Today, over 35 years later, I still find some of my most pleasant times are spent weeding and tending my own gardens, The gardens have taught me a great deal about life: patience, discipline, acceptance of disappointments, and rejoicing in accomplishment. I've gained an understanding of nature and my place in it. From the pesty weed to the tiny striped beetle, we all try to survive within our garden microcosm. Another great pleasure is seeing a customer's joy over the discovery of the magic of growing perennials and exchanging gardening knowledge.

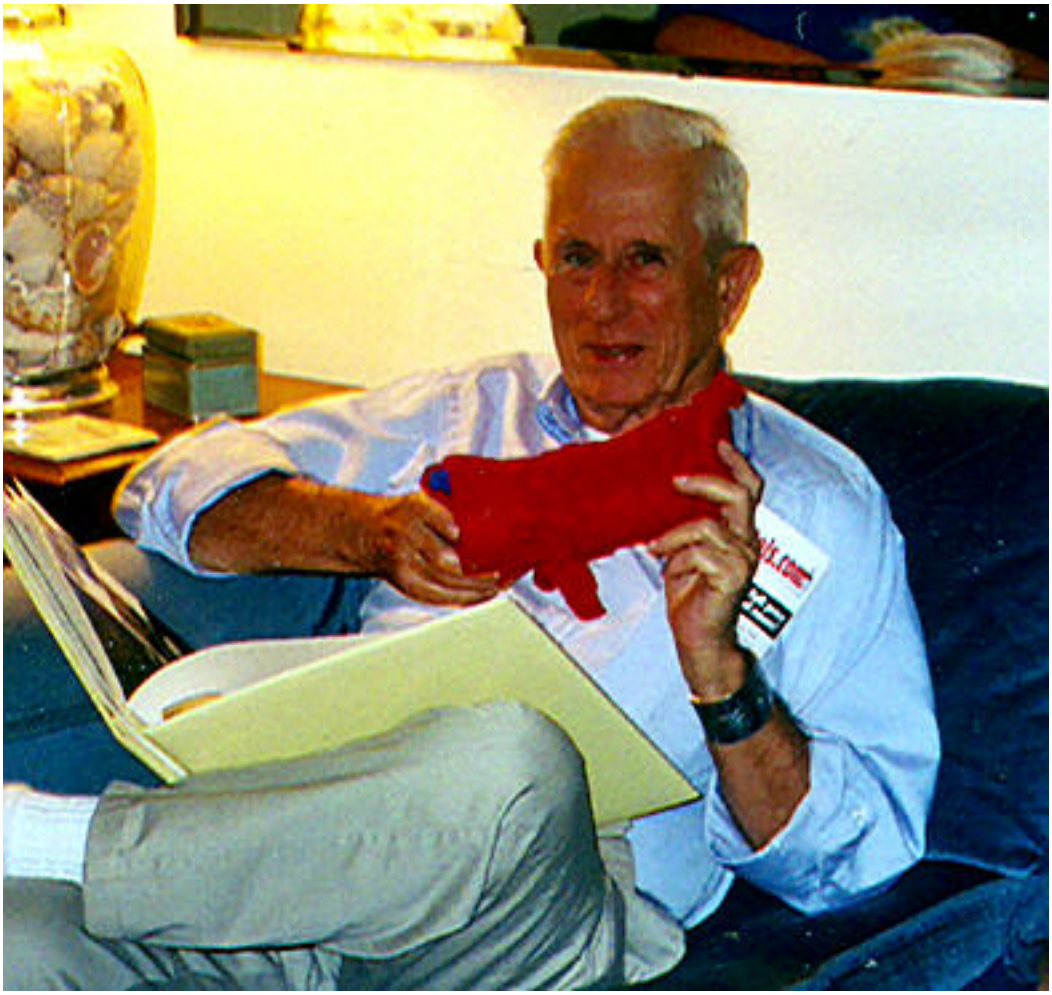
Swift water's Indian Shop



For several years, when we lived on 6 South Church Street in Shepherdstown, West Virginia. I had a small Indian Shop where I sold mostly Native American handicrafts and a few artifacts. It was virtually a small museum. I never tried to make money out of it except what I gave back to Native Americans in need or for items that I eventually donated to several museums. It was a very small enterprise in a couple of rooms that were made up for that purpose in our ample garage. When we moved to just outside Shepherdstown and then later back on the edge of town, I always had a few items for trade or sale but not an actual "Shop," zoning restrictions. For several years I went to El Paso, Texas; Mexico, Guatemala; Honduras; and Costa Rica seeking items of interest. These "expeditions" were coupled with the interest I had in studying Mayan ruins in those countries, except for El Paso, of course. As an extension of this effort, I sometimes had a "Trading Post" at the Shepherdstown Men's Club where I sold items from the shop and others had tables where they could sell whatever they wanted as a small fundraiser for the club and for fun and general interest.

During this period I did a lot of looking for Indian artifacts in the Eastern Panhandle of West West Virginia and in Maryland, mainly along the Potomac and Shenandoah Rivers. Many wonderful days were spent in the company of my friends John Ingalls (now deceased), Director of the Jefferson County Museum and Chris Branch, both of Shepherdstown. They had introduced me to the hunting to the hunting of Indian relics and were always completely sharing in their knowledge and knowing just where to go to look. Through these foraging expeditions I accumulated a large collection of local artifacts. John and I often traded for the things that we found or for the things that we had obtained in trading with others. While all this was going on, I was involved in the preservation of Native American Archaeology in the Eastern Panhandle and for years was the President of the Eastern Panhandle Archaeology Society located in Martinsburg. In the end, most of my collection went to museums where they could be enjoyed and studied by others.

My local Shepherdstown Collection went to the Historic Shepherdstown Commission Museum located at the Entler Museum; the artifacts from along the Potomac and Shenandoah rivers were donated to the Jefferson County, West Virginia Museum, along with my Navy Captain's uniform and the various awards and medals that had come through a naval career; my larger collection of Mexico, South and Central American artifacts and pottery were donated to the Museum at Seton Hall University at South Orange, New Jersey, in honor of the Delaware ethnographer and author, Dr. Herbert Krafft, who had been associated with the university for many years, in honor of his devotion to the Delaware and the advancement of the knowledge of their culture;

LUCINDA MARSHALL

MARSHALL, Lucinda (married Letteese)--New data added 21 August 2002. We previously listed Lucinda as the daughter of Betsy Wilaquenaho and probably William Marshall. In any event, she was put temporarily with the Marshall Family. As reported by Idaho Delaware Deborah Gravett (email: DION@aol.com), it now appears that Lucinda was the wife of a William Marshall (not the spouse of Wilaquenaho). Deborah says, "William Marshall and Na We Now were also our relatives on the 1867 Delaware Registry by John Pratt. Deborah says that Nawenow was the son of Lucinda Flewellen Marshall. Deborah says, "We might be wrong about William; we thought he was Lucinda's husband, but it might of been his son. Rebecca Lucas was mother of Lucinda Marshall. Lucinda was the mother of Mary Francis Marshall who married James Fent. Their daughter Otelia was the mother of Arthur Creech." And, Arthur Creech was Charlotte Simmons' father and my grand father. I am Deborah Shawn Gravett, daughter of Charlotte June Simmons, grand niece of Clyde Creech and granddaughter of late Arthur Albert Creech. " Or, another way of looking at Deborah Shawn Gravett's ancestry: Rebecca Lucas>Lucinda Flewellen Marshall>Mary Francis Marshall, spouse James Fent>Otelia Marshall, spouse Arthur Creech>Charlotte June Simmons>Deborah Shawn Gravett. [This entry will be revised and added to shortly. In addition, we will add more data and general information on the Idaho Delaware. Editor] .

BULLETIN BOARD

HELP WANTED!!!

Bulletin Board items should only be about Lenape-Delaware persons or their families. This Bulletin Board is for genealogy only. No politics, no flaming, no off-subject material. The web site owner retains the right to publish or not publish any particular item. I will see how the bulletin board develops to see if we need to develop any particular ground rules and to see what the traffic volume is.

> Dear Mr. Hahn,
>
> I hate to impose on you. I'm hoping you can and will give me some pointers on where, and how to search next.
>
> I've been trying to find out who my Great. Grandfather, John W. Newcum/ Newcom/Newcomb, born 1833-1836 was, who his parents were, and where he came from.
>
> He showed up in Texas, in Palo Pinto County, and joined the Civil War there. On his Civil War records his name was spelled Newcon.
>
> My family history, such as there is, is that he and 2 brothers fled a murder of a Federal officer/soldier about 1847-1849, either to Indian Territory, or he caught a ride with a wagon train to Texas.
>
> Searching for him, I found that it is said that his father was thought to be a Frenchman, and his Mother was Cherokee. It's said that he *had a brother named Sam, a brother named Alec, and a sister named Minnie, who married a

Johnson*, and that he had a brother who lived in I.T. who married a Cherokee woman called Black Jane.

I looked at one John W. Newcom (Stockbridge), on the Kansas Reserve, and I need more info. on Widow Newcom, a William Newcom, who was Munsee, & a, from memory, I think a Ne con he Newcom from the Kansas Reserve.

I contacted the Stockbridge-Munsee, trying to find records, not to try to enroll, and Shelia Powless told me to look for the Stevens Roll. I contacted the National Archives in Washington D.C., and they said they have record that the Stevens Roll exists, but they couldn't find it.

I emailed the Cherokee Nation, at the suggestion of Jessica, who is affiliated with the Kansas Delaware, asking someone at the Cherokee Nation to do a look-up for me...I don't think they're going to get back to me.

My Mother once spoke with W.W. Newcomb. He looked and couldn't find my ancestor in his Newcomb book...maybe just poor records, but he said he thought our family came from the Newcombs in I. T. who ran with the Delaware.

My g. Grandfather gave contradicting info. on the 1880 & 1900 census. 1. said he was born in Kansas, his Father born in New York State, and his Mother born in Canada, then changed it to 2. he was born in Missouri, and both his parents born in the U.S.

I know he could not read or write, and neither could my Grandfather who went to work when he was 8 years old, and my Dad had only a 3'rd grade education.

I have a 70 yr. old cousin, who has also looked for years. She went to Lawrence, Kansas, and to Platte Co. Missouri looking, I'm 58 yrs. old.

If you could, and would just give me some pointers on where & how to look further, I would be most grateful.

Sincerely,

Martha N. Fanning

The following was on INDIAN-ROOTS-L@LISTSERV.INDIANA.EDU from dllove@banet.net on 27 January 2001.

Is there anyone on the list who is researching Lenape/Delaware family?
I have two different families I think may be Lenape but I haven't gotten to the point of researching for verification yet.

One family is that of Adam Baker born 1834 in Shenandoah Co., VA. I need to verify that his father's name was Abraham, and not Absalom as I was told, and then identify the correct Abraham from the other ones I've found. Adam's mother still may have been Sarah born in New Jersey. Adam married Elizabeth Speaker in Licking Co., OH, in 1854 and they lived in Paulding, Putnam and Van Wert counties in the same state. I don't know if the Baker name is as common among native people as it is with European, but I was intrigued to find that there is a Lenape bead worker by the name of Joe Baker. It is a little difficult to tell, but it's possible that at one time Adam and Elizabeth may have been identified as non-white on the census. I have photos of both and of one son in particular that seem to support native ancestry.

In the other family I also have to establish an identity, that of the mother. My great-grandmother was Margaret Gatton, who married Adam Baker's son Andrew. She and her parents were identified as non-white on the 1850 census in Ohio. Her mother's first name was Emaline, born ca 1816 in Ohio. I think she had a previous husband with the last name of Devore and her maiden name was Berryman and need to verify this. Her mother may have been Rachel Berryman, born ca 1784 in New Jersey. Margaret had three half-sisters with the last name of Devore. The Baker and Gatton families also seemed to have ties to non-white families named Dennison and Sunderland in northwest Ohio. I have a photo of Margaret and she was definitely native.

I have to do further genealogical research and historical research as to location and time, etc., before I feel comfortable in saying that any of these people were Lenape. I'm well aware that other native peoples were living in Virginia and New Jersey as well. Debbie Winchell, Troy, New York Seeking information on R. C. Taylor born ca. 1790-1795. He operated a sawmill in Leavenworth in Kansas Territory ca. 1840-1850. R. C. Taylor is the father of Betsy Zigler. Contact descendant Arlene Micucci AM17000@aol.com .

Betsy Wilaquenaho was born about 1797 in Pennsylvania or Ohio. Betsy married the Indian Trader, William Marshall. She and William Marshall migrated from Ohio to Southwest Missouri. She then went with William or with her family to the Delaware Reserve, present Kansas, about 1832. Betsy went to Indian Territory after 1867 and probably died there about 1875. Seeking the documentation of her connection with the Ketchum family or any other family. Also seeking the death and burial data of William Marshall. Was there one? The Reunion in 1933 was called the "4th Annual Grinter Reunion," which leads us to believe that there was a reunion that year, but so far we have been unable to obtain a photograph for the occasion.

We would appreciate hearing from anyone who knows of or who has this reunion photograph. swiftwater@lenapedelawarehistory.net or martinweeks@cox.net

A newspaper, probably in the Kansas City area, had an article on possibly this reunion.

A Grinter Family Reunion
200 of Family of Five Brothers Assemble on Homestead of One

Descendants of five Grinter brothers who settled in Kansas from Kentucky a century ago held a family reunion yesterday at the homestead of Moses R. Grinter on the banks of the Kaw River six miles west of Kansas City, Kansas. About 200 of the family attended.

Moses R. Grinter was the first of the five brothers to reach Kansas. He was born in 1809 at Beardstown, Ky. [incorrect] and joined the westward march when the United States government sent him to establish a ford over the Kaw River to link a military road between Ft. Leavenworth and Ft. Riley

He established the ford in 1831 and a decade later married Anna Marshall, a Wyandotte [incorrect--Delaware] Indian, shortly after that tribe moved from Ohio to establish itself upon the Kaw. [The Delaware Tribe moved from Southwest Missouri.] He reared five of ten children and died in 1878. Twenty-one grandchildren and thirty-six great-grandchildren survived him.

The other four brothers came to Kansas in the decade following the arrival of Moses R. Grinter. They were James C. Grinter, who married Rosanna Marshall; Newton Grinter [incorrect], Thomas Grinter [incorrect], and Daniel Grinter [incorrect]. All but one reared families. [It appears to give erroneous information on Moses' brothers - it claims Newton, Daniel and Thomas were Moses' brothers, when other sources indicate they were cousins.]

The oldest descendant present was Mrs. James David, Perry, Kas., who is 75 years old. Next in seniority was Mrs. T. R [R. T.] Mooney, 3445 Forest Avenue, who is 74. [Martin Weeks estimates that the article was from 1931, because it gives Mrs. Mooney's age as 74, and she was born in 1857. [The article was sent from Jane Zolotor to Marty Weeks.]

Grinter Family Re-union Held Sunday.

The annual GRINTER family reunion was held Sunday at Grinter Heights, eight miles west of Kansas City, Kan. The family dinner on the 60-foot porch of the old family home was served to 124 members of the pioneer family. Making his first appearance at the reunion and the youngest present was Maurice BROWN, 4-month-old great-great-grandson, of Mrs. R. T. MOONEY, who at 83 years was the oldest of the clan present. She is a granddaughter of Moses GRINTER, operator of the early ferry across the Kaw river. Another "oldest" to sign the record book was Mrs. Mary COLLEY, 82, of Perry. The oldest living Grinter in the lineage chart which had just been prepared is Herschel GRINTER, 90, of Independence, Mo., who was unable to be present. Three of his sons, Lee Grinter, John Grinter, and Emery Grinter, all of Independence, attended. Other "Grinter men" present were George P. Grinter, his son, James W. Grinter, and a grandson, Jimmie Grinter, all of Edwardsville; Thomas Grinter of Kansas City, Kan., and Linton E. Grinter of Lawrence. Two granddaughters of Moses Grinter, Miss Matti Kirby and Miss Annie Kirby, now occupy the home at Grinter Heights. A musical program was given by members of the family. Linton E. Grinter of Lawrence was re-elected president of the family organization. Other officers re-elected were M. N. Grinter, of Independence, vice-president; Miss Annie Kirby, secretary; Miss Mattie Kirby, treasurer; Miss Anna Stephens, historian, and Mrs. Charles Kirby, advisory member. Those from Perry who attended the reunion were Mr. and Mrs. V. C. Raines, Mrs. Colley and Mrs. Suzanne Schultz, James David, Emory David and Tom Fowler of Silver Lake also attended. [It is odd that there were no family members from Topeka mentioned in the article. Those identified were members of the younger Christian Hahn Family. Chris Hahn and his family had moved from the Stony Point area some 25-30 years earlier. During the Grinter Reunion years the Hahn Family lived at Topeka and attended the Grinter Reunions regularly. The Hahn Family was descended from Mary Jane (Grinter) Defries, daughter of Moses and Annie Grinter. Adams Delawares

DELAWARES IN UNITED STATES WARS

"A serious book filled with the knowledge and lore of the Delaware." No Illustrations, extensive index and appendix, with footnotes, 80pp P $8.95 Hope Farm Press Publisher of New York Regional History 252 Main Street Saugerties NY 12477 914-246-3522

The following is from Richard C. Adam's, The Delaware Indians: A Brief History (1906), Chapter IV):

In most every war in which the United States has been engaged some of the Delaware Indians aided and assisted the Government, and even in the Florida war we find that the Delawares furnished about 100 warriors, guides, and scouts for the United States Army. But it seems that in their military service, like their other dealings, they were neglected. Following are two letters on file in the Office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs ion this subject:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, June 28, 1855.

SIR: Your letter of the 15th instant, inclosing one from Agent Robinson requesting copies of lists of the names of Delaware warriors who have performed military service for the United States, and which were forwarded here by you in September, 1853, was duly received.

For his convenience and information I transmit herewith copies of the lists named by him, also one naming those Shawnees who have obtained bounty-land warrants for services in the Florida war, which was furnished to the Office at the same time.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, CHARLES E. MIX, Acting Commissioner. A. CUMMING, Esq. Superintendent of Indian Affairs, St. Louis, Mo.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS April 23, 1862.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the instant, inclosing an application from the Delaware chiefs for money due them for military service in the Florida war, and have to inform you that as the subject pertains to the jurisdiction of the War Department, the papers have been referred to the Secretary of the Interior, with the request that the same be referred to the Secretary of War.

Very respectfully your obedient servant, Wm. P. DOLE, Commissioner. S. S. MENAGER, Present. [p. 36]

As early as January, 1793, the Delawares and Shawnees negotiated with Baron de Carondelet for lands west of the Mississippi, in the State of Missouri, and the Delawares resided there until 1815. About this time the Cherokee were living on the Arkansas River at that place, which afterwards became the Cherokee Nation.

The Osages, a powerful tribe who claimed the territory, made war against the Cherokee and were about to subdue them, when messengers were sent to the Delaware in Indiana, beseeching their aid. The Delawares sent warriors to their rescue and found the Cherokee near Cantonment Gibson (later Fort Gibson), in a stockade they had erected for their defense, the Osages having seized most of their stock, destroyed their homes, and forced them to this place. As the Algonkin warriors marched in, there was great rejoicing among the Cherokee, and after a few days of rest -- dancing and feasting -- they marched against the Osages, who had withdrawn west of Grand River. They overtook them at a place called Cabin Creek, but this fight was only a skirmish. From there the Osages retired to a high hill on the east side of the Verdigris river. After sending their women and children across the river, which was swollen from recent rains, the Osage warriors fortified themselves on top of this hill; which is quite difficult to ascend, owing to the stone precipices around the summit. The Cherokee, and especially the Delawares, were mostly well armed with guns, the Osages principally having bows, arrows, and spears. The battle raged from early in the morning until late in the afternoon, during which the Osages would roll large stones and boulders over the precipice. to repel the assaults of the Cherokee and the delawares. But in spite of the advantage in position and numbers possessed by the Osages, the summit was gained in the afternoon, and the Osages completely routed. Their chief, Claremore, was killed and buried on the mound which was named after him. Thereafter the Cherokee had no further trouble from this source.

Another party of Cherokee went on still further south and located in Texas, on the Sabine River, where they had established themselves as frontier guards between the settlers of Texas and the wild Indians of the plains, who would swoop down from the territory of the United States into that part of Mexico and had become a constant menace to her subjects in that part of the Republic now known as Texas. These Cherokee, too, soon needed the aid and assistance of the Algonkins, and the Delawares, true to their alliance, the Shawnees, and a few other of the Algonkin tribes again went to their rescue.

Here, on the Sabine River, we find the Indians who had justly claimed much of of North American continent, making a treaty with first one class of the invaders and then with another, and finally getting a grant, or an acknowledgement of title, to the land from both Mexico and Texas, and, having faith in their promises and fighting for the protection of Texas, only to find themselves cruelly driven away as soon as Texas was able to do without the Indian's aid, notwithstanding the fact that Texas had guaranteed protect them against invasion, or purchase the land should the Indians wish to sell.

This chapter of history is well told by referring to parts of an old letter. which is as follows:

> The undersigned chiefs of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians acting for their tribes, having faith in the justice and truth of our white brethren in the great State of Texas and faith in their Great Captain, Sam Houston, and others in the world beyond the skies, respectfully ask the assistance, relying upon the promises aforesaid of your excellency, in carrying out these promises made in good faith to our people.
>
> The agreement between the Delaware and Shawnee Indians entered into between the Republic of Texas and themselves was unfortunately lost and destroyed by fire some time during the year 1955. We have, through the ad extended by many of your people, been made acquainted with many facts which conclusively proves to us that we are in justice entitled to consideration and help from the white brethren of the State of Texas.

The first fact to which we beg to call to your attending as tending to prove our rights to consideration and aid from the State of Texas, is the treaty signed at Colonel Bowles' village, on the 23rd day of February, 1836, in the first year of the provisional government of Texas, for a more detailed description of the matters set forth in the treaty, reference is made here to the record of the same in the Department of State and the War Department.

The treaty shows that its object and purpose was to provide for an everlasting peace between the Shawnees and delawares and the Republic of Texas, and the various other tribes within the borders of the Republic.

A short time subsequent to the making of this treaty, the Republic of Texas records the fact, and the same is recollected by many pioneers of your great State, that a conspiracy was entered between the Mexicans, then resident in your State, and many of the wild tribes of Indians, which tribes are named in the treaty before referred to, and they rebelled against the State of Texas. This conspiracy having been brought to the notice of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians before the whites had any knowledge thereof, it was revealed by the Shawnee and Delaware Indians, and the same thwarted by reason of knowledge of the conspiracy being communicated to the whites before the same became well organized. The Delawares and Shawnees on being solicited by the other Indians and Mexicans to take part in the conspiracy, refused to do so, and the lead chief of the Shawnees immediately learning of such conspiracy dispatched his own son to notify the whites of its existence, and thereby enabled them to prepare and circumvent the same.

They suffered many indignities and deprivations of property and person by reason of having revealed the knowledge of this conspiracy to the white people and the wild tribes and the Mexicans retaliated in various ways, and they lost a great deal of property and life by reason of their loyalty to the conditions of the treaty entered into as before stated. These are the facts that appear on record in the War Department and the rest in the memory of all of the old pioneers now living.

In the year 1839 there was a general order issued by the Federal Government for the removal of all the Indians from the Republic of Texas. Through the intercession of the the acting president of the provisional government, Lamar, the commissioner who was charged with carrying out the order of removal, was prevailed upon not to molest or remove the Shawnees and Delawares.

The next fact to which attention is called as tending to prove our consideration to aid and to help, and to be reimbursed for the land deeded to us by treaty, is two letters from the commissioners of the State of Texas, written January 4, 1841, and also to an account allowed by President Sam Houston for expenses incurred by the Delawares and Shawnees for ferriage for themselves and horses in crossing the river to go on the warpath against the Comanche Indians, and to suppress them at the instance of the Republic aforesaid. The records of the Department of State show the issuance of ammunition to the Shawnees and Delawares for the purpose of carrying out this war for the suppression of the Comanches. The records further show that the Shawnees and the Delawares afterwards acted as interpreters in the peace brought about by their services at the council which lasted from the 28th day of March to the 17th day of April in the year 1842.

The records further show that President Houston gave his duebill to Joe Harry and Jack Harry for services in protecting the frontier in 1842. The records further show that one Jim Shaw, a Delaware, rescued a Mrs. Tidwell and her children from the Comanches and delivered them to their bosom friends. This evidence is referred to for the purpose of showing that the Shawnees and Delawares were always loyal to the treaty entered into between them and the State of Texas on the 23rd day of February, 1836, which treaty is signed by Sam Houston and John Forbes on the part of the provisional government of Texas, and the head chief of the various tribes mentioned in said treaty. These facts, taken in connection with the valuable services rendered by them during the various, Indian Wars, as shown by the records of the War Department, prove that they are entitled to be reimbursed for the lands ceded them by the Republic of Texas.

We also call attention to the minutes of the council held at Tiwocana Creek commencing on Tuesday, the 28th of March, 1843. There was present as commissioner in behalf of the provisional government of Texas, G. W. Terrell, John S. Black, and T. J. Smith, and T. Brysen, secretary of said commission; the commission on behalf of the United States was Hon Pierce Butler.

The following tribes were represented in this council, viz: The Delawares, Shawnees, Caddoes, Waccoes, Ironise, Anadarkas, Tawaconos, Keeches. The following individuals acted as interpreters during the sitting of the council, viz: John Connor, Jim Secondeyne, Jim Shaw, Louis Sanches, Jessy Chisholm, and Red Horse. These were the chief men of the Delawares and Shawnee Indians and were used by the State of Texas in negotiating and treatying with the other tribes of Indians.

The agreement for a treaty was affected at this council between all the hostile tribes of Indians within the borders of the State, and afterwards all these tribes were removed to the Indian Territory [present Oklahoma] with the exceptions of the Shawnees and the Delawares, to whom the commissioners on the part of Texas ceded 40 square miles of land situated on the Brazos River.

In view of these facts, and knowing traditionally of our rights to the land so ceded by the commissioners of the provisional government of Texas, for meritorious services as heretofore described, and upon our investigation to the same, we have concluded to ask this great State to reimburse us for the same, or to cede us other lands in lieu of the same, that we may have a home, he fee to be held in the remainder of our nation in trust for all.

In conclusion, we will say that believing in the justice of our rights and relying on the bounty of the State of Texas for redress of wrongs, we ask that other lands be ceded to us in lieu of those, or that an appropriation be made of sufficient money to purchase other lands in place of those formerly ceded us for the purpose of a home.

Though there was never more than 250 Delaware Indians at any one time in the State of Texas, yet they displayed a most important part in that State during its formative period, and the authentic documents still exist containing a record of their many notable deeds of heroism entitling them to a high place in the history of the: Lone Star State." From Marcy's Exploration of the Red River we get the following:

The Comanches during the past year have not been friendly with the Delawares and Shawnees, and although there has as yet been no organized demonstration of hostilities, they have secretly killed several men, and in consequence, our hunters entertain a feeling of revenge toward them. They, however, go out alone every days upon their hunts, are frequently 6 or 8 miles from the command, and seem to have no fears of the Comanches, as they are able to encounter them at any moment and being so poorly mounted that they could not escape, their only alternative would be to act on the defensive. I have cautioned them upon the subject several times, but they say that they are not afraid to meet any of the prairie Indians, proving the odds are not greater than six top one. They are well armed with good rifles -- the use of which they understand perfectly -- are intelligent, active, and brave and in my opinion will ere long take ample sati satisfaction upon the Comanches for every one of their nation that falls by their hands.

Upon passing the trail of the Indians today, one of our Delawares looked for a moment at the foot-prints, picked up a blade of grass that had been crushed. and said the trail was made two days since, while to us it had every appearance of being quite fresh; subsequent observations satisfied us that he was correct.

Upon another occasion, riding along over the prairies, I saw in the sand what appeared to me to be a bear track, with the impression of all the toes, and heel; on pointing it out to one of the Indians, he instantly called my attention to some blades of grass hanging about 10n inches over the marks, and explained to me that while the wind is blowing these blades of grass and pressed toward the earth, and the oscillation thereby produced had scooped out the light sand into the form I have mentioned. This, when explained, was perfectly simple and intelligible, but I am very much inclined to believe the solution of it would have puzzled the philosophy of a white man for a long time.

A few such men as the Delawares attached to each company of troops upon the Indian frontier would, by their knowledge of Indian character and habits, and their wonderful powers of judging the of country, following tracts, et. (which soldiers can not be taught) enable us to operate to much better advantage amongst the prairie tribes. In several instance when we have had our animals stray away from camp, I have sent sic or eight teamsters for them, who, after spending a lot of time, would often return unsuccessful. I would then send out one Indian who would make a circuit around the camp until he struck the tracks of the lost animals, and following them up would invariable return with them in a short time. In this way their services are almost indispensable upon an expedition like ours. One of our Delawares has seen fresh buffalo tracks today going to the southeast, and we still hope that we may encounter them.

John Bushman [tribe?], our interpreter, was much surprised today, on calling a doe toward him with a deer bleat, to see a small fawn following after its mother, but imagine his astonishment when immediately behind the fawn came a huge panther bounding rapidly toward him and in a twinkling he fastened his claws in the vitals of his victim. He, however, in this instance, caught the tartar,, and paid dearly for his temerity, as John, with a spirit of indignation that would have done credit to the better feelings of any man, raised his rifle and in stead of killing te deer, which was entirely at his mercy, planted the contents in the side of the panther.

The method of hunting deer by the use of the bleat is practiced extensively by the Delawares in this country and with great success

In the Indian office at Washington, D.C., will be found filed the following letters:

Major NEIGHBORS. BRAZOS AGENCY, October 7, 1855:
DEAR SIR: I left all well at my agency, and the Indians quiet and contented. Twenty-four of Shanico's tribe [which?] came in and reported that he will be in before long. The men returned from Mexico bringing some nine or ten horses, which Tekinsee took from them and turned over to me. He also sent a man to a band of Taconies and brought in five more horses, four of them Delaware horses and one Pino Shaw's horse. Men are at work and pushing things. The party of Delawares that left when you did. a day or two after, returned brining seven scalps and two horses. They report that hey followed the trail for seven days, after their horses, and that it gave out, but they continued the direction until they struck a fresh trail, which was the two that killed Skidmore. They followed that trail across Red River and stopped at noon, when a party of ten Comanche Indians came up to them. They had a conversation and finally camped together, each party watching the other, for Jacob says that he could understand every word they said and they agreed among themselves to attack the Delawares, kill them, and take their horses next morning at daybreak.

But the Delawares lay awake all night, and at daybreak they opened fire upon them and killed four, charged the rest and killed all but two, one of whom was badly wounded, and the other they could have killed but they wanted him to carry the news of their defeat back to the Comanche. One they did not scalp, as he fell in a water hole and sank. They brought the bows, lances, shields, and tricks of the party.

They told Jacob that the had met the Indians that killed old Skidmore and had learned from them that there were plenty of horses down there, and that they were on their way to kill, and steal, and that there was a large war party coming down to kill John Conner, Ketmsee, Lambshead, [of which tribe/s?] and all that they could find.

They seemed to know all about the condition of the posts and our frontier, and said that they had joined the Sioux Indians against the whites in the north. The captain commanding the party killed was Yamparico and had a black cloth coat, an undershirt, and a daguerreotype with him, and on his shield were some twenty white scalps, mostly white women. I have this shield and spear.

The two Indians that killed Skidmore went on to San Saba and stole even horses and came back in their trail to the Caddo Peaks. From here they struck due north and went to the main Comanche camp. A party of 12 men followed them and lost the trail. Then they came on to the posts and then here to see Captain Ross.

I have no doubt we will have the devil to pay, and our frontier is in the greatest danger. I hope you may succeed in your plans, as it is the only hope I have of having anything done. The Indians here and ready and willing to go against the Comanche and I think them about the best protection we have if they were managed by some white men.

A few killing scrapes will give them a distaste to these parts. Anyhow Jacob learned from the captain he killed that the place selected for winter quarters of all the wild Indians was on the main Red River, where it runs through the mountains, and that some eight or ten tribes united with the Sioux in their war.

John Conner says he ascertained from a Noconee that that is where they expect to winter. I think there would be no difficulty in finding them if an expedition were gotten up. I shall return to the Clear Fork in the morning and will a sharp lookout for any strange Indians. I will make requisition on Major Paul for a detachment of men to go out to the agency and remain there, as I think it proper to give these Government employees all the protection I can.

Respectfully, etc. J. R. BAYLOR Special Agent, Texas Indians

The Civil War

There was no drafting during the civil war in Kansas amongst the Delaware Indians or amongst those Indians who had long selected them as their guides. There was no bounty jumping either. All history records that where the Delaware adopted a cause he entered into it with his entire soul. He is ignorant of half measures. The difficulty was never in inspiring him with enthusiasm, but in restraining him.

I feel justified by the records, based upon authentic documents, in asserting that the Delaware Indians displayed during our late civil war the highest quality of loyalty to the Federal Government by enlisting in the Army for the Union, and by rendering the most gallant and efficient service afterwards, during the entire war, and by their example and earnest appeals to their neighboring Indians of other tribes, secured at critical periods voluntary enlistments in the Union Army. Their patriotism was of the most earnest and practical kind, as portrayed in official reports.

For example, in the annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of 1862 (p. 23) it is recited:

As an instance of their loyalty I will mention this fact: Of 201 Delawares, between the ages of 18 and 45, 170 have volunteered and are now in the military service of the United States. It is doubtful if any community can show a larger proportion [85%] of volunteers than this.

Agent Johnson, in official report of the same year, bears like testimony to the loyalty and devotion of this people.

In the reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Government agents during the remaining years of the war like statements are found, testifying to the continued loyalty, and as to the character of the service rendered, say: "They have distinguished themselves as faithful soldiers."

The head and assistant chiefs of the Delawares foresaw the malign cloud of secession looming up threateningly as early as January 3, 1861, pregnant with ruin and disaster to the whole country. Wherever they had influence among the Indians they used it intelligently, earnestly, and in most cases successfully, to continue in the Patriotic Oath of duty What a remarkable presience they exhibited in the following appeal to "Our Loyal Grandchildren." They seem to have "scented the battle afar off."

DELAWARE NATION, KANSAS, January 3, 1861.

To O puth la yar ho la, Muscogee Chief Warrior, and our Loyal Grandchildren:

We are much rejoiced to receive your letter by James McDaniels and David Balon. Our agent has sent it to our Great Father, the President, at Washington, and to General Hunter at Fort Leavenworth. It gives us great pleasure to hear that you are good and true friends to the President and to the Government of the United States.

We hope you will continue to be their friends. If bad men of the south ask you to go to war against the President, stop your ears, don't listen to them; they are your worst enemies, they are trying to destroy you and the country. Grandchildren, it does our hearts good; we rejoice to hear of the victory you gained over your enemies and the enemies of the Government under your brave leader, O puth la yar ho la.

Grandchildren, we are ready and willing to help you. Our brave warriors are ready to spill their blood for you, but are only waiting to hear from our Great Father at Washington. We have asked of him the privilege of going to your assistance and hope that our request will be grated. We don't wish to go to war against the wishes of our Great Father the President. We have learned that the President will soon have a large army in the Indian country to protect you; that he has ordered General Lane to march to your relief. We are confident that our Great Father is able and will protect his nice children.

Grandchildren, we pray to the "Great Spirit" to protect you and keep you out of the hands of the bad men of the south who are trying to destroy you and the Government. We have no fears as to the result of this war. The President has large armies in the field that will conquer and punish the rebels. We are proud of our Muscogee children.

Evidence that the Delawares were endeavoring to induce the Creeks "to standby the Government" as early as October 89, 1861, is contained in the following letters, written by R. H. Carruth and by F. Johnson, United States Indian Agent, respectively.

HUMBOLDT, KANS., October 9, 1861.

SIR: A part of the Creek delegation which I took to you at Camp Lane called on me last Saturday as they were returning. They have held council with the Delawares and Shawnee and other northern Indian tribes, and waiting on me for the purpose of agreeing on a time of meeting these tribes in council. I have arranged that delegates from southern Indians be at Humboldt on the 17th of November, and have promised them to write the Shawnees to meet them on the 24th of November.

My reason for appointing their council with the northern tribes one week later is this: I did not know to what points you might require the southern delegates to be taken, and I inclose a letter to the Shawnees, leaving a blank for the lace, which you can fill out and send if you approve of the arrangements.

I sent a letter to the Seminole chiefs instructing them to and the letters addressed them by Captain Pike and other Confederate officers to you by their delegation.

I also wrote to the superintendent of a mission station to confer with the other superintendent -- the schools are 100 miles apart -- and report to Colonel Coffin. This was done at his request, he being absent at the time the Indians were at Humboldt. I instructed him to employ an Indian runner to come here immediately should any important change have taken place among the Indians since the delegation left the Creek Nation. The Delawares wrote the Creeks, urging them to stand by the Government, and they also had a letter from _____, branch, central superintendent. The delegations will be here later that I had wished, , but owing to the time the Creeks were among the Shawnees, and it would have been impossible until their return home with their report to induce those tribes to send up others, the time could not be fixed earlier.

I have not the slightest doubt of their coming unless force be used by the rebels to prevent, which I think hardly probable, and in which case we are to be informed of everything the secession influence might do to prevent the Union manifesting itself.

I can not believe John Ross, of the Cherokees, has done what the papers state. If so, all there is left to do is to kindle civil war over his head. Hope that what I have done may meet your approval, I remain, your obedient servant.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, January 21, 1862.

SIR: Your communication to this Office of the 31st December last has been received, inclosing a letter which was brought to you by a messenger from the south as you were holding a council with the Delaware chiefs of your agency, and which letter you desired to be laid before the President of the United States. Your communication also represented the readiness of the Delawares and other western tribes to engage in military service on the part of the Government and against the rebel states.

With reference to all these subjects. you will an opportunity of conferring with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (who has perused your letter in person) at Leavenworth city , for which destination he left on Sunday last on public business.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, CHARLES E. MIX Acting Commissioner.

FREMONT'S EXPEDITION

The following is from Richard C. Adam's, The Delaware Indians: A Brief History (1906)

James Swannuck, James Saghundai, James Conner, Delaware Charley, Wetowka, Crane, Solon Everett, and Bob Skirkett, all Delaware Indians, accompanied Fremont in 1853 across the Rocky Mountains and assisted him in redeeming the State of California from the Mexicans. In Mr. John Charle's Fremont's work, Memoirs of My Life, are many accounts of the adventures these Delaware Indians met on those occasions. In speaking of his experience at Monterey, Mr. Fremont says:

The Delawares kept an unfailing watch from every peak or lofty crag and with the instruction and long-practiced vigilance, clear-sightedness, and quick discernment of their race, gave notice of every movement in all directions. One morning at sunrise everything indicated a near impending assault by overwhelming numbers. Fremont addressed his people, who assured him with one voice that they were ready to meet death with him on the spot rather than surrender. The Delawares prepared themselves at once for their last battle. Their arrayed themselves in their full finery, put their red war paint on themselves and on their horses, and with all their weapons in order, made the circuit of the camp, singing their war and death songs, their chargers prancing in apparent sympathy with their riders in the solemn but exultant enthusiasm of the occasion; but the enemy shrunk from the crisis. He further says that they were resourceful, brave, excellent marksmen, truthful, unwearied in watchfulness when in a hostile country, as they often were; unselfish, and displaying repeatedly a self-abnegation worthy of the highest praise, excepting in one direction, thus alluded to by General Fremont in his Memoirs:

They (the Delawares) regarded our journey as a kind of warpath, and no matter what kind of a path he is upon, a Delaware is always ready to take a scalp when he is in a country where there are strange Indians. They were skillful and intrepid scouts, and when in a camp duly watchful and vigilant ever. Notwithstanding that they faithfully served Fremont on all occasions, and never for one moment faltered in the duties that were required of them, when their work was performed they received their discharge, the United States Government denied the responsibility of fulfilling the contract that General Fremont made with them, and, as far as I know, to this day neither they nor their heirs have received the money or land warrants to which they were entitled.

Following is a Certificate signed by General Fremont and two letters from the acting Commissioner relating thereto:

> This will certify that that the following-named Delawares, James Swanuck, James Saghundai, James Conner, Delaware Charley, Wetowka, Crane, Solomon Everett, and Bob Skirkett were with me on an exploring expedition to California in the year 1846; that, being on the shore of Lake Hamath about the middle of May of that year, I received directions from the United States Government which changed the exploring expedition into one of a military character, to which the services of the above mentioned men were valuable and necessary To induce them to undertake the new service which would be required of them, I promised that I would endeavor to obtain for them the additional compensation of $2 a day each which I offered on the behalf of the United States. They accepted the offer and enlisted accordingly in the service of the United States. This engagement was afterwards renewed in July when the war broke out openly > in California, when they enlisted for the war. From that time (15th May) until about the 20th of November there were actually and efficiently engaged in the service, performing their duties with remarkable courage and fidelity, by which they entitled themselves to all the favors and considerations which has been granted or may be granted to the men who served in the Mexican War. Among the rest they are entitled to land warrants.

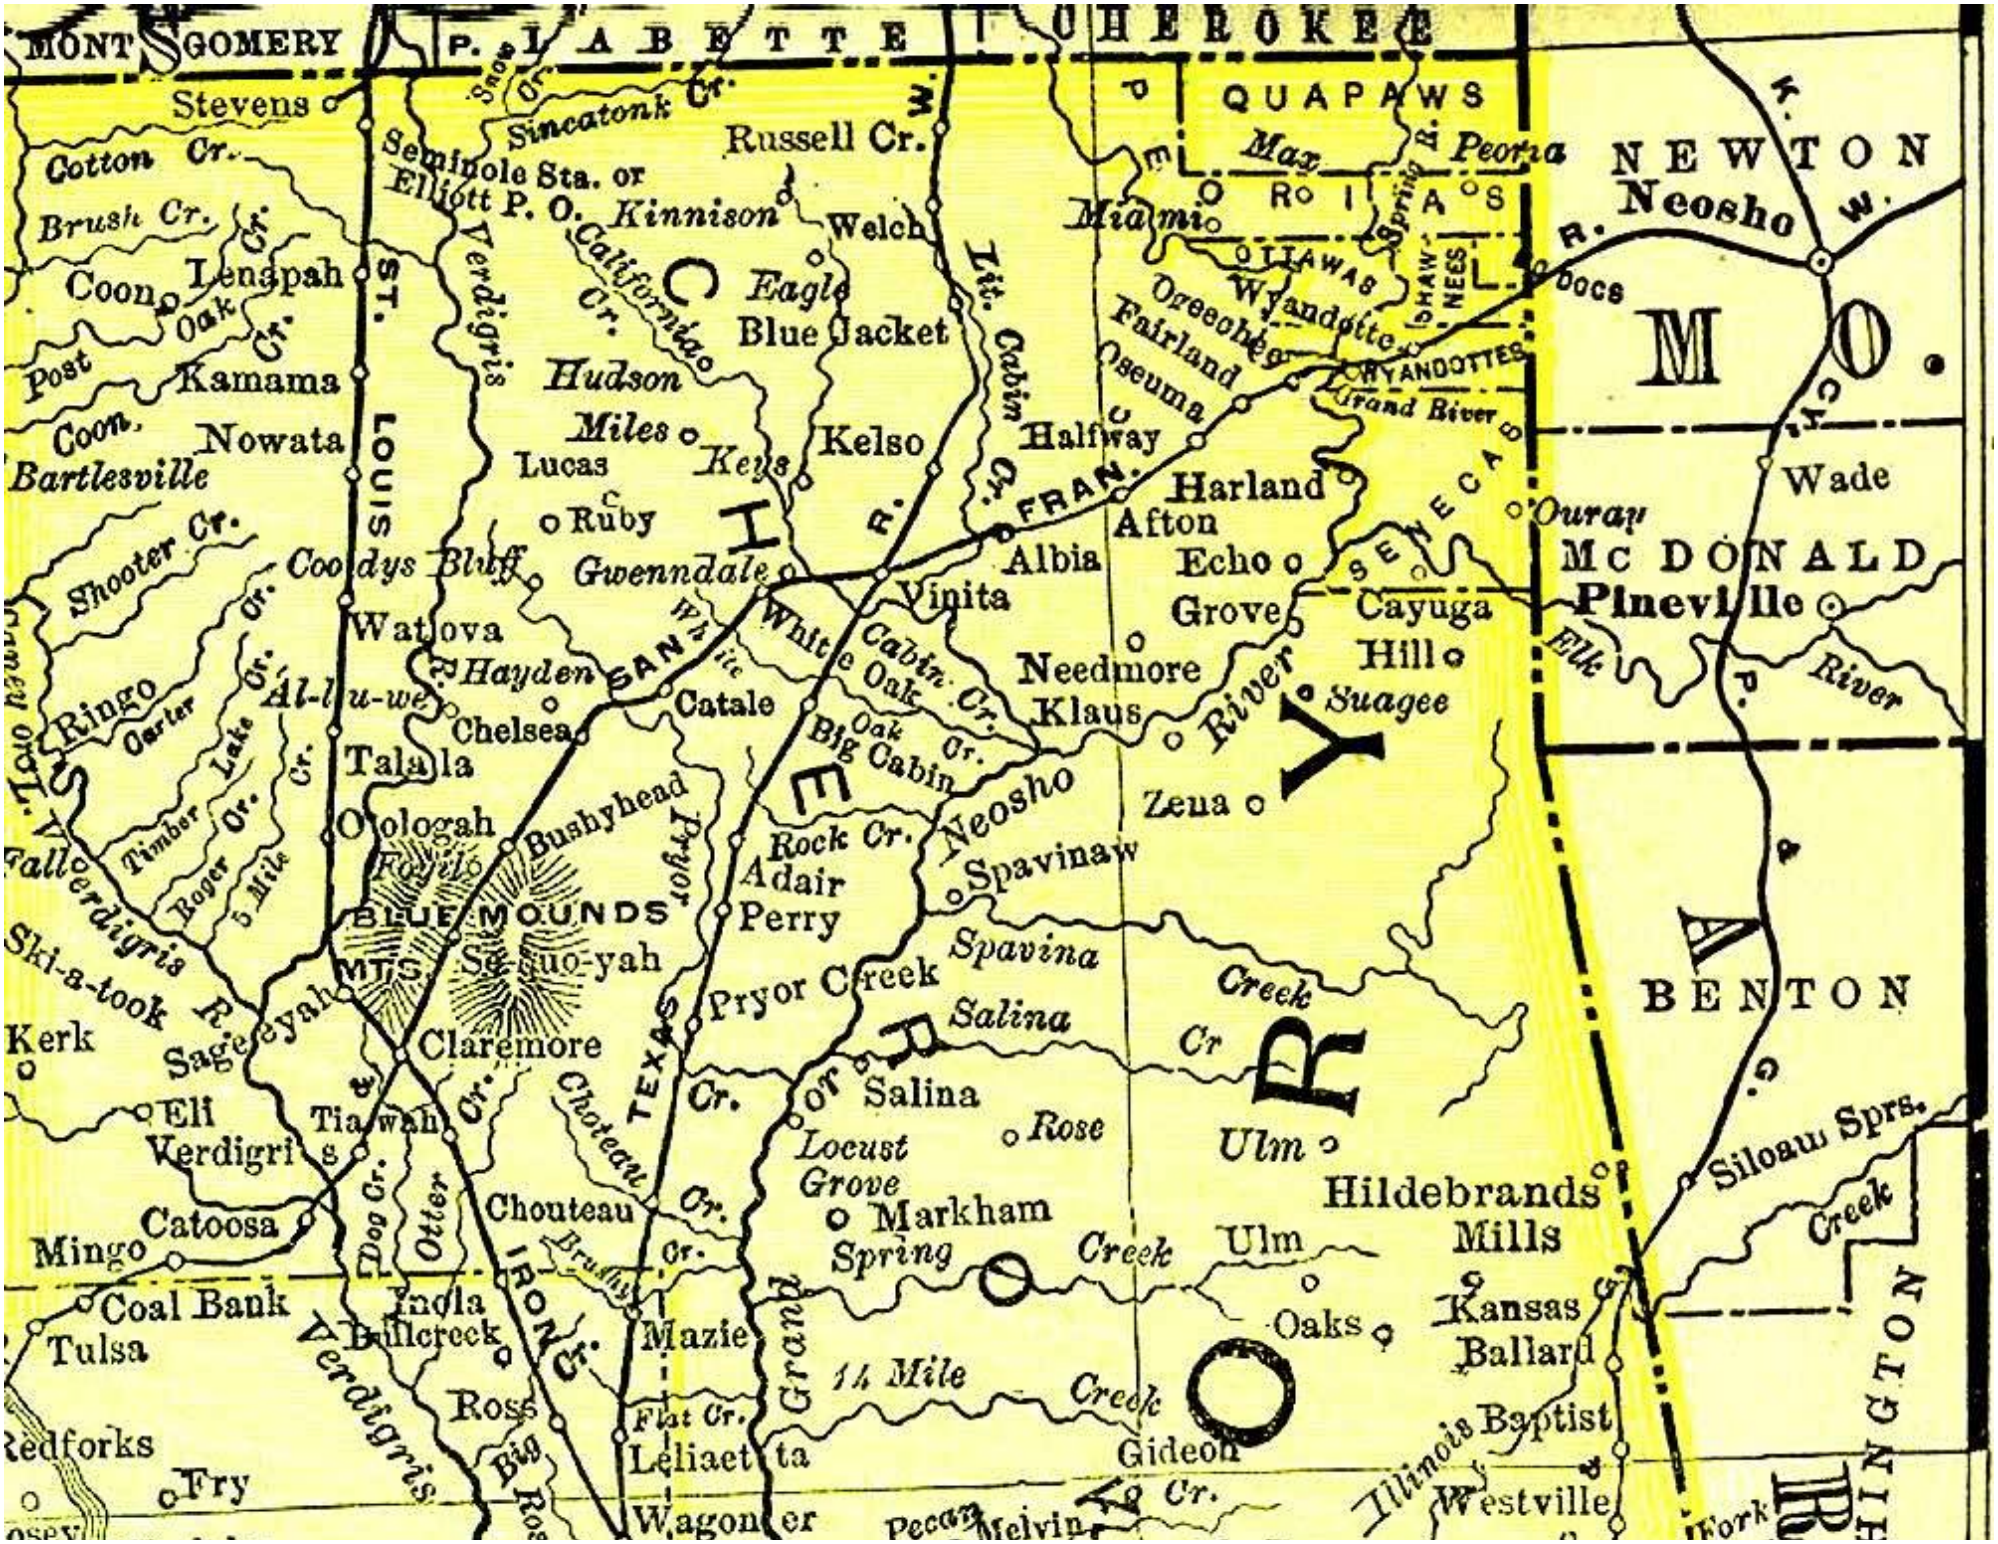
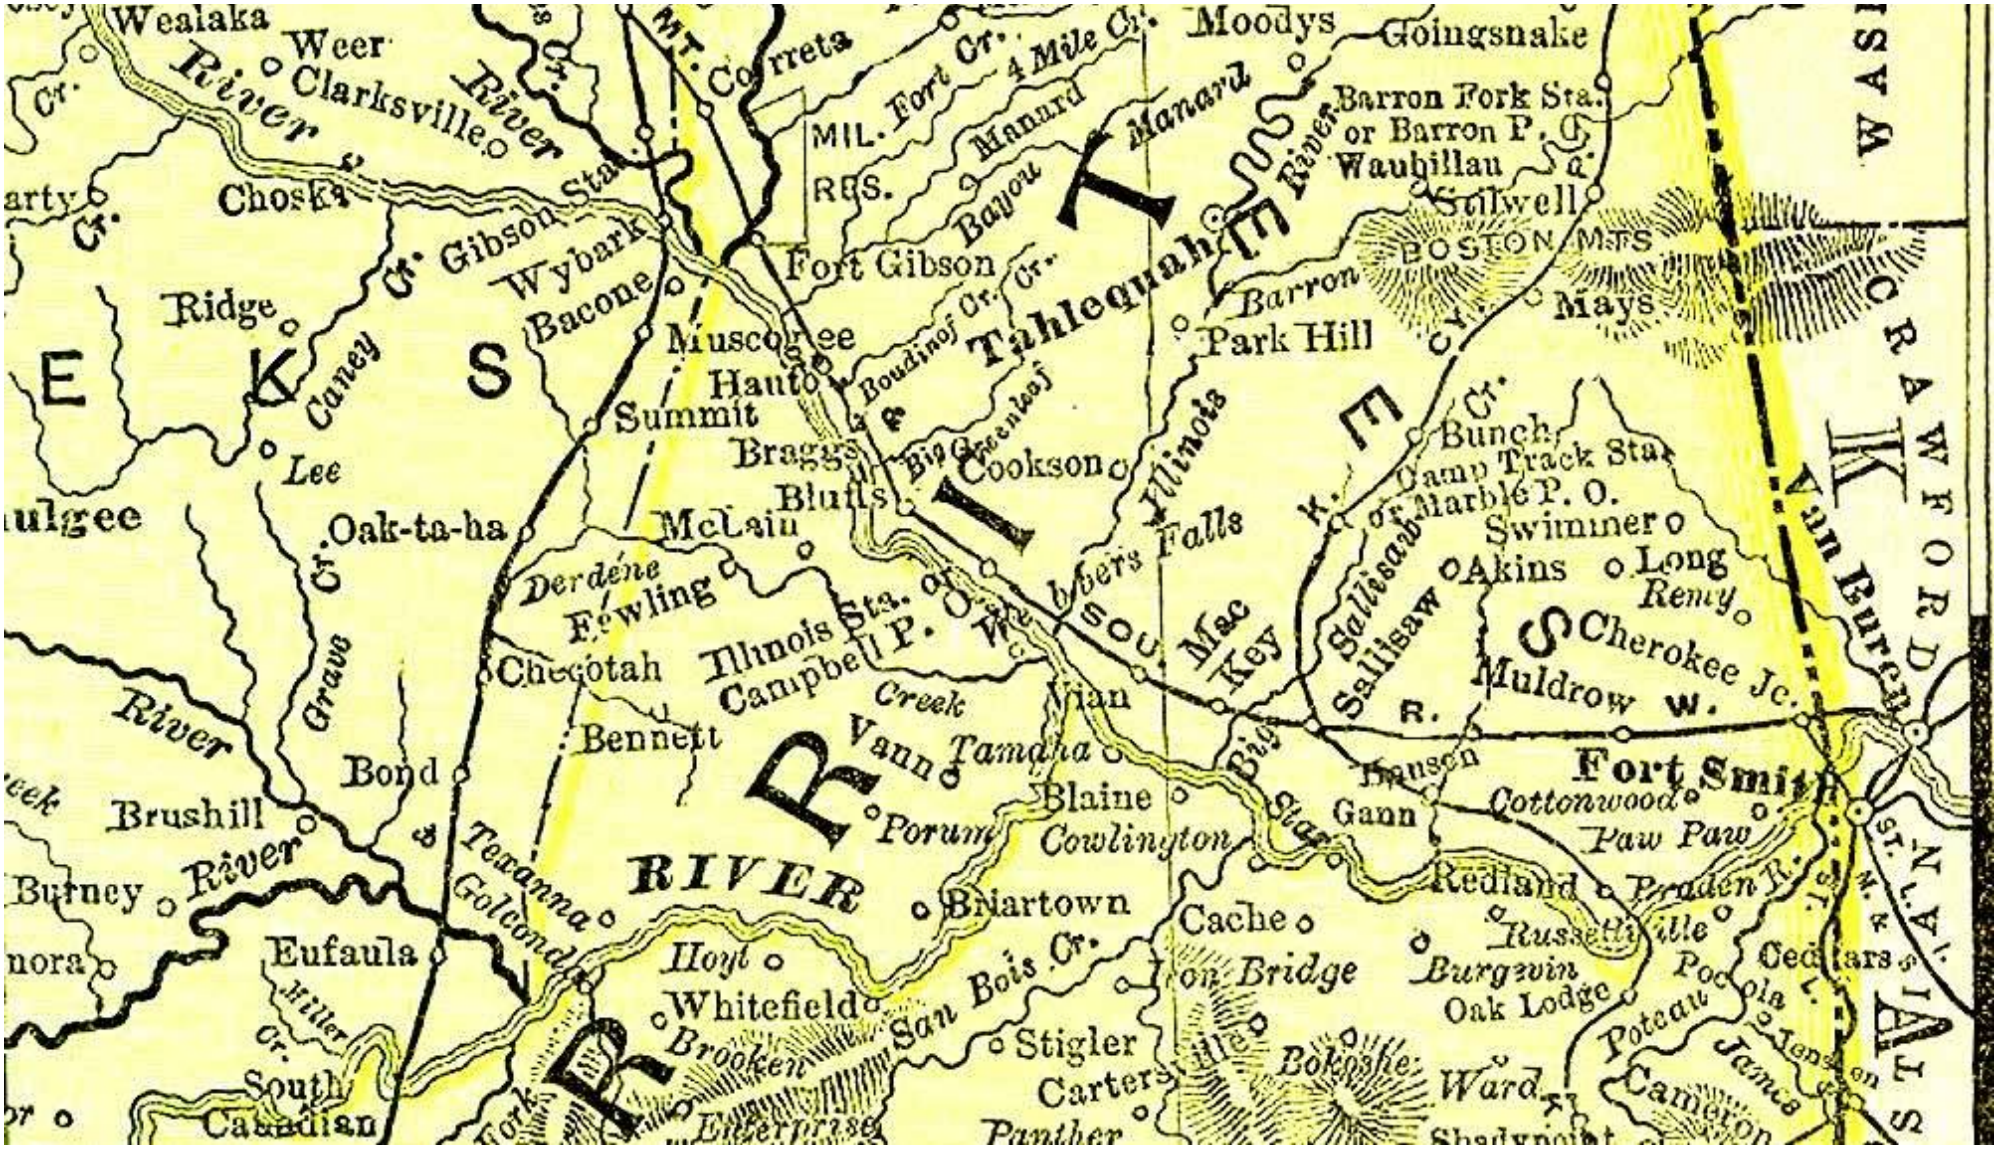
> J. C. FREMONT, NEW YORK, 56 West Ninth Street. March 21, 1857.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS
Washington, June 10, 1886. SIR: I am in receipt of a letter from the United States Indian agent at Quapaw Agency Ind. T., in which he states that Mr. George Washington, one of ten Delaware Indians who accompanied Gen. John C. Fremont in his California expedition in 1853-54, has in his possession an agreement in writing which reads as follows:

> WESTPORT, Mo., September 16, 1853 [p. 43] "I have this day made an agreement through Jim Secondi[ne] by which ten Delaware hunters, good men, are to accompany me on my journey to California and back to this country. The ten Delawares are to furnish their own animals and are each to be paid $2 per day. They are to provide themselves with good animals, and if any of their animals should die upon the road I am to pay them for the loss. They will of course be furnished by me with ammunition, and the saddles which are furnished at my own cost. "JOHN C. FREMONT."



The agent states that Mr. Washington has also a copy of a statement bearing the signature of ten delawares, detailing the amount due each for work and loss of animals, and requests to be informed as to whether or not the United States has ever assumed the said indebtedness incurred by General Fremont, and if so, how to proceed to procure the same for the claimants. I will thank you to inform me if the Government is in any way liable for the above indebtedness; and if so, what steps are necessary to be taken by the said Indians to secure the payment of their claims.
Very respectfully, A. B. UPSHAW, Acting Commissioner. The THIRD AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY.



DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS
Washington, July 9, 1886.
SIR: Referring to your letter, dated June 1, relative to ten Delaware Indians who claim that there are moneys due them for services rendered as scouts for General Fremont on his California expedition in 1853-54, I have to advise you that the honorable Secretary of War, be letter dated the 29th ultimo, states that the United States is not responsible for this indebtedness, as General Fremont conducted as his own expense an exploring party to the Pacific coast.

Very respectfully, A. B. UPSHAW, Acting Commissioner. J. V. SUMMERS, United States Indian Agent, Quapaw Agency, Ind. T

Not only did the Delaware Indians accompany Fremont in the California and Mexican war, but a number volunteered and served under Col. W. S. Harney for a term of six months from the 1st of January, 1846. When discharged they believed themselves entitled to compensation for forage and other extras, as they only received their monthly pay and subsist their own horses' they also believed that they were entitled to the proper quota of land due them as bounty. Their request was referred to the Secretary of War, but as far as I have not been able to ascertain whether or not they received satisfactory results. Some of the Delawares engaged themselves as trappers, hunters, and scouts for the , and penetrated the far northwest; and today some of their descendants are living in Idaho, Montana, and Oregon, affiliated with the Crows, Nez Perce, and other northwestern tribes. The number now living in the far northwest is estimated at 35. There are also some Delaware Indians at the present time in Canada. descendants of those who allied with the British interests, and some in the last few years have been found in the State of Mexico who speak the same language of the tribe, the principal body of Indians so reside in the Cherokee Nation.

(A few Extracts from Lewis Henry Morgan, The Indian Journals, 1859-62, Part IV [I have only read portions of Part IV of this journal and have not included many items duplicated elsewhere. Readers may find it worthwhile to consult this journal for further interest. At the present time, I do not know where it is is located. Baptist Delaware Mission, Kansas T. June 9, 1859
I left the Shawnee Mission (Friends) yesterday morning and reached here the same evening. I cross the Kansas River at the Delaware Crossing about twelve miles above its mouth; and was so fortunate in point of time as to be there on Payment Day, which is the annual gala day of the nation. As I had never seen a government payment of Indian annuities I was of course, of course, very glad that it happened as it did. After spending about four hours as a spectator of this curious scene, I went on to the Mission. Today Mr. Pratt and I went down again, and spent a few hours, the payment still going on, but so near completed that they were expected to finish tonight. We have just returned somewhat fatigued by the ride, as the day is warm. Some account of he payment must be given, although it is one of those scenes that should be seen to be appreciated. The amount paid was universally late, it being no less a sum than $78,000 to something less that 10000 people all told, men, women and children, and was paid in gold and silver. In January 1958 the Delawares numbered by census 988. At the present June census their number is but 941. These figures were given me by Mr. Ford, a merchant of Lawrence, who stops here and is looking after the accounts with the Delawares. I supposed that the nation was not diminishing, but rather on the increase.

"Payment Day" The place of payment was centrally located but a most inconvenient place in itself, as it was upon a side gill with very rough ground all around it. The only recommendation was eight or ten houses which made up the settlement, and furnished shelter for the goods of the traders , who are inseparable from all payments. The number present was large, just as many of the Delawares as could possibly leave their homes, with a single one behind in some cases to watch the premises. About were present and some Shawnee from the opposite side and perhaps 100 white people, including traders and spectators. I arrived at 10 A.M. and the paying out commenced about 1 P.M.

The Indian women were all dressed out in their best attire, as this is the only occasion that ever brings them together as a people. We saw the fruits of the sales of previous years, and some of the present, in advance a few hours of the time of payment, as the traders are eager to commence their work at once. In the first place the Delaware women have usually dropped the Indian skirt, and put on the long dress of the white female. I thought I saw a skirt upon an elderly woman, although it was covered up by a gown. Their dresses are of all colors, and some of them rich materials. S few were dressed in colored muslin [p.56] with silk shawls and looked quite becomingly, but the most o0f them were, strange to say, dressed in silk gowns, some of which were brocade patterns of rich brocade silk, some were black, these looked the best. Some were crimson and black, some fiery plaid; the most of them were in bright colors. Over these they wore bright shawls of every color and shade, most of them fringed. They were expensive silk shawls of good materials. Some of them had on two shawls, and some a third arranged as a neck drape. They appeared to have put on all they had, to show it, the quantity of dress being of more importance in their sight than its style, or quality.

Of course their appearance as a whole was fantastic and ludicrous. The dresses were made without taste from scant patterns, and worn without hoops or petticoats, thus giving to the skirt and appearance not to be compared for a moment with the Indian female skirt of cloth and blanket of the same, but these would be too warm fro Kansas. I was glad to see the gown upon them, as it is a move in the right direction. [Who the hell is he to make such a judgment! Editor] At home they may wear the Indian gown, but I doubt it. The Shawnee women, all that I saw, wore the gown. On their heads they a silk handkerchief universally. I did not see a bonnet among them.

The color of the Indian women is quite uniform, and is light. It shows that he white blood infused into them in the East has been well diffused throughout. The next cross with the white will make a pretty white child, [I guess there weren't any pretty Delaware children?], of which I saw a few and but a few specimens, as the Delawares are quite vigorous against intermarriage with the whites, and also against unlawful intercourse. As a whole, the expression on the face of the women was pleasant and healthy,. They look strong, literally cleanly and healthy, although I am told by Mr. Ford [the Lawrence merchant, that great Kansas medical authority] that syphilis among their women to an alarming extent. Their faces would not lead to such a suspicion.

The men were more fantastically dressed than the women, and did not appear half as well. Their fancy dresses' were cheap and absurd, rendering their general appearance ridiculous. There were many good faces among them, and also well dressed Indians who speak our language and have the manners and address of gentlemen [and are a credit to their race, I am sure!] Some of the old men and some of the young men had on colored calico frocks of the most gaudy colors. Many had vermilion on their faces, thus giving them a low appearance, and I saw a few girls with spots of it in their cheeks. One man I saw with a silver ornament in his nose, which covered part of his mouth. Many of the men wore leggings with a wide side projection, ornamented, and the breech cloth, over which they wore a vest or shirt, and perhaps one of the frock coats of calico above named, with head bands of bead work over the shoulder and meeting in a large bead work pocket on the right hand side. As a body I should think the men inferior to the women.

The Delawares have a million and upwards in the national treasury at five per cent interest. Their regular annuity if $50,000. The present is a part of two payments, I understand. and is larger than usual. There were several stores full of goods, and a great many stands out in the open air with te protectin of canvas. The great show in all was in saddles and bridles, of which I presume I saw saddles alone 150; the price ranges from $15 to 50 dollars, the ordinary being $22 to $25, They are the Mexican saddle, made at Westport, Mo., and the kind usually used in Kansas and this part of the west. It has a high pommel, wooden stirrups usually, which are easier than metal for long journeys, and a [p. 57] well stuffed and quilted seat, with a high rear plate. They are far superior to our eastern saddle for riding.

The assortment of goods was creditable in the good sense of the Delawares, as the supply was adapted by the demand. Grains of all kinds, tin wares of all kinds and at reasonable prices, in fact they could not make anything on this article, wash tubs and wash boards, coffee mills and household articles, calico and muslin goods. The chief take in this was the jewelry of which large and flashy assortments were exhibited, some of it looking extremely well; salt pork, flour and bacon were also offered. The trading [in the last name articles, presumably] was pretty much a failure, the reason being that Wyandotte and Kansas City [stock and commodity markets] are within easy reach, where they can buy cheaper and at their convenience, The trader's chance lies in the weakness of the Indian before temptation, and his slight regard for money, As payment was delayed more than a day beyond the time, I noticed some of the Indians commenced moving up to book account in advance, which the traders flavored. I saw two of them this afternoon arranging [?] payment in the Indian tents, and getting it, and I have no doubt doubling the amount in footing it up, or increasing it largely, They have to pay a trader's license of $25 to the agent, and unless they speculate in some way, they must make a failure on their sales.

I saw no whiskey nor ardent spirits of any kind, and consequently no drunkenness or quarrelling. After it is all over tonight and the payment is over, and the government strikes its tent and moves off with the wagon marked U. S. and the small file of soldiers sent to protect the specie, the whiskey will show itself, and the pockets of the remaining Indians who have any money will be picked There were more white men around today than looked well for the Indian women.

"Delaware Baptist Mission School" (f/n86)

This school, under the supervision of Rev. John G. Pratt, (f/n/87) a matron, Mrs. Muse, a teacher, Miss Morse, (f/n88) is in a very flourishing condition and superior to any that I have seen in the territory. It has accommodations for 78 Indian scholars as boarders and lodgers. The number as term was 64, the number the present term is about 50, as they have held back for the payment, and will soon come in now.

The buildings consist of a two and a half farm house large on the ground, designed for the sleeping and clothing rooms of the school; another of the same size with a wing for a kitchen , designed for the residence of the superintendent and teachers, and is the eating and cooking place for all. (f/n89) Also a large school house with folding doors in the center so as to separate the boys and girls although as yet hey are all together. There are numerous outbuildings, as a farm is carried on in connection with the school of about two hundred acres. The buildings were erected a few years ago with school money belonging to the Delawares, and is supported with funds in the hands of the government reserved for that purpose. [p. 61] y

The children are clothed, boarded and taught by the Mission, and the government allows &75 per annum per scholar. They have two terms of five months each, and the children are kept in school about seven hours per day. They study reading. writing, and spelling, geography, arithmetic, with blackboard exercises. The scholars are mostly young , those now at school ranging from 6 to 18 years. They look well and healthy and free from sore eyes, and are decently and comfortably clad. This is the true system of Indian education [that is one one to look at it, I suppose], beyond a doubt, and this school is in far the best condition of any I have ever seen. We see here New England cleanliness, system and good management. I did not visit the Mission School of the Methodists Southern Board among the Shawnees. It is a large and flourishing school, I believe, but complaints are made of the principal of unfairness, or avarice, etc. He has made himself rich and also the mission, they having secured by treaty between 2000 acres of land, and at the same time he was active to prevent Friend Harvey from selling his Mission farm of 200 acres, evidently desiring to break up the Friends Mission.

Mr. Pratt commenced his missionary life 22 years ago with his present wife then 20 years of age. He was accepted as a missionary to Burma, but was requested to fill temporarily an Indian Mission then vacant among the Stockbridges near Fort Leavenworth, and went from there to the Shawnee Baptist Mission now closed, and from there to this mission about 12 years ago. His wife is still young looking. (She was forty-five at the time, ed.) and must have been beautiful as a girl. They are very worthy, refined and agreeable, and my short stay with them has been very pleasant indeed. Mr. Pratt is a well educated and superior man.

The Friends Shawnee Mission has one a good work among the Shawnees, but was never, I fancy, a very large school. There are but two boys there at present, but no doubt they have done as much good in proportion to the means employed as any other missionaries. The Friends are well adapted to gain the confidence of the Indian.

"Religious System"

The Delawares believe in a Great Spirit, and in an Evil Spirit. The also believe in the immortality of the soul, and they all went to heaven. They have one religious festival at which the Gum-win Dance is performed. This is the great religious dance . This is held once a year every fall, after the corn harvest is gathered. The festival lasts seven days. At this festival they have a number of old dances, which are still maintained among the Delawares. This festival is called the Gum-win, from the dance. This is held for the purpose of returning thanks to the Great Spirit. They have a feast. Men, about 13, go out beforehand to hunt, and get game for the feast, particularly the deer. There is a class of persons whose business is to appoint the time for holding this council, to prepare the feast, and supervise the business of the festival. They are both men and women, but Lemuel [Ketchum] could not give me the name by which they are distinguished.

"Religious System of the Delawares" (f/n 91)William Adams, Del

The Delawares believe in a Great and an Evil Spirit. They also believe in a number of subordinate spirits, some of whom are waiting or ministering spirits of the Good and some of the Evil One. Among the waitng spirits of the former are the following.

1. Kaka-sha-ha-no-has, the Spirit of the Whirlwind. He is represented as having the form of a man and is called Grand Father.
2. O-we-ya-la-so, the Spirit of the Wind. He is represented as having the form of a man., with long streaming hair, so long it sometimes get tangled in the trees as he rides along. He is called Grand Father.
3. Pate-hoc-hoo-weh, the Spirit of Thunder. He is represented as having the form of a bird, an Eagle, called Grand Father.
4. Wa-o-tun-oo-wase, the Spirit of Water She is represented as having the hands of a woman, and the body, but ending in a fish tail.
5. Has-gueme, the Spirit of Corn. She is represented as having the form of a woman, and is called our Mother. She can foretell about the coming crop. When she rises with her hair combed smooth and shining and seen in this condition, it is a favorable omen and indicates an abundant crop., or a failure of the harvest.
6. Wa-ma-a-take-a-nese, the Boy Spirit. He is represented as a little boy, with a bow and arrow, and as a constant friend of the Indian. He is everywhere and always at hand in the most impossible places, ready to assist us in our trials. He is a servant of the Great Spirit.

7. Ma-mun-sa-ase, the Spirit of War. He is represented as having the firm of a panther, with a very long tail. He can foretell [p. 63] war about to arise, who will fight, and who succeed. The meteoric stones are dropped by him. and the war will arise in the direction from which the meteor comes, and go in the direction it goes. He is under the control of the Great Spirit, as are all good spirits.

The Great Spirit has the form of a man (name elsewhere). The Evil Spirit has the form of a man with one leg, the leg of an ox. The tradition is that the Evil Spirit was created by the good and was originally good, but he originated a contention among the interior spirits which resulted in a division and taking of sides. In the midst of this contention they all came into the presence of the Great Spirit, who seized the Evil One and as a mark of his disapprobation and as a punishment, he wrenched off one of his legs and placed in the room [sic] of that of an ox, that he might ever afterwards be known and recognized at once as an evil spirit, and then sent down to the earth with the evil spirits who followed him.

Heaven they consider to be immediately over their heads and a place in which they have a bodily form. It is a journey of 12 days from earth to Heaven after death. They believe as do the Iroquois, that the sould does not leave the body finally at death. but that it revisits the body a few days before it takes it final departure. For this reason, as Adams says, they bury on scaffolds in trees, and in a sitting position near the surface of the earth. Last year he made a coffin for an Indian and his friends made him bore a hole in the head of the coffin, the object of which being to allow the spirit free egress and regress to and from the body.

Heaven is a place of rest. They follow up the path, and the first stopping place is a place where they find a supply of vermilion or red paint. They cannot pass this place without painting their faces. If they have been accustomed to paint on earth, the paint will really adhere, unless they have been very wicked, and then they pass on without delay. But if not used to painting, or if they have been very wicked, the paint will not adhere, and thus they are detained at this place until the Evil Spirit removes them to a place of punishment.

They say there are seven parts of good and evil. If the deceased has four of the good in his favor, or more, he is sure to pass on to heaven, but if there [are] four pr more bad, he cannot go to heaven but must be placed in in a place of misery and unhappiness where he is punished accordingly to his evil deeds, If he was accustomed to paint, it will be more apt to stick, and that is all that is claimed for this meritorious act. There is a second stopping place on the way where the selfish and covetous are surrounded and burned uin the article [on which] they set their store upon earth, and thus are kept out of heaven. They have a belief that mosquitoes sprang up out of the souls of those who were punished by the evil spirit, the wreck, or fragments into which they were cut up were turned into mosquitoes and such evil creatures.

Bad spirits are believed to pass by about day break and good spirits are believed to pass along about dark. For this reason boys are often sent to bed without supper, that they may commute with or be visited by good spirits, the fasting state being thought to be favorable to such communion, and for the same reason are often compelled to get up before day break that the evil spirits may bot obtain any wicked influence upon them.

I am told that the Shawnee Female Great Spirit is in reality the moon, and is worshipped as our Grand Mother or something like that sort; Isaac Johnny Cake who [p. 64] mentioned this [to] me also said that the Great Spirit of the Delawares was represented and believed to be a brother of the Sun, and that the Moon was the Grand Mother of the Great Spirit; and young Toucy, the Stockbridge, says that there is some evidence of a [?] in of the sun in worship of several of the Indian races, including his own. The Iroquois return thanks to the sun for heating the earth and to the moon for cooling it, but this does not show a sun worship or anything like it. William Adams is to correspond with me on the religious system of the Delawares, and I hope to find out something definite about it.

"Gum-mween"

This festival or annual worship of the Delawares as explained by William Adams and of which he is to write to me more fully, is quite interesting. They believe unless they observe it once a year their crops will fail, and they will lose the favor of the Great Spirit. It lasts 6 days. It may be repeated by another person or family for a second 6 days, and so on until the feelings are satisfied. It has been known to last a month. The meeting is called by one of a certain class, who I presume correspond with the Keepers of the Faith of the Iroquois. They are called A-la-pa-cte, meaning Dreamers. The people meet in a large house erected for this worship and used for nothing else. The build two council fires in the house, and the people assemble by tribes, the Turtles by themselves, the Wolves by themselves, and the Turks [Turkeys] by themselves. They use belts of wampum and have many ceremonies. It would seem that this council or religious meeting was called by some one person. The door of the house of worship must open to the east.

When they are assembled by two singers [?] sit down to two dried and rolled up deer skins with sticks in their hands to beat time., The leader, who is stationed on the right hand side of the door, gets up and shaking a turtle shell rattle, comes in extemporizing verses which are adapted to the set tune of his choosing, to relate his dream. As he relates his dream in music, he dances, they sing [at] the same time, and all who enter the dance, dance the religious dance which altogether is called Gum-mween. This is repeated day by day for six days. But the leaders change. When one has told his dream, he hands his rattle to the next one, who in like singing relates his dream in words of his own making, but sung in an old well known tune of his choosing. . . .

Naunotetauxien - A Signer of the 1829 Supplementary Treaty with the Untied States at St. Mary's, Ohio as a Chief or Warrior of the Delaware Nation. (Delaware Treaties)

Nemacolin - From the article "Chief Nemacolin--A Delaware Indian Headman" by Alma Irene King-Finney, contributed by Mrs. Donnie Huckaby Donniehuck@aol.com , wife of Sidney Don Huckaby 6th great-grandson of Chief Checochinican.

> After his father [Checkoconnicon] became old, Nemacolin became Chief of 160 warriors (not including women and children) and he moved his tribe from Uniontown area to Fort Redstone, PA (now known as Brownsville, PA). It was during this time that the Virginia Government asked Thomas Cresap to blaze a trail through the mountains from Cumberland, MD to Fort Pitt (now Pittsburgh, PA). This was to help the westward movement of the Ohio Company to the Ohio River and the State of Ohio for development of white communities. In 1751 Thomas Cresap asked his friend Nemacolin to help him in blazing this trail. He knew that Nemacolin would know the easiest way over the mountains, Nemacolin and his sons, Lonacona and William proceeded to Oldtown, MD, to help Cresap map out the old Indian trail leading to Ft. Redstone, PA. on the Monongahela River. This trail became known as Nemacolin's Path and then the National Road (Rt. 40) in 1806. When Thomas had successfully mapped out the trail, he left Nemacolin in Ft. Redstone to travel back to his home in Oldtown, MD. Nemacolin's son Lonacona (born before 1738 in Ft. Redstone) asked permission from his father to return to Maryland, as he had become good friends with Daniel Cresap, Thomas' oldest son, and wished to live near him in Rawlings, MD. Nemacolin gave his permission, and Lonacona took his Delaware wife and family back with Daniel. Thomas Cresap had named Lonacona, George Washington Cresap to protect him from white violence. The town of Lonaconing, MD - south of Frostburg, MD - was named for Lonacona. Georges Creek was also named for him. Lonacona died around 1790 in the home of his friend Dan, and he is buried in the Cresap Cemetery in Rawlings, MD. Lonacona's daughter Teresa married William Workman of Mt. Savage, MD. Later, William moved his family to Kerens, WV.

Neolegan - In 1766, he was A Munsee chief of the Minisink. He was baptized on 12 May 1774. (Lenape Nation on the Web)

Neshapanacumin - English name Charles Journeycake. A Signer as a Delegate of the Delaware to the 6 May 1854 Treaty between the United States and the Delaware at Washington. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 618)

Neshepanaumin - The same name as Neshapanacumin, English name Charles Journeycake. One of "some prominent men among the Delaware Indians in what is now Leavenworth County [KS] [in 1844]." (Remsburg*)

Netahopuna - A Signer of the 3 October 1818 Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as a Chief or Warrior of the Delaware Nation. (Delaware Treaties, Vol. II, p. 171)

Netawatwees - Translation Skilled Advisor, English name Newcomer, and sometimes called "King." He was said to have been born in 1678 in Pennsylvania. In 1828 Netawatwees signed the Treaty of Conestoga. He became Chief of the Unami after the death of Sasoonan (whom see) and keeper of the wampum and other records. He died in Pittsburgh on 31 October 1776 and was succeeded by Captain White Eyes. (Lenape Nation on the Web) Netawatwees united several scattered Delaware groups in Ohio in the mid-1800s. He lived at Saukink (Beaver, Pennsylvania) and later at Newcomerstown (Tuscarawas County, Ohio). He probably succeeded Shingas as Delaware Head Chief by 1757 and was replaced by White Eyes, who was the Head War Chief. [Note the different versions of succession in these two accounts.] He was succeeded as Turtle Chief by his grandson (his son's son) Gelelemend (Killbuck) (Smithsonian*, 223) He was keeper of the wampum for the Unami. [Some equate the Turtle with the Unami. (Cranor, Kik-Tha-Whe-Nund), p. 2)

Newcomer - English name for Netawatwees. See entry just above.

Ninsi - English name John. A Muncie Lenape born about 1705. In 1758 he established a village at Wyalusing. At first he urged his people to keep the ancient Lenape ways and reject the White Man's culture. Later he was converted and baptized in 1765. He conducted the Moravian Lenape to Philadelphia for safety. (Lenape Nation on the Web)

Nonondoquomon/Nonondoquomon/Noondoquon - He may be the same person as Non-on-da-gon. A Signer of the 26 October 1832 Treaty between the United States and the Delaware and Shawnee at Castor Hill, St. Louis County, Missouri as a Chief, Warrior, or Councilor. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 372) and a Delegate to the 8 November 1833 treaty between several tribes at Fort Leavenworth [Kansas]. (Barry, The Beginning of the West, p. 251). He died 11 November 1842 on the Kansas Delaware Reserve. (Ibid., p. 464)

Nutimus - English name Turkey. He was noted in 1734 as a good blacksmith and a famous Indian doctor from New Jersey. He was Chief of the Lenape on the Forks. Nutimus met with James Logan (whom see) in 1735 and was shown a copy of the false deed wherein the Lenape had sold land to William Penn. This was the infamous Walking Purchase. As a result of the deed, Nutimus and his people were forced to move to the Susquehanna. In 1756 he met with Sir William Johnson who removed the "petticoat" and placed a hatchet in the hands of the Lenape to use against the French. (Lenape Nation on the Web)

O

Ockanickon - English name Turtle. A famed and friendly Indian, "King Ockanickon," was a party to the deed for lands "from Rankokus to the Falls of Delaware," and eventually found his resting place in the Friends burial ground at Burlington. In 1682, as an old man on his death bed, he named his brother's son, Jakursoe, as his successor. (Lenape Nation on the Web)

Onas - Along with his brother Captain Pipe (whom see), he signed a treaty in 1765. (Lenape Nation on the Web)

One Who Follows - Lenape name, Nanawaland, also spelled Nanawalend. He served as a Captain with the American Captain Montour during the American Revolution from 15 June 1780 until 31 October 1781. [Source to be added. Ed.]

One Who is Held in Mind - Delaware name, Caylaylamind , also Kelelemend. He was a Private in the American Captain Montour's Company during the American Revolution from 15 June 1780 to 31 October 1781. *****

Orecton - One of the Delaware chiefs who "owned" land in Eastern Pennsylvania and who met with William Penn's emissary in 1682. (Lenape Nations on the Web)

Owechela - He was one of the chiefs who on 26 July 1709 met with Pennsylvania Governor Gookin at Philadelphia. At that time he lived at Paxtang (present Harrisburg). (Lenape Nation on the Web)

Owl, Sally - Lenape name, Lakepeshequa - *See the Biographies for details.

Pat(t)erson, Captain - A Signer of the 3 October 1818 Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as the Second Chief of the Delaware Nation. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 305 and a Delaware Signer of the 1829 Supplementary Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as the Second Chief of the Delaware Nation. (Delaware Treaties). He succeeded Captain William Anderson as the Chief of the Delaware Nation in 1835 and remained the chief until 1848, when he was replaced by Nakomin. (Undocumented)

Patterson, William -

To Capt William Wells

White River March 30. 1805 We send to you our Nephew William Patterson to Counsell with you, we wish that you will listen to what he says concerning of Governor Harrisons purchasing a large Tract of Land, we know nothing of it, we have not in our power to sell land and more than that it is contrary to the articles of the Treaty of Greenville therefore we send to you the writing the Governor gave us, when he gave it to us, he told us that it wan an instrument of writing to keep peace and friendship among us- therefore we wish that you will see into it and let the President our Father know that the purchase is unlegal, and that he may take such measures as will prevent it from being settled, this is all, but you will listen to what Patterson says, as we cannot have all wrote what we wish to say, this is all at present but remain your uncles.

Pipe, Captain - Lenape name thought to be Tahungeeccoppi. In 1773 he succeeded his uncle, Wolf Chief Custaloga (or Pakanke) probably at Kuskuskies (New Castle, Pennsylvania). His village was probably later at Tuscarawas (near Bolivar, Ohio). Because his uncle, Custaloga was of the Turkey band, Captain Pipe was probably also a member of that group. He was probably succeeded by Shingas. According to Lenape Nation on the Web, in 1764 Captain Pipe was a hereditary sachem and head chief of the Munsee. That source says that during the American Revolution, he was pro-British. Later in his life he was a friend of American settlers. Captain Pipe was a leading participant in the execution of Colonel Crawford, the commander of the militia who murdered ninety Delaware at the Moravian mission. Captain Pipe built a cabin at Mohican Johnstown where he lived for several years. He was described as "humane, fine looking, dignified, [and] courteous." (Tregillis*) He was a Signer of the Treaty of 17 September 1778 with the United States in Pennsylvania as a Chief man,* a Signer of the 9 January 1789 Treaty with the United States at Fort Harmar on the Muskingum in Northwest Territory. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 22, a Signer of the Treaty of Greenville, Ohio [but need proof of this]. About 1802-1803 he and Jerome and other Delaware went to the site of Mohican Johnstown near present Jeromeville [State?] He was a Signer of the 22 July 1814 Treaty with the United States at Greenville, Ohio as a Head Man, Chief, or Warrior of the Delaware Tribe. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 106). He received along with sixteen others, an equal share of a three-mile square on the Sandusky under Article 19 of the Treaty of 29 September 1817 at the e Rapids Rapids of the Miami of Lake Erie River in Ohio. (Ibid., p. 154.) He was also a Signer of that treaty as a Sachem, Chief, or Warrior. (Ibid., p. 152), a Signer of the 3 October 1818 Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as a Chief or Warrior of the Delaware Nation. (Ibid., p. 171.), a

Signer of the 1829 Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as a Chief of the Delaware Band on the Sandusky River, and, a Signer of the 1829 Supplementary Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as a Chief or Warrior of the Delaware Nation. (Ibid., p.*) In the fall of 1829, Captain Pipe, William Monture, Isaac Hill, and Solomon Journeycake left the Pipestone Reserve for Kansas with a party of about thirty Delaware. (Pratt)

Pipe, Eli - A Signer of the Treaty with the United States at St. Mary's, Ohio as a Chief of the Delaware Band on the Sandusky River. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II)

Poquas - The Delaware wife of trader William Gillis. (Gillis Probate Papers)

Pratt, Reverend John Gill - In 1837 John Gill Pratt located on Section 10, in Township 11, Range 23, about twelve miles west of Wyandotte City. He was a missionary teacher who in 1844 was ordained a Baptist minister. Rev. Pratt established a Baptist mission among the Delaware Indians. He published several hymn books in the Delaware language, one of which was printed at the Wyandotte Herald office. President Abraham Lincoln appointed Reverend Pratt as the Delaware Indian Agent. One of his sons married a daughter of Charles Journeycake, a well-known Delaware chief. His eldest daughter married Colonel Samuel Black, of Leavenworth. When the Baptist Mission was abandoned after the 1844 Kansas River Flood, Pratt hauled its logs to a new mission site on higher ground 3 1/2 miles to the northwest. He was a Delaware Agent in Kansas and the signer of the 1866 Treaty for the Delaware Agency, Kansas. As the Delaware agent, Rev. Pratt helped move the tribe to Indian Territory (Oklahoma) in 1867 and 1868. In 1890, he was the oldest citizen in Wyandotte County. (History of Wyandotte County, pp. 147-148; Farley* pp. 4, 15) See the Pratt Collection for a good description of his work and the disposition of his papers.

Puckconsittond - A Munsee or Delaware Signer of the 4 July 1805 Treaty with the United States at Fort Industry on the Miami of the Lake in Ohio as a Sachem, Chief, or Warrior. (Kappler, Treaties, Vol. II, p. 78)

He had a son Captain Bull. (Lenape Nation on the Web) Teedyuscung died about 1763.

(William M. Fowler, Jr., The French and Indian War and the Struggle for North America, 1754-1763) "Aging, overweight and reputed to drink too much, Teedyuscung remained one of the most remarkable men of eighteenth-century America. (p. 158) No eastern tribe suffered more from European oppression than the Delaware; nor did they escape persecution from their northern neighbors, the Iroquois, who called the Delaware "women" and lusted after their lands. Caught between their own kin and the invading Europeans. the Delaware were pushed constantly about. Teedyuscung experienced all this turmoil. Born near present-day Trenton, New Jersey, he and his family were pushed west by the expanding settlements. They finally settled at the forks of the Delaware River, where his father led the village of Pocopoco. Neat that village Teedyuscung witnessed one of the most outrageous Indian land swindles in American history: the Delaware Walking Purchase." (p. 159) Although he styled himself "king of the Delaware," Teedyuscung had no ancestral right to leadership. His skill was in his ability to balance among Delaware, Iroquois, French, and English. Amid a people who admired oratory, Teedyuscung was a star. Like Pitt in Parliament, he could spellbind an audience with his eloquence, passion, wit, and sarcasm. In 1750 Teedyuscung delivered himself and his family to be baptized at the Moravian Christian mission at Gnadenhutten. A few years later he made another political shift to broaden his base of friends. He allied himself with the Iroquois. As the French made their move into the Ohio valley, Teedyuscung sidled up to them as well. In the violent days following Braddock's defeat, he led his people to war against the British, and for several months Teedyuscung and his warriors ravaged the Pennsylvania frontier. [Which after all was their Homeland!] (p. 160) On April 19, 1763. he and his wife burned to death when their cabin [perhaps in the Wyoming Valley of Pennsylvania] was engulfed in a fire of suspicious origin." TREATY 1832 - 1955

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE SHAWNEE AND THE DELAWARE, 26 OCTOBER 1832, CASTOR HILL, ST. LOUIS COUNTY, MISSOURI

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 330-337.)

Oct. 26, 1832. 7 Stat., 397. Proclamation, Feb. 12, 1833)
Articles of a treaty made and entered into at Castor Hill, in the county of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, this twenty-sixth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, between William Clark, Frank J. Allen and Nathan Kouns, Commissioners on the part of the United States, of the one part, and the Chiefs, Warriors and Counsellors of the Shawanoes and Delawares, late of Girardeau, in behalf of their respective bands, of the other part.

Whereas parts of the Shawanoe and Delaware nations of Indians did settle on lands near the town of Cape Girardeau, under a permission from the Spanish Government given to said Shawanoes and Delawares by the Baron Carondelet, dated the fourth day of January one thousand seven hundred and ninety three, on which lands the Delawares resided until the year one thousand seven hundred and fifteen, at which period, from various causes, it became necessary for them to remove, leaving their fields and improvements: And whereas, lands have been assigned to the said Tribes by Treaties, viz: with the Shawanoes of the seventh November one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five, and with the Delawares of the twenty-fourth September one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine in which the last named Treaty no compensation was made to the Delawares late of Cape Girardeau, for their improvements or for their loss of stock, &c. and it being the desire of the United States to indemnify the said Delawares for all losses and injuries by them sustained in consequence of such removal, the following articles have been agreed upon by the contracting parties.

ARTICLE I.
The Delawares and Shawanoes late of Cape Girardeau, hereby cede and relinquish to the United States all their lands within the State of Missouri, and also all claims which they may have against the United States for loss of property and for improvements which they have made up to the present time.

ARTICLE II.
In consideration of the foregoing cession and relinquishment, the United States, the United States agree to the following stipulations:

There shall be paid and delivered to the said Delawares as soon as possible after the ratification of this Treaty, horned cattle, hogs and other stock, to the amount of two thousand dollars. For assistance in breaking up ground, and enclosing the same, one thousand dollars. For pay of a person to attend their mill for five years, and for repairs of the same for the said period, two thousand five hundred dollars. For support of a school for three years, one thousand five hundred dollars.

ARTICLE III.
There shall be paid to the said Delawares on their lands, in merchandise suitable to their wants, at the St. Louis cost prices, after the ratification of this treaty, the sum of five thousand dollars. There shall also be paid them the further sum of twelve thousand dollars, to be placed, at the request of said Indians, in the hands of the Superintendent of Indian Affairs at St. Louis, to be by him applied to the payment of debts which the said Delawares have acknowledged to be due by their nation agreeably to a schedule presented in Council, and which sum they wish paid to Menard & Valle of St. Genevieve, for the benefit of William Gillis and William Marshall--The sum of one thousand dollars is also paid them in merchandise and cash, the receipt of which latter sum (of thousand dollars) is hereby acknowledged.

ARTICLE IV.
To enable the Shawanoes who are parties to this Treaty, to remove immediately all the bands of their tribe who are settled in the Territory of Arkansas, to the lands assigned their nation on the Kansas River, the United States will pay them on the signing of this treaty, eight hundred dollars in cash, and four hundred dollars in clothing and horses, the receipt of which sums, amounting to twelve hundred dollars, is hereby acknowledged. And when they shall have removed to their lands, the further sum of five hundred dollars shall be paid them towards the expense of said removal. The United States will moreover furnish the said Shawanoes with provisions on their land for one year after their removal, which, together with the preceding stipulations, will be considered in full of all their claims and demands against the United States, of whatever nature.

ARTICLE V.
This treaty to be obligatory on the contracting parties when ratified by the President and Senate of the United States.

In testimony whereof, the commissioners aforesaid, and the undersigned chiefs, warriors, and counsellors aforesaid have hereunto subscribed their names and affixed their seals, at Castor Hill, in the county of St. Louis aforesaid, the first date above written.
[For the United State] William Clark, Frank J. Allen, Nathan Kouns

[For the Delaware] Me-shay-quo-wah, Na-ko-min, Ta-whe-la-len, Capt. Ketchum, Nonon-da-qomon.

Shawanoes: Wah-wai-lainue, his x mark, Le-lah-ow-che-ka, his x mark, Ki-ah-quah, his x mark, Pee-tah-lah-wah, his x mark, Shot Pouch, his x mark.

In presence of--Jas. Kemmly, secretary, Meriwether Lewis Clark, lieutenant, Sixth Infantry, Geo. Maguire, Indian Department, Sam L. McKenny, Pierre Menard, Alex'r Charles, Pem-saw-taw, Capt. Perry, his x mark, A. Shane, United States Interpreter, Geo. Catlin, his x mark, Pierre Cadue, his x mark, interpreter for Kickapoos and Pottawatamies. Castor Hill, St. Louis County, October 31st, 1832

By an understanding had between the undersigned Commissioners on the part of the United States, and certain chiefs of the Delaware Nation hereinafter named, and which was agreed to after the signing of the Treaty with said tribe, it was stipulated by the said Chiefs and agreed to by the Commissioners, than an annuity for life to Meshe Kowhay, or Patterson, first Chief of the Delawares, Tahwheelalen, or Ketchum, Captain of a band; and Natcoming, also Captain of a band, should be paid to each of them by the United States, of one hundred dollars. In testimony whereof, we have hereunto set our hands at Castor Hill, the date aforesaid. William Clark, Nathan Kouns. Frank J. Allen.

TREATY OF THE DELAWARE, SHAWNEE, KICKAPOO, POTTAWATOMIE, OTTAWA, WEA, PEORIA, AND KASKASKIA, OPENED 8 NOVEMBER 1833, FORT LEAVENWORTH [PRESENT KANSAS]

An Indian peace council, called by Commissioner Henry Ellsworth, began about 8

November 1833 at Fort Leavenworth in present Kansas. Some 100 Pawnee, Otoe, and Omaha met delegates from the immigrant nations--the Delaware, Shawnee, Kickapoo, Pottawatomie, Ottawa, Wea, Peoria, and Kaskaskia. The Kansa arrived on the 14th, and the Iowa and Sac on the 15th. Baptist missionaries Johnston Lykins and Jotham Meeker attended the 8 and 9 November meetings and Methodists Thomas Johnson and Jerome Berryman attended some council sessions. In the treaty, signed on 12 November by the nations present, it was agreed to cease all hostile acts, to take no private or personal revenge, and to allow other tribes to become parties to it.

Signers of 12 November included:
Delaware: Patterson, Nahko-mi, Nonon-do-quo-mon, Sha-wah-nock, Long House.

Shawnee: John Perry, William Perry, Wy-lah-lah-piah, Cornstalk, and four others.

Kickapoo: Pa-sha-cha-ha and Kennekuk.

Pottawatomie: Qui-qui-to, and No-sha-com.

Ottawa: Oquanoxa and Chi-cah (She-kauk).

Peoria and Kaskaskia: White Shield, Big Harry, Jim Peorias, and Le Coigne.

Wea: Quih-wah (Negro legs), Wah-quon-Pa (Swan), and three others.

Otoe: Ietan headed the Otoe signers.

Omaha: Wah-con-ray signed first for the Omaha.

Grand Pawnee: Sha-re-ta-rich.

Tappage Pawnee: Ska-lah-layshah-ro.

Republican Pawnee: Ah-sha-lay-ro-she.

Pawnee Loup: Pah-ka-le-koo.

Signers of 16 November included: Kansa: Nom-pa-wa-rah (White Plume) headed the list of Kansa signers, then Ky-he-ga-wa-ta-ninga (Fool Chief, and Ky-he-ga-wat-che-ha (Head Chief), and eight others. Sac and Fox also signed, but most of the delegates had departed by this date.

Witnesses, on the 12th, included all of Commissioner Henry Ellsworth's party, several army officers (Maj. Bennet Riley, Capt. William N. Wickliffe, Lieutenants Asa Richardson, John Nicholls, Robert Sevier, and John Conrad), Indian agents John Dougherty and Richard W. Cummins; Subagents A. S. Hughes, J. L. Bean, and F. W. Miller; post sutler A. C. Morgan; interpreters Anthony Shane, James Connor, Baptiste Peoria, Peter Cadue, and Louis La Chapelle. Agent Marston G. Clark and interpreter Clement Lessert were among the witnesses to the Kansa signers.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE STOCKBRIDGE AND MUNSEE, 3 SEPTEMBER 1839, STOCKBRIDGE, WISCONSIN TERRITORY

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 529-531.)
Sept. 3, 1839. 7 Stat., 580. 11 Stat., 577. Proclamation, May 16, 1840.

Articles of a treaty made at Stockbridge in the Territory of Wisconsin, on the third day of September in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine, between the United States of America, by their commissioner Albert Gallup, and the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes of Indians, who reside upon Lake Winnebago in the territory of Wisconsin.

ARTICLE 1.

The Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians (formerly of New York) hereby cede and relinquish to the United States, the east half of the tract of forty-six thousand and eighty acres of land, which was laid off for their use, on the east side of Lake Winnebago, in pursuance of the treaty made by George B. Porter commissioner on the part of the United States, and the Menominee nation of Indians, on the twenty-seventh day of October eighteen hundred and thirty-two. The said east half hereby ceded, to contain twenty-three thousand and forty acres of land; to be of equal width at the north and south ends, and to be divided from the west half of said tract of forty-six thousand and eighty acres, by a line to be run parallel to the east line of said tract. The United States to pay therefor, one dollar per acre at the time and in the manner hereinafter provided.

ARTICLE 2.

Whereas a portion of said tribes, according to a census or roll taken, and hereunto annexed, are desirous to remove west and the others to remain where they now are; and whereas the just proportion of the emigrating party in the whole tract of forty six thousand and eighty acres is eight thousand seven hundred and sixty-seven and three-fourths acres of land, it is agreed that the United States to pay to the said emigrating party, the sum of eight thousand seven hundred and sixty-seven dollars and seventy-five cents, as a full compensation for all their interest in the lands held by the party who remain, as well as in the lands hereby ceded to the United States.

ARTICLE 3.

Whereas the improvements of the emigrating party are all on that part of the original tract which is reserved and still held by the party who remain in Stockbridge, and it is but equitable that those who remain should pay those who emigrate for such improvements; it is agreed that the United States shall pay to the emigrating party the sum of three thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine dollars and thirty cents, the appraised value of said improvements; and it is hereby agreed and expressly understood, that the monies payable to the emigrating party shall be distributed among the heads of families according to the schedule hereunto annexed, the whole amount to be paid to the emigrating party under this and the preceding article being the sum of twelve thousand six hundred and forty-seven dollars and five cents.

ARTICLE 4.

The balance of the consideration money for the lands hereby ceded, (after deducting the sums mentioned in the second and third articles,) amounting to the sum of ten thousand three hundred and ninety-two dollars and ninety-five cents, is to be paid to, and invested for the benefit of such of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes of Indians (numbering three hundred and forty-two souls) as remain at their present place of residence at Stockbridge on the east side of Winnebago lake, as follows. Six thousand dollars of said sum to be invested by the United States in public stocks at an interest of not less than five per cent. per annum as a permanent school fund; the interest of which shall be paid annually to the sachem and counsellors of their tribes, or such other person as they may appoint to receive the same, whose receipt shall be a sufficient voucher therefor; and the balance thereof amounting to four thousand three hundred and ninety-two dollars and ninety-five cents, shall be paid to the said sachem and counsellors, or to such person as they may appoint to receive the same, whose receipt shall be a sufficient voucher therefor.

ARTICLE 5.
The monies herein secured to be paid by the United States to the Stockbridge and Munsee tribes amounting in all to twenty-three thousand and forty dollars, are to be paid in manner aforesaid, in one year from the date hereof, or sooner if practicable.

ARTICLE 6.
It is agreed that an exploring party not exceeding three in number may visit the country west, if the Indians shall consider it necessary, and that whenever those who are desirous of emigrating shall signify their wish to that effect, the United States will defray the expenses of their removal west of the Mississippi and furnish them with subsistence for one year after their arrival at their new homes. The expenses of the exploring party to be borne by the emigrants.

ARTICLE 7.
Whereas there are certain unliquidated claims and accounts existing between the emigrating party, and those who remain where they now are, which it is now impossible to liquidate and adjust; it is hereby agreed that the same shall be submitted to the agent of the United States who shall be appointed to make the payments under this treaty, and that his decision shall be final thereon.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals this third day of September in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-nine.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE DELAWARE AND WYANDOT, 14 DECEMBER 1843, [PRESENT KANSAS]

9 Stat. 337. Ratified July 25, 1848
(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, p. 574-582.)

With the proviso: "That the Wyandot Nation shall take no better right or interest in and to the said lands than is now vested in the Delaware Nation of Indians."

Whereas from a long and intimate acquaintance, and the ardent friendship which has for a great many years existed between the Delawares and the Wyandots, and from a mutual desire that the same feeling shall continue and be more strengthened by becoming near neighbors to each other; therefore the said parties, the Delawares on one side, and the Wyandots on the other, in full council assembled, have agreed, and do agree, to the following stipulations, to wit:--

ARTICLE 1.
The Delaware nation of Indians, residing between the Missouri and Kansas Rivers, being very anxious to have their uncles, the Wyandots [Emphasis added.-Editor], to settle and reside near them, do hereby donate, grant and quitclaim forever, to the Wyandot nation, three sections of land, containing six hundred and forty acres each, lying and being situated at the point of the junction of the Missouri and Kansas Rivers.

ARTICLE 2.

The Delaware chiefs, for themselves, and by the unanimous consent of their people; do hereby cede, grant, quitclaim to the Wyandot nation and their heirs forever, thirty-six sections of land, each containing six hundred and forty acres, situated between the aforesaid Missouri and Kansas rivers, and adjoining on the west the aforesaid three donated sections, making in all thirty-nine sections of land, bounded as follows, viz.: Commencing at the point at the junction of the aforesaid Missouri and Kansas rivers, running west along the Kansas river sufficiently far to include the aforesaid thirty-nine sections; thence running north to the Missouri river; thence down the said river with its meanders to the place of beginning; to be surveyed in as near a square form as the rivers and territory ceded will admit of.

ARTICLE 3.
In consideration of the forgoing donation and cession of their land, the Wyandot chiefs bind themselves, successors in office, and their people to pay to the Delaware nation of Indians, forty-six thousand and eighty dollars, as follows, viz.: six thousand and eighty dollars to be paid the year eighteen hundred and forty-four, and four thousand dollars annually thereafter for ten years.

ARTICLE 4.
It is hereby distinctly understood, between the contracting parties, that the aforesaid agreement shall not be binding or obligatory until the President of the United States shall have approved the same and caused it to be recorded in the War Department.

In testimony whereof, we, the chiefs and headmen of the Delaware nation, and the chiefs and headmen of the Wyandot nation, have, this fourteenth day of December, eighteen hundred and forty-three, set our signatures.

Delaware Chiefs: Nah-koo-mer, Captain Ketchum, Captain Suavec, Jackenduthen, San-kock-sa, Cock-i-to-wa, Sa-sar-si-tona, Nah-que-non or Nan-que-non.

Wyandots: Henry Jacquis, James Washington, Matthew Peacock, James Bigtree, George

Armstrong, Tan-roo-mie, T. A. Hicks.

Signed in open council in presence of Jonathan Phillips, Sub-agent for the Wyandots. Richard W. Cummins, Indian Agent, James M. Simpson, Charles Graham, Joel Walker, Secretary of the Wyandott Council. Henry Tiblow, Indian Interpreter.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE POTOWAUTOMIE NATION , 17 JUNE 1846, POTOWAUTOMIE CREEK, NEAR THE OSAGE RIVER, SOUTH AND WEST OF MISSOURI

June 5 and 17, 1846. 9 Stat., 853. Ratified. July 22, 1846. Proclaimed, July 23, 1846
Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties) . Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 558-560.

ARTICLE 4.
The United States agree to grant to the said united tribes of Indians possession and title to a tract or parcel of land containing five hundred and seventy-six thousand acres, being thirty miles square, and being the eastern part of the lands ceded to the United States by the Kansas tribe or Indians, by treaty concluded on the 14th day of January, and ratified on the 15th of April of the present year, lying adjoining the Shawnees on the south, and the Delawares and Shawnees on the east, on both sides of the Kansas River, and to guarantee the full and complete possession of the same to the Pottowautomie Nation, parties to this treaty, as their land and home forever; for which they are to pay to the United States the sum of eighty-seven thousand dollars, to be deducted from the gross sum promised to them in the 3d article of this treaty.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE STOCKBRIDGE , 24 NOVEMBER 1848, STOCKBRIDGE, WISCONSIN

Nov. 24, 1848. 9 Stat., 955. Ratified Mar. 1, 1849.
(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties) . Compiled and edited by Charles J.

Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 574-582.)

Articles of agreement and treaty made and concluded at Stockbridge, in the State of Wisconsin, on the 24th day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, by and between the undersigned, acting commissioners on the part of the United States of America, and the Stockbridge tribe of Indians.

WHEREAS by an act of Congress entitled “An act for the relief of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians, in the Territory of Wisconsin,” approved on the third day of March, A. D. 1843, it was provided that the township of land on the east side of Winnebago Lake, secured to said tribe by the treaty with the Menomonee Indians of February 8th, 1831, as amended by the Senate of the United States, and not heretofore ceded by said tribe to the United States, should be divided and allotted among the individual members of said tribe, by commissioners to be elected for that purpose, who were to make report of such division and allotment, and thereupon the persons composing said tribe were to become citizens of the United States.

And whereas a portion of said tribe refused to recognize the validity of said act of Congress, or the proceedings which were had under it, or to be governed by its provisions, and upon their petition a subsequent act was passed by the Congress of the United States, on the 6th day of August, 1846, repealing the said act of March 3d, 1843, and providing, among other things, that such of said tribe as should enroll themselves with the subagent of Indians affairs at Green Bay, should be and remain citizens of the United States, and the residue of said tribe were restored to their ancient form of government as an Indian tribe. It was also provided that the said township of land should be divided into two districts, one of which was to be known as the “Indian district,” the other as the “citizen district;” the former to be held in common by the party who did not desire citizenship, and the latter to be divided and allotted among such as were citizens and desired to remain so.

And whereas it has been found impracticable to carry into full effect the provisions of the act of August 6th, 1846, by dividing the said township of land in the manner specified in said act, without infringing upon private rights acquired in good faith under the act of 1843 hereinbefore referred to, with a view of relieving both the Indian and citizen parties of said Stockbridge tribe of Indians from their present embarrassments, and to secure to each their just rights, articles of agreement and compromise have been entered into, as follows:

ARTICLE 1.
The said Stockbridge tribe of Indians renounce any participation in any of the benefits or privileges granted or conferred by the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of the Stockbridge tribe of Indians, in the Territory of Wisconsin," approved March 3, 1843, and relinquish all rights secured by said act; and they do hereby acknowledge and declare themselves to be under the protection and guardianship of the United States, as other Indian tribes.

ARTICLE 2.
That no misunderstanding may exist, now or hereafter, in determining who compose said tribe and are parties hereto, it is agreed that a roll or census shall be taken and appended to this agreement, and in like manner taken annually hereafter, and returned to the Secretary of the War Department of the United States, containing the names of all such as are parties hereto, and to be known and recognized as the Stockbridge tribe of Indians, who shall each be entitled to their due proportion of the benefits to be derived from the provisions made for their tribe by this and former agreements; and whenever any of them shall separate themselves from said tribe, or abandon the country which may be selected for their future home, the share or portion of such shall cease, and they shall forfeit all claims to be recognized as members of said tribe.

ARTICLE 3.
The said Stockbridge tribe of Indians hereby sell and relenquish to the United States the township of land on the east side of Lake Winnebago, (granted and secured to said tribe by the treaty with the Menomonee tribe of Indians of February 8, 1831, as amended by the resolution of the Senate of the United States,) and situated in the State of Wisconsin.

ARTICLE 4.
The said township of land shall be surveyed into lots, in conformity with the plan adopted by the commissioners elected under the act of March 3, 1843, and such of said lands as were allotted by said commissioners to members of said tribe who have become citizens of the United States (a schedule of which is hereunto annexed) are hereby confirmed to such individuals respectively, and patents therefor shall be issued by the United States. The residue of said lands belonging to the United States shall be brought into market but shall not be sold at less than the appraised value, unless the Senate of the United States shall otherwise determine.

ARTICLE 5.

In consideration of the cession and relinquishment hereinbefore made by the said Stockbridge tribe of Indians, it is agreed that the United States shall pay to said tribe, within six months after the ratification of this agreement, the sum of sixteen thousand five hundred dollars, to enable them to settle their affairs, obtain necessaries, and make provision for establishing themselves in a new home.

ARTICLE 6.
The United States shall also pay to said tribe, within six months after the ratification of this agreement, the sum of fourteen thousand five hundred and four dollars and eighty-five cents, being the appraised value of their improvements upon the lands herein ceded and relinquished to the United States, and to be paid to the individuals claiming said improvements according to the schedule and assessment herewith transmitted.

ARTICLE 7.
It is further stipulated and agreed that the said Stockbridge tribe may remain upon the lands they now occupy for one year after the ratification of this agreement, and that they will remove to the country set apart for them, or such other west of the Mississippi River as they may be able to secure, where all their treaty stipulations with the Government shall be carried into effect.

ARTICLE 8.
Whenever the said Stockbridge tribe shall signify their wish to emigrate, the United States will defray the expenses of their removal west of the Mississippi and furnish them with subsistence for one year after their arrival at their new home.

ARTICLE 9.
It is further stipulated and agreed, that, for the purpose of making provision for the rising generation of said tribe, the sum of sixteen thousand five hundred dollars shall be invested by the United States in stock, bearing an interest of not less than five per cent. per annum, the interest of which shall be paid annually to said tribe, as other annuities are paid by the United States.

ARTICLE 10.
It is agreed that nothing herein shall prevent a survey of said lands, at any time after the ratification of this agreement, and that said tribe shall commit no waste or do unnecessary damage upon the premises occupied by them

ARTICLE 11.
The United States will pay the expenses incurred by the sachem and head-men, amounting to three thousand dollars, in attending to the business of said tribe since the year 1843.

ARTICLE 12.
This agreement to be binding and obligatory upon the contracting parties from and after its ratification by the Government of the United States.

In witness whereof, the said commissioners, and the sachem, councillors, and headmen of said tribe, have hereunto set their hands and seals, the day and year above written.

SUPPLEMENTAL ARTICLE.

Whereas the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians consider that they have a claim against the United States for indemnity for certain lands on White River in the State of Indiana, and for certain other lands in the State of Wisconsin, which they allege they have been deprived of by treaties entered into with the Miamies and Delawares, or to the lands claimed by them in Indiana, and with the Menomonees and Winnebagoes, or to the lands in Wisconsin, without their consent; and whereas the said Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, by their chiefs and agents, have continued to prosecute their said claims during the last twenty years at their own expense, except the sum of three thousand dollars paid them in 1821; and whereas it is desirable that all ground of discontent on the part of said Indians shall be removed, the United States do further stipulate, in consideration of the relinquishment by them of said claims , and all other, except as provided in this treaty, to pay the sachems or chiefs of said Indians, on the ratification of this article by them, with the assent of their people, the sum of five thousand dollars, and the further sum of twenty thousand dollars, to be paid in ten annual instalments, to commence when the said Indians shall have selected and removed to their new homes, as contemplated by the seventh article of this treaty.

The President of the United States, within two years from the ratification of this treaty, shall procure for the use of said Stockbridge Indians a quantity of land west of the Mississippi River, upon which they shall reside, not less than seventy-two sections, said Indians to be consulted as to the location of said land, and to be holden by the same tenure as other Indian lands.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE WYANDOT, 1 APRIL 1850, WASHINGTON

Apr. 1, 1850. 9 Stat., 987. Ratified Sept. 24, 1850. Proclaimed Sept. 30, 1850.) (Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties). Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 587-588.) Articles of a convention concluded in the city of Washington, this first day of April, on thousand eight hundred and fifty, by and between Ardavan S. Loughery, commissioner especially appointed by the President of the United States, and the undersigned head chief and deputies of the Wyandot tribe of Indians, duly authorized and empowered to act for their tribe.

WHEREAS, By the treaty of March 17, 1842, between the United States and the Wyandot nation of Indians, then chiefly residing within the limits of the State of Ohio, the said nation of Indians agreed to sell and transfer, and did thereby sell and transfer, to the United States their reservations of land, one hundred and nine thousand acres of which was in the State of Ohio, and Six thousand acres were in the State of Michigan, and to remove to the west of the Mississippi River: And whereas, among other stipulations it was agreed that the United States should convey to said Indians a tract of country for their permanent settlement in the Indian territory west of the Mississippi River, to contain one hundred an [and] forty-eight thousand acres of land: And whereas, The said Indians never did receive the said one hundred and forty-eight thousand acres of land from the United States, but were forced to purchase lands from the Delaware nation of Indians, which purchase was agreed to and ratified by the United States: Now, in order to settle the claim of the Wyandot tribe of Indians to said land, the United States having appointed A. S.

Loughery a commissioner on their part, who, with the undersigned delegates from the Wyandot nation, have agreed to the following treaty:

ARTICLE 1.
The United States, in consideration that the Wyandot nation of Indians shall and do hereby release, relinquish, and give up all claim to the said one hundred and forty-eight thousand acres of land agreed to be assigned and given to them by the treaty of March 17,1842, hereby stipulate and agree to pay to the said Wyandot tribe of Indians the sum of one hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars, being at and after the rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, in the manner and form following, to wit: One hundred thousand dollars to be invested in United States Stocks, bearing five per cent. interest per annum, which interest shall be paid to them at the time and in the manner in which their present annuities are paid—and for the purpose of enabling the Wyandot Indians to pay and extinguish all their just debts, as well what is now due to the Delawares for the purchase of their lands as to others, the balance of said sum, being the sum of eighty-five thousand dollars, shall be paid to the Wyandot nation or on their drafts, specifically describing for what the drafts are given.

ARTICLE 2.
All the reasonable expenses attending the negotiation of this treaty, including a reasonable allowance for the expenses of the delegation, signers hereto, in coming to Washington, whilst here on the business connected herewith, and in returning to their nation, shall be defrayed by the United States.
In testimony whereof the said commissioners on the part of the United States, and the said head chief and deputies, delegates on the part of the Wyandot Tribe or nation of Indians, have hereunto set their hands, at the city of Washington, D. C., this first day of April in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and fifty.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DELAWARE, 6 MAY 1854, WASHINGTON. [D. C.]

(Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties. Vol. II (Treaties) . Compiled and edited by Charles J. Kappler. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1904, pp. 614-618.)
May 6, 1854. 10 Stats, 1048. Ratified July 11, 1854. Proclaimed July 17, 1854.

Articles of agreement and convention made and concluded at the city of Washington this sixth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, by George W. Manypenny, as commissioner on the part of the United States, and the following-named delegates of the Delaware tribe of Indians, viz: Sarcoxey; Ne-cond-he-cond; Kock-ka-to-wha; Qua-cor-now-ha, or James Secondyne; Ne-sha-pa-na-cumin, or Charles Journeycake; Que-sha-to-wha, or John Ketchum; Pondoxy, or George Bullet; Kock-kock-quas, or James Ketchum; Ah-lah-a-chick, or James Conner, they being thereto duly authorized by said tribe.

Article 1.
The Delaware tribe of Indians hereby cede, relinquish, and quit-claim to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to their country lying west of the State of Missouri, and situate in the fork of the Missouri and Kansas Rivers, which is described in the article supplementary to the treaty of October third, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, concluded, in part, on the twenty-fourth September, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine, at Council Camp, on James' Fork of White River, in the State of Missouri; and finally concluded at Council Camp, in the fork of the Kansas and Missouri Rivers, on the nineteenth October, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine; and also their right, title, and interest in and to the "outlet" mentioned and described in said supplementary article, excepting that portion of said country sold to the Wyandot tribe of Indians, by instrument sanctioned by act of Congress approved July twenty-fifth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, and also excepting that part of said country lying east and south of a line beginning at a point on the line between the land of the Delawares and the half-breed Kanzas, forty miles, in a direct line, west of the boundary between the Delawares and the Wyandots, thence north ten miles, thence in an easterly course to a point on the south bank of Big Island Creek, which shall also be on the bank of the Missouri River where the usual high-water line of said creek intersects the high water line of said river.

ARTICLE 2.
The United States hereby agree to have the ceded country (excepting the said "outlet") surveyed, as soon as it can be conveniently done, in the same manner that the public lands are surveyed--such survey to be commenced and prosecuted as the President of the United States may deem best. And the President will, so soon as the whole or any portion of said lands are surveyed, proceed to offer such surveyed lands for sale, at public auction, in such quantities as he may deem proper, being governed in all respects, in conducting such sales, by the laws of the United States respecting the sales of public lands; and such of the lands as may not be sold at the public sales, shall thereafter be subject to private entry, in the same manner that private entries are made of United States lands; and any, or all, of such lands as remain unsold, after being three years subject to private entry, at the minimum Government price, may, by act of Congress, be graduated and reduced in price, until all said lands are sold; regard being had in such graduation and reduction to the interests of the Delawares, and also to the speedy settlement of the country.

ARTICLE 3.
The United States agree to pay to the Delaware tribe of Indians the sum of ten thousand dollars; and, in consideration thereof, the Delaware tribe of Indians hereby cede, release, and quit-claim to the United States, the said tract of country hereinbefore described as the "outlet." And as a further and full compensation for the cession made by the first article, the United States agree to pay to said tribe all the monies received from the sales of the lands provided to be surveyed in the preceding article, after deducting therefrom the cost of surveying, managing, and selling the same

ARTICLE 4.
The Delaware Indians have now, by treaty stipulation, the following permanent annuities, to wit: One thousand dollars per fourth article of the treaty of third August, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five. Five hundred dollars, per third article of the treaty of thirtieth of September, one thousand eight hundred and nine. Four thousand dollars per fifth article of the treaty of third October, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen. One thousand dollars per supplemental treaty of twenty-fourth September, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine. One hundred dollars for salt annuity, per third article of the treaty of June seventh, one thousand eight hundred and three. Nine hundred and forty dollars, for blacksmith annuity, per sixth article of the treaty of third October, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen. All of which several permanent annuities they hereby relinquish and forever absolve the United States from the further payment thereof; in consideration whereof the United States agree to pay to them, under the direction of the President, the sum of one hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars, as follows: seventy-four thousand dollars in the month of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, and seventy-four thousand dollars in the month of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five. The object of converting the permanent annuities into these two payments being to aid the Delawares in making improvements on their present farms, and opening new ones on the land reserved, building houses, buying necessary household furniture, stock, and farming-utensils, and such other articles as may be necessary to their comfort. [Emphasis added]

ARTICLE 5.
It is agreed that the sum of forty-six thousand and eighty dollars, being the value of the thirty-six sections of land set apart for school purposes by the supplemental treaty of one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine, remain for the present at five per cent, interest, as stipulated by the resolution of the Senate of the nineteenth January, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight.

ARTICLE 6
The Delawares feel now, as heretofore, grateful to their old chiefs for their long and faithful services. In former treaties, when their means were scanty, they provided, by small life-annuities, for the wants of these chiefs, some of whom are now receiving them. These chiefs are poor, and the Delawares believe it is their duty to keep them from want in the old and declining age. It is the wish of the Delawares, and hereby stipulated and agreed, that the sum of ten thousand dollars, the amount provided in the third article as a consideration for the "outlet," shall be paid to their five chiefs, to wit: Captain Ketchum, Sarkoxey, Segondyne, Neconhecond, and Kock-ka-to-wha, in equal shares of two thousand dollars each. to be paid as follows: to each of said chiefs, annually, the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, until the whole sum is paid: Provided, That if any one or more of said chiefs die before the whole or any part of the sum is paid, the annual payments remaining to his share shall be paid to his male children, and, in default of male heirs, then to the legal representatives of such deceased chief or chiefs; and it is understood that the small life-annuities stipulated by former treaties, shall be paid as directed by such treaties.

ARTICLE 7.
It is expected that the amount of moneys arising from the sales herein provided for will be greater than the Delawares will need to meet their current wants; and as it is their duty, and their desire also, to create a permanent fund for the benefit of the Delaware people, it is agreed that all the money not necessary for the reasonable wants of the people, shall from time to time be invested by the President of the United States, in safe and profitable stocks, the principal to remain unimpaired, and the interest to be applied annually for the civilization, education, and religious culture of the Delaware people and such other objects of a beneficial character, as in his judgment, are proper and necessary

ARTICLE 8.
As the annual receipts from the sales of the lands can not now be determined, it is agreed that the whole subject be referred to the judgment of the President, who may, from time to time, prescribe how much of the net proceeds of said sales shall be paid out to the Delaware people, and the mode and manner of such payment, also how much shall be invested, and in distributing the funds to the people, due regard and encouragement shall be given to that portion of the Delawares who are competent to manage their own affairs, and who know and appreciate the value of money; but Congress may, at any time, and from time to time, by law, make such rules and regulations in relation to the funds arising from the sale of of said lands, and the application thereof for the benefit and improvement of the Delaware people, as may in the wisdom of that body, seem just and proper.

ARTICLE 9.
The debts of Indians, contracted in their private dealings as individuals, whether to traders or otherwise, shall not be paid from the general fun.

ARTICLE 10.
The Delawares promise to renew their efforts to suppress the introduction and the use of ardent spirits in their country and among their people, and to encourage industry, integrity, and virtue, so that every one may become civilized, [Emphasis added], and, as many are now, competent to manage their business affairs; but should some of them unfortunately continue to refuse to labor, and remain or become dissipated and worthless, it shall be discretionary with the President to give such direction to the portion of funds, from time to time, due to such persons, as will prevent them from squandering the same, and secure the benefit thereof to their families.

ARTICLE 11.
At any time hereafter, when the Delawares desire it, and at their request and expense, the President may cause the country reserved for their permanent home to be surveyed in the same manner as the ceded country is surveyed, and may assign such portion to each person or family as shall be designated by the principal men of the tribe: Provided, such assignment shall be uniform.

ARTICLE 12.
In the settlement of the country adjacent to the Delaware reservation, roads and highways will become necessary, and it is agreed that all roads and highways laid out by authority of law, shall have a right of way through the reserved lands, on the same terms that the law provides for their location through lands of citizens of the United States; and railroad companies, when the lines of their roads necessarily pass through the said reservation, shall have the right of way, on payment of a just compensation therefor in money

ARTICLE 13.

The Christian [Munsee] Indians live in the country herein ceded, and have some improvements. They desire to remain where they are, and the Delawares are willing, provided the Christian Indians can pay them for the land. It is therefore agreed that there shall be confirmed by patent to the said Christian Indians, subject to such restrictions as Congress may provide, a quantity of land equal to four sections, to be selected in a body from the surveyed lands, and to include their present improvements: Provided, The said Christian Indians, or the United States for them, pay to the Secretary of the Interior for the use of the Delaware Indians, within one year from the date of the ratification of this treaty, the sum of two dollars and fifty cents per acre therefor: And provided further, That the provisions of article twelve, in relation to roads, highways, and railroads, shall be applicable to the land thus granted to the Christian Indians

ARTICLE 14.

The Delawares acknowledge their dependence on the Government of the United States, and invoke its protection and care. They desire to be protected from depredations and injuries of every kind, and to live at peace with all the Indian tribes; and they promise to abstain from war, and to commit no depredations on either citizens or Indians; and if, unhappily, any difficulty should arise, they will at all times, as far as they are able, comply with the law in such cases made and provided, as they will expect to be protected and their rights vindicated by it, when they are injured.

ARTICLE 15.

A primary object of this instrument being to advance the interest and welfare of the Delaware people, it is agreed, that if it prove insufficient to effect these ends, from causes which cannot now be foreseen, Congress may hereafter make such further provision, by law, not inconsistent herewith, as experience may prove to be necessary to promote the interests, peace, and happiness of the Delaware people

ARTICLE 16.

It is agreed by the parties that the provisions of the act of Congress, approved third of March, one thousand eight hundred and seven, in relation to lands ceded to the United States, shall, so far as applicable, be extended to the lands herein ceded.

ARTICLE 17.

It is further stipulated, that should the Senate of the United States reject the thirteenth article hereof, such rejection shall in no wise affect the validity of the other articles.

ARTICLE 18.
This instrument shall be obligatory on the contracting parties as soon as the same shall be ratified by the President, and the Senate, of the United States.
In testimony whereof the said George W. Manypenny, commissioner as aforesaid, and the said delegates of the Delaware tribe of Indians, have hereunto set their hands and seals, at the place and on the day and year hereinbefore written.
[For the United States] George W. Manypenny, Commissioner.
[Delaware] Sarcoxey, Ne-con-he-cond, Kock-ka-to-wha, Qua-cor-now-ha, or James Segondyne, Ne-sha-pa-na-cumin, or Charles Journeycake. Que-sha-to-wha, or John Ketchem, Pondoxy, or George Bullet, Kock-kock-quas, or James Ketchem. Ah-la-a-chick, or James Conner.
Executed in the presence of: Thos. Johnson. Charles Calvert. Douglas H. Cooper. William B. Waugh. Henry Beard. B. F. Robinson, Indian agent. Henry Tiblow, United States interpreter.

This 1,295-page-book is really remarkable and is essential to anyone working or Kansas history and the history of the Westward Movement. It is well documented with end-notes to every entry. Unfortunately, if there are several items of documentation it is difficult to determine which goes with which piece of text. For that reason, for some of the entries I have used from Barry, I have simply indicated the page from which it was taken from The Beginning of the West rather than to list all the original sources. In the view of the writer of the Foreword, Dale L. Morgan of the Bancroft Library, "[In] The Beginning of the West, we have a book to exemplify and to document the superb breadth and depth of the Kansas story, seen in the larger context. There cannot be the slightest doubt that it must influence all future scholarship to the American West."

Philadelphia: The Swedish Colonial Society, ed. and trans. Amandus Johnson. Philadelphia: The Swedish Colonial Society, 1925. (Weslager comment: "Johnson's English translation gives faithful descriptions of how the Delawares lived: their clothing, housing, ornaments, food, hunting, and fishing practices, and other customs.")

Lassieur, Allison. The Delaware People. A 24 pages, full color, hard-back book. This book is another in a series of 30 books published by Bridgestone Books about American Indian people. Each book features a particular Indian Tribe. The book was written by author Allison Lassieur for school age children who are learning for the first time about the American Indian. This book will answer most questions a child would have about the historical clothing, foods, homes and language of the Delaware Tribe. It is presented in a simple topical way and the pictures even tell the story. A child could read it himself or a teacher could read it aloud to her class. Photographs of members of the Delaware Tribe of Indians are featured in the book. The Delaware People provides a suggested project a child could do and directions on how to acquire information for those who want to further study the Delaware people.

In volume 19, page 520, another important entry is recorded in 1697 that states the Delawares were then tributary to the Seneca (one of the Five Nations) and were also subjects of the Susquehannocks, or Minquas, who lived on the Susquehanna River.") Mitchell, S. H. The Indian Chief, Journeycake. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society, 1895. (Weslager: "A biased and often erroneous account.") Reprint edition by Helen York Rose. Ozark, MO: Dogwood Printing, 1989. Available at the Ohio Genealogical Society Library: USA 973 NA695i. The original has 108 pages. I obtained it on an interlibrary loan from the Wisconsin State Library. The author is a Baptist minister and he is writing principally about the Baptist minister, Charles Journey. Most of his material is from secondary sources, but there are a few tidbits about the Journeycake family that make reading worth while. Also, there are six photographs that add value to the book: of Charles Journeycake's home, his church, Charles Journeycake as a younger man and as an older man, his mother Sally) Castelman) Journeycake, and his wife, Jane (Sosha/Socia) Journeycake. Those interest in the Baptist Church may find the book on interest. Although Reverend Mitchell writes fairly of Indian history and the Journeycake's, it is nevertheless written by a white man from a slightly condescending point of view.
